Their Lordships do not, therefore, propose to embark upon the consideration of what the effect of the deed of gift in favour of Thulja Boyee might be correctly determined to be, but as some misapprehension appears to exist as to the effect of certain decisions of the Board, and notably one in Suraimoni v. Rabi Nath Ojha (1) their Lordships think it desirable to remove this doubt, lest error should creep into the administration of the law in India with regard to the rights of a Hindu widow. In the case referred to, Surajmoni v. Rabi Nath Ojha (1), when originally heard before the High Court it had been stated that under the Hindu Law in the case of a gift of immoveable property to a Hindu widow, she had no power to alienate unless such power was expressly conferred. The decision of this Board did no more than establish that that proposition was not accurate, and that it was possible by the use of words of sufficient amplitude to convey in the terms of the gift itself the fullest rights of ownership, including, of course, the power to alienate, which the High Court had thought required to be added by express declaration. In that case it is true that there is some comparison drawn between the gift to a widow and a gift to a person not under disability, but that was not the foundation of the decision, which depended entirely upon the wide meaning attributed to the words in which the gift to the widow was clothed. More recent decisions of this Board [Sasiman Choudhuran v. Shib Narain Chowdhury (14) and Bhuidas Shivdas v. Bai Gulab (2)] do nothing but repeat this same proposition in other words. The importance of preventing confusion due to the contrasting of different phrases used in distinct cases to express the same idea has led their Lordships to make this explanation, but the points argued as to the effect of the gift in the present case are not now open to consideration, for in their Lordship's opinion the decision given on the 13th July 1897, by the High Court at Madras is a clear and complete determination as between the parties to that suit and those claiming under them, which the present litigants cannot dispute.

It is urged on behalf of the respondents that the judgment cannot be so regarded because it arose out of proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act, 1894 and for the purpose of their arguments they rely upon the case of Rangoon Botatoung Company Limited v. Collector of Rangoon (11). There appears to be some misapprehension in the Courts in India as to the effect of this authority which it is desirable should be removed.

Under the Land Acquisition Act there are two perfectly separate and distinct forms of procedure contemplated. The first is that necessary for fixing the amount of the compensation and this is described as being an award. By section 54 an appeal from that award or any part of the award is given to the High Court. The case in Rangoon Botatoung Company Limited v. Collector of Rangoon (11) decided that in those circumstances the appeal so given was the only one open to the parties and that even if appealed against, the award still retained its characteristics and was incapable of further appeal. The argument which succeeded in that case emphasizes the distinction between an award and a decree, and the judgment mentions this in terms by stating that the appellants, although admitted to the High Court, could not have the right to carry an award made under an arbitration as to the value of land taken for public purposes up to this Board as if it were a decree of the High Court made in course of its original jurisdiction. The manifest inconvenience that would attend any such proceeding is also pointed out, but neither this judgment nor any other judgment of this Board affects the question of an appeal on the totally different proceedings that arise when there is a dispute as between the persons claiming compensation involving, as it does in this case, a difficult question of title. When once the award as to the amount has become final, all questions as to fixing of compensation are then at an end; the duty of the Collector in case of dispute as to the relative rights of the persons together entitled to the money is to place the money under the control of the Court, and the parties then can proceed to litigate in the ordinary way to determine what their right and title to the property may be. That is exactly what occurred in the present case. How the proceedings were commenced is a matter that is not material provided that they were instituted in the manner that gave the Court jurisdiction, for they ended in a decree made by the High Court and appealable to this Board. It is true that in the case of Trinagari Dassi v. Krishna Lal Day (15) following an earlier case, Balaram Bhramanatar Ray v. Sham Sunder Narendra (6) it was decided that an order under section 32 may appropriately be deemed as an integral part of the award made by the Court, but their Lordships regard this as a misapprehension as to the meaning of the award. The award as constituted by Statute is nothing but an award which states the area of the land, the compensation to be allowed and the apportionment among the persons interested in the land of whose claim the Collector has information, meaning thereby people whose interests are not in dispute, but from the moment when the sum has been deposited in Court under section 31 (2) the functions of the award have ceased; and all that is left is a dispute between interested people as to the extent of their interest. Such dispute forms no part of the award, and it would indeed be strange if a controversy between two people as to the nature of their respective interests in a piece of land should enjoy certain rights of appeal which would be wholly taken away when the piece of land was represented by a sum of money paid into Court. There has in the present case been a clear decision upon the very point now in dispute which cannot be re-opened. The High Court appear only to have regarded the matter as concluded to the extent of the compensation money, but that is not the true view of what occurred, for as pointed out in Badar Bee v. Habib Merican Noordin (17), it is not competent for the Court, in the case of the same question arising between the same parties, to review a previous decision, no longer open to appeal, given by another Court having jurisdiction to try the second case. If the decision was wrong, it ought to have been appealed from in due time. Nor in such circumstances can the interested parties be heard to say that the value of the subject-matter on which the former decision was pronounced was comparatively so trifling that it was not worth their while to appeal from it. If such a plea were admissible, there would be no finality in litigation. The importance of a judicial decision is not to be measured by the pecuniary value of the particular item in dispute. It has been suggested that the decision was not in a former suit, but whether this were so or not makes no difference, for it has been recently pointed out by this Board in George Henry Hook v. Administrator General of Bengal (7), that the principle which prevents the same case being twice litigated is of general application, and is not limited by the specific words of the Code in this respect. Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that the decree appealed from be reversed, and the decree of the Subordinate Judge restored with costs here and in the Courts below.

bhisi from entering by the door X in the map Exhibit 20 and thence passing over the defendant's back yard and entering the plaintiffs' privy at point A is right.

Defendant's house adjoins the plaintiffs' house to the west. There is a lane to the west of the defendant's house and it is admitted that the plaintiffs have a right of way over the defendant's back yard, so that the sweeper may have access to the plaintiffs' privy. The defendant bought his house in 1915. Until then the sweeper had passed through the door X but in 1916 the defendant made certain alterations. He opened a door at the southern end of his wall and after reserving a passage of about three feet he built a wall to the north, so as to reserve for himself the rest of the back-yard. It cannot be said that it would be in any way more inconvenient for the sweeper to pass along this passage to the plaintiffs' privy instead of going in by the door X as he used to do, but the plaintiffs contend that they are entitled to stand on their strict right, that the right of way from the door X to their privy having once been acquired, the servient owner cannot substitute any other way between the lane and the plaintiffs' privy. The Trial Judge appears to have admitted this proposition of law to be correct, but considered that the plaintiffs were agreeable to the new arrangement when he visited the spot. Because the second plaintiff had adduced no evidence to show that the defendant had made the alterations against his will or without his consent, the learned Judge appears to have held that there was acquiescence on the part of the plaintiffs, and that it was owing to other disputes having arisen between the parties relating to the ownership of the party wall and certain windows in the plaintiffs' house that the plaintiffs began to object to the obstruction at door X. If an issue had been raised on the point of acquiescence this finding might have been entitled to consideration but the Judge seems to have thought that the plaintiffs, even if the issue had been raised, ought to have called evidence to prove that they had not acquiesced, and, as the Appellate Court has pointed out, the defendant never pleaded consent, no issue was raised and the evidence was not directed to it. It would, therefore, be dangerous to assume that consent had been given. I do not think that section 22 of the Indian Easements Act can assist the defendant. Its provisions can only apply when the exact way to be taken over the premises of the servient owner has not been ascertained. Whether the servient owner, when once the right of way has been defined, can substitute a new way is a question which does not seem to have been provided for by the Indian Easements Act and, therefore, we must have recourse to the Common Law: Lovell v. Smith (1), Hulbert v. Dale (2) and Young v. Kinloch (3). No doubt the general rule is that a right of way once defined cannot be altered [Deacon v. The South Eastern Railway Company (4)] and the dominant owner is entitled to exert his strict rights unless he can be induced to consent to a deviation. The defendant was aware of the existing right of way when he bought his premises and unless he can prove acquiescence in the new way the plaintiffs must succeed. The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

COYAJEE, J.—I concur, and would add that Courts in this country have given effect to the general rule that when once the line of way has been definitely set out, neither the dominant nor the servient owner can compel the other to give or to accept a different and a substituted way. In Syed Hamid Hossein v. Gervain (5) Norman, C. J. observed: "We think it is clear that if any person has a right of way from one place to another over a particular line, if he and his ancestors have been accustomed to use that way from a long time past, he has a right to go over it, and cannot be compelled to use a different and substituted way." Similarly, in Varajlal Parbhudas v. Moti Kuber (6), where the facts were not widely different from those in this case, this Court held that: "If the defendant's right of way was directly from the door in plaintiffs' osri to the defendant's osri, the plaintiff cannot obstruct that right of way and offer him another way through his chowk." In my opinion, therefore, the decision of the lower Appellate Court is right.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 1st August 1918, affirming that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 5th February 1918.

Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., for the Appellants.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal upon a certificate granted by the District Judge of Ludhiana under section 41 (3) of the Punjab Courts Act. The facts briefly are as follows:—

The last male owner of the land in suit was Dhiana whose relationship with the plaintiffs appears from the pedigree-table printed on page 4 of the paper-book. His widow Musammāt Mahan Kaur made a gift of her husband's land in favour of her daughters, Musammāt Dhan Kaur and Musammāt Ind Kaur, defendants appellants, and the plaintiffs sued for a declaration that this gift would not affect their reversionary rights after the death of the widow. The plaintiffs are, as appears from the pedigree table, the reversioners of Dhiana in the sixth degree. The Courts below have concurrently held that the land in suit is ancestral property of the plaintiffs and that according to custom the plaintiffs are heirs to the exclusion of the married daughters of Dhiana.

In the grounds of appeal to this Court various points have been raised, but the only one argued before us was that of custom, namely, whether the plaintiffs, who are collaterals in the sixth degree of Dhiana, are preferential heirs to his daughters. According to the riwaj-i-am of 1882 daughters are entirely excluded from inheritance by collaterals no matter how distantly related. According to the riwaj-i-am of 1911, which was prepared by Mr. Dannett, Settlement Collector, they are only excluded by collaterals not more remote than the sixth degree. If there are no collaterals in the sixth degree or nearer, then amongst Hindu Jats daughters inherit. A perusal of the riwaj-i-am shows that it was prepared with great care. Numerous instances are given though there are none exactly on all fours with the present case, i.e., no instances were given where collaterals of the sixth degree excluded daughters from inheritance. Some copies of judgments have been put upon the record by both the parties. P. 9 is a copy of a judgment by Mr. Lewis, District Judge, dated 30th July 1890. In that case the daughters of one Karman sued his collaterals in the sixth degree for possession of his land. It was there held that the collaterals were the heirs according to custom and the plaintiff's suit was dismissed. The daughters rested their claim on Hindu Law by which they said they were governed but it was held that they were governed, by Customary Law. No reference was made to the riwaj-i-am and it appears to have been conceded that if the parties were not governed by Hindu Law the daughters would have no right as against the collaterals. This instance undoubtedly supports the position taken up by the plaintiff. P. 8 is a judgment of Lala Achhra Ram, District Judge, dated 24th October 1904, in a case where daughters were opposed to collaterals in the seventh degree, and it was held that the latter were preferential heirs. In support of its decision the Court referred to Raushan v. Lehna (1), but that case was not really in point because there the plaintiff was a nephew of the donor, in other words, a near collateral, and the parties were Arān. D.-2. is a judgment dated 10th July 1903 where it was found that there was no rule that the collaterals from the seventh to the ninth degree were preferred to daughters. This instance is not in point; nor is D.-1, a judgment dated 18th February 1913, in which it was held that the plaintiffs, who were collaterals in the seventh degree, were not entitled to succeed in the presence of daughters.

Pandit Sheo Narain has referred to Bholi v. Man Singh (2), in which the question of onus in cases like the present was fully considered and it was laid down that the burden of proof as to whether remote collaterals such as of the sixth degree exclude daughters, rests on the party who asserts it. In Jivan Singh v. Har Kaur (3) it was held that under Customary Law, where collaterals more distantly related than the fifth, or at any rate, the seventh degree, claim to succeed to ancestral property in preference to a daughter, the onus probandi is on them. In this case Bholi v. Man Singh (2) was approved. Again, in Remark 1 to Article 23 of Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law it is laid down that the seventh degree is sometimes found to be the extreme limit of collateral male relationship which excludes the succession of a daughter, but it is also stated that more usually the fifth degree is found to be the customary limit. We may, therefore, take it that where a collateral is more distantly related than the fifth degree, the initial onus is on him to prove that he excludes the daughters and the more remote the collateral is the more heavily does the onus lie upon him. In the present case the collaterals are related in the sixth degree, and, therefore, the onus upon them would not be a very heavy one.

Now, the plaintiffs rely upon the answer to Question 43 of Mr. Durnett's Rivaj-i-am of 1911. According to that collaterals in the sixth degree exclude daughters. In the case Beg v. Allah Ditta (4) their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the entry in the riwa-i-am, which was not supported by instances, in favour of the succession of a daughter's son, whose father was a Khanadamed, in preference to collaterals was a strong piece of evidence in support of such custom which it lay upon the plaintiff's collaterals to rebut. This ruling of the Privy Council was considered in a subsequent decision of the Chief Court in Wazira v. Musammatt Maryan (5). It was held there following Ohhuttan v. Hasari Lal (6) that statements in a riwa-i-am when "opposed to general custom can carry very little weight unless supported by instances." Again in Khuda Baksh v. Musammatt Faiteh Khatun (7), it was held that Answer 13 in the Rivaj-i-am of the Multan District (unsupported by instances), being a very peculiar one, quite opposed to Customary Law and the method of calculating relationship laid down therein being also peculiar, was not sufficient to shift the onus on to the plaintiffs to prove that they are not excluded by a sister. The entry in the Rivaj-i-am relied upon by the plaintiffs in the present case can certainly not be said to be opposed to general custom, nor to be a very peculiar one. What is the extreme limit of collateral male relationship which excludes the succession of a daughter has been the subject of numerous decisions and a good deal of doubt has been expressed on the point and in Jivan Singh v.

CHUNILAL P. MULOHAND.

Har Kaur (3) referred to above it was doubted whether the seventh or the fifth degree should be fixed as the extreme limit. It, therefore, cannot be said that an entry which says that the collaterals in the sixth degree exclude daughters is opposed to general custom. Therefore, having regard to the decision of the Privy Council in Beg v. Allah Ditta (4) we hold that the entry in the 1911 Khawaj-i-am is quite sufficient to shift the initial onus from the plaintiffs to the donees-defendants, and we find that the latter have not discharged it.

The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with cost.

JUDGMENT.—This was a partition suit in which a consent-decree for partition was obtained on 8th November 1911 from the First Class Subordinate Judge, Broach. The plaintiff, on the 12th March 1915, took out a Darkhast for partition of the suit property and moveables. Commissioners were appointed, who submitted a report with regard to ornaments. a report, but before the report could be given effect to the house was burnt down. The plaintiff then wanted to drop the execution proceedings, but the defendant objected. The Court allowed the plaintiff to drop the execution proceedings. The result would be that those defendants who wished to continue the execution proceedings could not do so without having to issue a fresh Darkhast. We see no reason why the defendants should not have been allowed to continue the Darkhast in order that the suit property might be partitioned. Therefore, we allow the appeal and direct the Darkhast to continue at the instance of the defendant. The plaintiff to pay the appellant's costs in both Courts.

The right of a reversioner to bring a suit to contest any alienation which a sonless proprietor might make in future arises out of and is, in a sense, ancillary to the reversionary rights. But it cannot be said to be an integral part of those rights. It is wholly impossible to estimate the value of such a right, which must depend on all the circumstances of the case. If the alienation is for necessity or can be shown to have been for necessity by evidence, true or false, the right is valueless. It varies, moreover, with the prospects of the reversioner to succeed to the land and inversely with the age and health of the owner. [p. 418, col. 2.]

A family agreement by which a sonless proprietor agrees not to alienate half of his land, and his nearest reversioner undertakes not to challenge or object to any alienation which the former might see fit to make of the remaining half of his land, does not require registration and is binding on the sons of the reversioner. JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are peculiar. One Madat, who had no son, alienated some of his ancestral land to his son-in-law. Nadu, his brother, brought a suit of the usual type and thereupon a family agreement was made, in consideration of which Nadu withdrew his suit and Madat undertook that he would not charge one-half of the remaining land or the house in which he lived and Nadu further undertook not to challenge or object to any alienation which Madat might see fit to make with regard to the remaining half of the land. Eighteen months later, Madat executed a deed by which he purported to sell one-half of his remaining land to another son-in-law for Rs. 780. Nadu's sons sue for a declaration that this alienation will not affect their reversionary rights and have been given a decree on the finding that the documents in which the agreement was embodied are not admissible, inasmuch as they have not been registered, that the agreement, therefore, cannot be proved and that consideration and necessity have not been established. On appeal Counsel urges that the documents need not be registered and that the consent of the next collateral makes the alienation good against the whole world.

Now, if the two important documents D.2 and D. W.-1 contained any clause by which Nadu relinquished his reversionary rights, it would have been necessary to register them. Here, however, all he did was to undertake not to bring a suit to contest any alienation which might be made in future. The right to bring such a suit doubtless arises out of and is, in a sense, ancillary to the reversionary rights. At the same time, it cannot be said to be an integral part of those rights. In the second place, it is wholly impossible to estimate the value of such a right, which must depend on all the circumstances of the case. If the alienation is for necessity or can be shown to have been for necessity by evidence, true or false, the right is valueless. It varies, moreover, with the prospects of the reversioner to succeed to the land and inversely with the age and health of the owner. We find, therefore, that, for these two reasons, the undertaking given by Nadu not to contest any alienation, which his brother might make in future as to one-half of the land, did not require registration.

It is urged by Counsel for the respondents that a consent of this nature given 18 months before the actual transfer takes place is not a consent at all as contemplated in the various rulings quoted, and he contends that consent can only be given to a transaction which is on the verge of completion. We see no force in this argument and there is no reason why a consent given to a contemplated alienation should not be as binding and as valid as a consent given to a completed transfer. It is also urged that, under the circumstances of this case, it must be presumed that Nadu did not act in the best interests of the family and that he deliberately injured the prospects of his sons. We find, on the contrary, that if bad faith be pleaded, it must be established and that good faith must be presumed, and there is nothing in the circumstances of this family agreement which points towards there having been any stupidity, carelessness or malice. Nadu saved one half of the remaining ancestral property and the house which Madat could certainly have charged or even sold, and although it might have been possible to defeat the sale or the alienation by bringing a suit, the result of litigation is always doubtful and we see no reason for not presuming that Nadu acted wisely and with foresight in making this agreement.

We, therefore, find, following Kaman v. Muhammad Ali (1), Labhu v. Musammat Nihali (2) and Shib Ram v. Shib Singh (3), that the consent of Nadu makes the alienation good against the world. We, therefore, accept the appeal and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit. The costs of the defendants will be paid throughout by the plaintiffs.

Ferry franchise, whether can be acquired by prescription—Grant from Government—Presumption.

A ferry franchise cannot be acquired by mere prescription. Facts must be proved from which, if there is no direct grant from the Government, it could be implied that such grant was actually made. [p. 420, col 1.]

Nityahari Roy v. Dunne, 18 C. 652; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 435, referred to.

Second appeal from the decision of the Joint Judge, Poona, in Appeal No. 129 of 1920, confirming the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Haveli, in Civil Suit No. 143 of 1917.

Mr. D. A. Tuljapurkar, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mehendale (with him Mr. P. B. Shingne), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sued for a declaration that they alone had a right to ply a ferry between the village of Bhophkel and Kirkee Bazar, and for an injunction restraining the defendant from plying a ferry between Bhophkel and Kirkee Bazar. The river Mula runs between these two villages, and until a dam was built in 1872 people were able to cross the river except in the rainy season. That has no longer been possible since the building of the dam. The plaintiffs who are Inamdars of the village of Bhophkel then began to run a ferry to take people across, and they were receiving the income from the ferry until 1915 when the first defendant began to run a rival ferry under the permission granted by the Superintendent of the Ammunition Factory, ratified by the Collector.

When the plaintiffs objected to the first defendant's plying his ferry, an order was passed by the Collector as follows :—

"In this office No. L. F. 1-853-3 of 25th March 1916 Shama Durgaji Bhoi of Kirkee was informed that the Collector has no objection to Shama plying his ferry between Kirkee and Kalas. The Collector now understands from an application from the Inamdar of Bhophkel that Shama is working his ferry boat between Kirkee and Bhophkel. Shama is, therefore, informed that he is not entitled to run a ferry between Kirkee and Bhophkel without the permission of the Inamdar of Bhophkel."

Exhibit 22 is the application of the first defendant to the Collector from which it would appear that the limits within which he wished to ply his boat were not definitely stated. The applicant said :

"There is a dam of the river Mula within the limit of the Superintendent of the Ammunition Factory at Kirkee, and he has sanctioned the plying of a boat to convey workmen in the factory. Therefore, I have bought a boat worth Rs. 400. Within the said limit I have been plying a boat for these four or five months. Hence, I have given a written statement in the office of the Mamlatdar, Haveli, Poona. Your Honour should allow me to ply a boat in the aforesaid limit."

So, although the Collector might have sanctioned the plying of a boat by the first defendant during the limits of the waters held up by the dam, when the Inamdar of Bhophkel objected to the first defendant running a ferry between his village and Kirkee, the first defendant was told he could not do that without the permission of the Inamdar.

Both Courts have decreed the plaintiffs' claim, and the question is, whether the plaintiffs have established a right to a ferry franchise, between these two villages, so that they are entitled to come to Court to ask the Court to restrain the defendant, or any one else, from infringing that right. It may be conceded that such a franchise cannot be acquired by mere prescription, and that there must be facts proved from which, if there is no direct grant from the Government, it could be implied that such grant was actually made. It is not disputed that Government have the right to grant such a franchise; and we have to consider the evidence in this case and see whether, since no direct grant has been produced, the Courts were entitled to infer that such a grant was actually made. When the dam was built it was obvious that some provision would have to be made for conveying the public from one side of the bank of the river to the other, and that the Government recognised the rights of the Inamdars to a portion of the bed of the river can be seen from the fact that they granted compensation to the Inamdar for the loss which he incurred owing to his no longer being able to derive revenue from the melon grounds in the bed of the river. Government were evidently aware that the Inamdars had started plying a ferry between their village and the Kirkee side of the river bank.

Then an order was passed on 28th July 1879 by the Collector which unfortunately is not forthcoming, but the Mamlatdar gave information regarding this order to the Inamdars by Exhibit 71: "Yadi (memorandum) written to the Inamdar of Bhopkhel, Taluka Haveli from Mamlatdar Taluka Haveli, to the effect that you ply a private boat in the river within the limits of the said Mauje and the revenue received was shown in the record. Proceedings in respect thereof went on and at last the order Inward No. 1072, dated 20th July 1879, was received from the Collector. On its strength it is informed that you ply a boat in the river of private ownership for the convenience of people. It should be understood that it is being plied with the permission of the Government." We think that there is sufficient evidence to presume that the Government had granted the franchise to the Inamdars. In addition we have this fact that the Inamdars have been plying this ferry ever since 1879, and it has never been suggested that any one could ply a ferry in competition with them.

In Nityahari Roy v. Dunne (1), which was a suit brought to establish a right to a ferry franchise and to restrain the working of a rival ferry, the law on the question is fully considered, and at page 657 the learned Judges said:—

"There is no dispute that the Government is in a position, if it likes, to create a franchise. We think that both the documents and the village register prepared in 1861 by the proper authorities are admissible to show that in the year 1859 the plaintiffs made a claim to the franchise, and, on a proper inquiry made by Government, that claim was admitted. The next acknowledgment made by the Crown of the existence of this ferry is to be found on the face of the thakbast maps to Deogram and Mohespur. In effect it amounts to this, that a summary inquiry, No. 306, having been instituted, it was found that this Ghat was appurtenant to the villages of Deogram and Mohespur belonging to Khalilabad, and an endorsement was made on the map to this effect under the orders of Government. We thus see that at two distinct and separate times, within the last thirty years, namely, in 1861, and in 1876, the Crown has admitted the right of the plaintiffs to hold a ferry, on the basis that it has been permanently settled with them in the same manner as their estate... We are, therefore, of opinion that the Subordinate Judge was right in holding that the plaintiffs have, from time immemorial, had a franchise granted to them by the Crown which enabled them to claim monopoly of the right to ferry within reasonable limits across the river. The grant itself has not been produced, and Pearapur-Aglapur is at some distance from Deogram. But still in 1859, in 1861, and again in 1876, the monopoly was found by the proper Government Officers to be appurtenant to two villages, namely, Deogram and Mohespur, within the Pergunnah of Khalilabad. There is still another matter for consideration. It is a general principle that ancient grants may be explained by modern user. In this case the user spoken to by the witnesses, which undoubtedly existed, was in the immediate vicinity, if not from the boundary between those villages as is found by the Subordinate Judge, and must be taken to be a user supported by the right by which it was claimed. Consequently, although we think that the plaintiffs have established a right of ferry appurtenant to Deogram and Mohepur on the left bank of the river, they have not been able to establish anything more; and we agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that their claim, so far as it asserts that right to establish a ferry beyond the purview of those villages, must be rejected."

It must be admitted in this case that there was no reason to grant a ferry franchise before the dam was built, and so it is not possible to presume a grant from immemorial user. But such a grant can still be presumed from the evidence in the case. We think, therefore, the Courts below were right in holding that the facts in this case raise a presumption that there was a Government grant in favour of the plaintiffs. The appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Equitable mortgage—Deposit of title-deeds—Equitable mortgage, whether enforceable in the Punjab—Sub-mortgagee, whether bound to implead original mortgagor in suit on mortgage—Registration Act (XVI of 1903), s. 17 (1) (b)—Letter depositing title-deeds after mortgage effected, admissibility of, without registration.

As security for a loan defendants executed a pro-note in favour of the plaintiff and at the same time handed over a number of title-deeds, some of which related to their own property, and some to property mortgaged to them. They also signed and delivered to the defendants a letter which opened as follows: "We, under this writing, deposit with you as security 12 deeds relating to property of the value of Rs. 8,547 mentioned in the list in lieu of a pro-note for Rs. 8,000 in respect of which a separate pro-note has been executed to-day." In a suit on the pro-note to recover the amount thereof and for sale of the properties it was urged, inter alia, (1) that there was no such thing as an equitable mortgage in the Punjab; (2) that the original mortgagors should have been impleaded as defendants in the suit, and (3) that the letter with which the title-deeds were deposited required registration, and not being registered it was inadmissible to prove the existence of a mortgage.

Held, (1) that an equitable mortgage by the deposit of title-deeds was recognised, and could be enforced in the Punjab; [p. 422, col. 1.]

(2) that the suit could proceed without impleading the original mortgagors as defendants, and [p. 422, col. 1.]

(3) that inasmuch as the equitable mortgage by the deposit of title-deeds had been effected before the letter was written and as the letter did not embody the terms of the contract, but was written with the object of being used only as evidence of a fact from which the contract was to be inferred, it did not come within the description in section 17 of the Registration Act, and, therefore, it did not require to be registered to render it admissible, [p. 423, col. 1.]

First appeal from a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Gujrat, dated the 20th June 1917.

Dr. Gopal Ochanl Narang, for the Appellant.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The defendants in this case were admittedly indebted to the Bharat National Bank, the plaintiff, for a sum of Rs. 8,000. The plaintiff has obtained a decree for Rs. 8,792-9-6 with subsequent interest and, in default of payment within three months, for the sale of certain properties, alleged to have been mortgaged with the plaintiff-bank.

The defendants appeal. They have made no objection to the money decree except as regards calculation of interest, and on that point their objection is well-founded. Through an obvious error the Senior Subordinate Judge, while disallowing the plaintiff's claim for interest at 12 per cent. instead of at 9 per cent. after a certain date; nevertheless calculated interest at the former rate. The decree allowing for certain repayments should have been for Rs. 7,804 instead of for the amount decreed, and the decree will be amended accordingly.

The main question in the case relates to the claim of the plaintiff Bank to bring to sale as such the properties alleged to be mortgaged.

The facts are briefly that the defendants had been in debt to the Bank for some time and the Bank wanted security in addition to a promissory note, vide a letter, dated the 18th February 1913, from the Head Office to the Manager of the Gujrat branch. On the 18th April 1913 the parties met. The defendants then executed a pro-note for a sum of Rs. 8,000 and at the same time handed over a number of title-deeds. Some were of their own property and some of property which had been mortgaged to them by third parties. They also signed a letter in which they also sent and delivered to the plaintiff a letter which opens with the following words:—

"We, under this writing, deposit with you as security 12 deeds relating to property of the value of Rs. 8,537 mentioned in the list in lieu of a pro note for Rs. 8,000 in respect of which a separate pro-note has been executed to-day."

The position of the plaintiff is that the Bank holds an equitable mortgage over the deeds thus deposited. For the defendants several pleas have been put forward. Two of them require but brief notice. One is, that there can be no such thing as an equitable mortgage in the Punjab, a contention which is sufficiently disposed of by referring to Gurditta Mal v. Gulam Ali (1) and Mrs. Stewart v. Bank of Upper India, Limitation (2). The second is that before proceeding against properties mortgaged to the defendants by third parties it was necessary to implead the original mortgagors. In this connection Counsel has cited Ram Jatan Rai v. Ramhit Singh (3), but that ruling was disposed of in the Full Court ruling, Ram Shankar Lal v. Ganesh Prasad (4) and there is no force in the plea.

The third point of Counsel for the defendants-appellants, who has argued it at considerable length, is that the letter with which the deeds were deposited required registration and that as it has not been registered, the existence of a mortgage cannot be proved. Of the rulings cited in the judgment of the Court below Duarka Dess v. Danakoti Ammal (5) is not relevant and Oo Ncung v. Moung Htoon Oo (6) is distinguishable on the ground that in that case it was held to be proved that the equitable mortgage was effected by the deposit of the title deeds before the writing of the letter of deposit took place. The same may be said of Gokul Dass v. Eastern Mortgage and Agency Co. (7) which has been cited before us by Counsel for the plaintiff-respondent. Counsel for the defendants appellants has laid considerable stress on Dwarkanath Mitter v. Sarat Kumari Dasi (8) but that case again is distinguishable on the ground that when the letter there discussed was written the parties had not met, and there can have been no parole agreement to make an equitable mortgage.

The ruling from which we have derived most assistance is Kedarnath Dutt v. Sham Lal Khattri (9). The Division Bench which heard the appeal in that case disbelieved the plaintiff's evidence that the transaction had been completed before the document (a promissory note) was written and delivered. They thought, however, that there was a valid equitable mortgage independent of the document. They pointed out that if the document was one within section 17 of the Registration Act, it was the duty of the parties to see that it contained what section 21 of the same Act required. That had not been done and it was held that the document under consideration was not a writing which the parties had made as evidence of their contract but only a writing which was evidence of the fact from which the contract was to be inferred and that it did not come within description of documents in section 17 of the Registration Act.

The allegation of the defendants in the present case that they deposited the title-deeds only to show that they had sufficient property, though they have ever since left them in the possession of the Bank, is childish, and there can be no doubt that it was the intention of the Bank to secure an equitable mortgage on the properties of which the title deeds were deposited. In order, moreover, to avoid loss of credit it was in the interests of the defendants themselves to give the plaintiff Bank an equitable mortgage rather than one requiring registration. Having regard to the contents of the letter, dated the 18th February 1913, to which we have already referred, we should be quite prepared to hold that an equitable mortgage had been established, even if the letter, dated the 18th April 1913, had never been written. If the letter which is now said to have required registration had been intended to embody the contract thus involving registration which the defendants must have wished to avoid, it would presumably have been drawn up in a form in which it could have been accepted for registration under section 21. It did not, however, contain any description of property, and if it has been presented, it could not have been accepted. There is no apparent reason why, if that letter was intended to embody the contract, it should have been drawn up in a form which would have made its registration, as it stood, impossible, and it appears to us that the writing was intended to be used only as evidence of a fact from which the contract was to be inferred. If so, it does not come within the description in section 17 of the Registration Act, and the whole argument of the appellants fails.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed except as regards the amount of interest wrongly calculated by the Court below, and the appellants will pay full costs.

MARWAR BANK (IN LIQUIDATION)—

RESPONDENT.

Construction of document—Surety bond—Personal liability—Document capable of intelligible interpretation—Extrinsic evidence, admissibility of, to affect its meaning.

A trading Company took certain advances from a Bank, the plaintiff in the suit, and by way of security the defendants who were Directors of the Company executed a surety bond in the form of a letter addressed to the Bank, the material portion of which ran as follows: "In consideration of your allowing the Company to overdraw sums not exceeding rupees fifty thousand (on the security of the said Company demand prom-note in your favour) we hereby pledge for the re-payment on demand of the said overdraft." In a suit by the plaintiff to make the defendants personally liable, the defendants contended that they had given the surety bond as Directors of the Company and sought to adduce evidence to prove by reference to other transactions entered into by them that they had not pledged themselves personally:

Held, (1) that the only construction that could be put upon the letter was that the defendants had made themselves personally liable; [p. 425, col. 1.]

(2) that as on the face of it there was no difficulty in giving the letter an intelligible meaning as constituting a personal pledge, no extrinsic evidence was admissible to affect its meaning. [p. 425, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the Chief Court, Punjab, reported as 48 Ind. Cas. 424, affirming a decree of the District Judge, Ambala.

FACTS.—The Marwar Bank instituted the suit to recover money from the appellants as sureties, who pleaded that they were not personally liable. Both the Courts in India decreed the claim. Hence the present appeal.

Mr. Olason, K. O. (with him Mr. Walach), for the Appellants.—The appellants were the Directors of Luxmi Company and signed the surety bond as such. There was no personal liability. It binds the Luxmi Company and the Luxmi Company alone. A personal decree against the appellants ought not to have been made. The rate of interest agreed upon was only $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. There was no binding agreement to pay a higher rate. The Courts were wrong in awarding interest at $8\frac{1}{4}$ per cent.

VISCOUNT HALDANE.—The Luxmi Company, Limited, which was defendant in the suit

out of which this appeal arises, but which is no party to the appeal, was a company trading at Ambala and elsewhere as bankers, cotton merchants and general commission agents. It obtained certain advances from the respondents, the Marwar Bank. These advances were made under various circumstances, but at the material date with which their Lordships are concerned it was necessary to obtain some security for the assurance of the Bank and accordingly on the 28th December 1908 the appellants, Lala Panna Lal and Lala Bashesar Nath, and one Lala Ganga Ram executed a security bond, dated the 28th December 1908, in favour of the Manager of the Marwar Bank. Lala Ganga Ram and the appellant Lala Panna Lal were Directors of the Luxmi Company; the other appellant, Lala Bashesar Nath was manager of one of the branches of the Luxmi Company, and was an alternative Director, that is to say, on certain occasions he acted as a Director.

The surety bond which the two appellants executed was in these terms. It was addressed to the Manager of the Marwar Bank, Limited, of Ambala City:

"DEAR SIR,—In consideration of your allowing the Luxmi Company, Limited, to overdraw sums not exceeding in the aggregate of rupees fifty thousand only (on the security of Luxmi Company, Limited; demand pro-note in your favour of date), we hereby pledge for the repayment on demand of the said overdraft, together with interest thereon and of any other sum or sums of money which may be or become due to you from the Luxmi Company, Limited, on any account whatsoever during the continuance of this pro-note. And we hereby declare and agree that the overdraft allowed and intended to be secured by this agreement shall be taken to have been allowed by you entirely upon the faith of and relying upon the declaration signed by us at the foot thereof which declaration solemnly we declare to be true in every respect. It is hereby further agreed and declared that these presents shall remain and be a continuing security to you for the balance of the said account for the time being to the extent aforesaid, notwithstanding that at any time or times the balance of the said account may be in your favour, it being expressly intended that these presents shall be a security for the balance of the said account due by the Luxmi Company, Limited, to you while the said account shall continue open. Signed at Ambala City this 28th day of December, in the year one thousand nine hundred and eight."

It is contended on behalf of the appellants that this security bond did not impose upon them any personal liability, inasmuch as they signed as Directors, which, it is said, meant as Directors binding the Luxmi Company and the Luxmi Company alone. The first difficulty in the way of that contention is a very formidable one. If it were true, the Bank would get no advantage from this security bond, because it had already the liability of the Luxmi Company for the sums which it had advanced to the Luxmi Company. The only materiality of the security bond would be, if it gave some new security and some fresh liability, and, therefore, the natural construction to put upon what is indicated by the use of the imperfect but definite expression "pledge" is that the fresh liability of the three signatories personally was the new security introduced. Moreover, the whole tenor of the document points to an obligation to pay money. It is suggested that the word "pledge" in the beginning of the second sentence, where the expression is used "we hereby pledge for the re-payment on demand," shows that they meant to refer to some specific and tangible securities which they pledged for the advances, but if that were so, then, as these were omitted and not mentioned, the document was bad because of the omission of what was of its essence. The other construction takes the word pledge as loosely used, to mean that they pledge their personal credit in support of the obligation of the Company. It is said that if one looks at other documents of the kind one will find that this was only a common form intended for cases where there was a pledge of assets, and that if regard is had to the circumstances in other transactions one will find that in other transactions these gentlemen did not pledge themselves personally.

But their Lordships think that this surety-bond which was executed on the specific occasion must be taken to have been executed for the purpose of the occasion, and that it cannot be assumed that it had reference to any other circumstances of a different date. On the face of it, there is no difficulty in giving it an intelligible meaning as constituting a personal pledge. Their Lordships do not think that extrinsic evidence is admissible in these circumstances to affect its meaning.

Their Lordships are, therefore, of opinion, taking this as it stands, that the appeal fails.

The only other point that arises is as to the rate of interest given from the date of the proceedings until judgment. As to that there is a dissent in the Judges under the Code of Civil Procedure, and both Courts have said that the interest should be $\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. Their Lordships are not prepared to dissent from that view. For the reasons they have stated, they will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Mr. O. L. Gulati, for Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Bri Lal for Diwan Mehr Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—There are no merits in this second appeal. The plaintiffs sued for possession of certain land on the allegation that it had fallen to their lot under a partition. There were six defendants to the suit including Bila, Mila, Muhammad Din and Lashkar. Lashkar was impleaded as he was alleged to be the mortgagee of the land in suit from Bila and Mila. The defendants entirely denied the partition. On behalf of Mila, Bila and Lashkar a plea was raised that, as Lashkar had not been impleaded as a party to the partition proceedings, those proceedings could not affect the land mortgaged to him. The Court of first instance found the partition proved but gave effect to the plea relating to Lashkar's mortgage. The suit, therefore, relating to the mortgaged land was dismissed by the First Court. On appeal to the lower Appellate Court by the plaintiffs the decree of the First Court was modified and the entire claim of the plaintiffs was decreed.

Muhammad Din, Bila and Mila have come up in second appeal to this Court, and it has been contended on their behalf, in the first place, that there was actually no partition. This plea, however, is concluded by the finding of fact recorded by the two Courts below. The Court of first instance recorded a clear and categorical finding that the alleged partition had actually taken place. That finding has been upheld by the lower Appellate Court.

HAJI DAWOOD HAJI ELIAS v. MUNICIPAL COMMISSIONER FOR THE CITY OF BOMBAY.

The next point urged by the learned Counsel is that Lashkar mortgagee with possession was a necessary party to the partition proceedings, and inasmuch as he was not impleaded and no notice of the partition proceedings was given to him, those proceedings are binding neither upon the appellants nor on Lashkar. The precise question arose for decision in the case Thakar Das v. Sultan Bakhs (1). The Financial Commissioner, Mr. Maynard, considered the sections of the Land Revenue Act to be found in the Chapter relating to the partition very fully, and held that only owners and co-sharers are necessary parties to a partition proceeding. A mortgagee with possession may come under the definition of landlord, but he is in no sense an owner or a co-sharer. I entirely agree with the conclusions arrived at by the learned Financial Commissioner. Lashkar was not a necessary party, and, therefore, he had no locus standi to object to the correctness of the partition proceedings. In this appeal he is not one of the appellants, but, curiously enough, Mila and Bila and Muhammad Din have undertaken to urge pleas on his behalf, and in his interest.

As regards the actual appellants before me it has been contended by Mr. Gulati that they had been in adverse possession of the land in suit long before the actual partition now relied on by the plaintiffs. The partition proceedings came to an end in 1916 and were sanctioned by the Revenue Officer on the 14th September 1916. There is sufficient material upon the record of this case to show that Bila and Mila themselves and Muhammad Din's father were parties to the partition proceedings. On behalf of Mila and Bila, Musammât Baga, their mother and guardian, made a statement agreeing to the partition and so did Jalle, father of Muhammad Din. It is, however, contended that, in spite of the partition, the appellants remained in possession of the property in dispute, and their possession from the very commencement had been adverse. This question is concluded by a very clear authority Fateh Lin v. Nikka (2). Whatever may be or may have been the rights of the parties before the partition with regard to the portions of land which were going to be the subject-matter of the partition, the partition created new rights and it was under the partition that these lands were allotted to the plaintiff. By virtue of the partition the plaintiffs became entitled to the exclusive possession of these lands, and if the defendants continued to be in possession after the partition, their possession no doubt was adverse and wrongful. But they cannot avail of it because admittedly the suit of the plaintiffs is within 12 years from the date of the partition. Moreover, this plea of adverse possession appears to be quite an afterthought. A reference to the papers of the partition proceedings shows that no such plea was set up during the partition proceedings, not even the mortgage to Lashkar was mentioned. It is too late for the appellants now in second appeal to urge this plea.

In view of the above remarks this appeal must be dismissed, and is dismissed with costs.

City of Bombay Municipal Act (III of 1888), s. 154 (2)—Building, rateable value of—Bath, lavatories and electric fittings, owner, whether entitled to deduction on account of—Electric fittings, whether "machinery."

In assessing the rateable value of a building under the City of Bombay Municipal Act, no deduction should be allowed to the owner of the building for the cost of bath-tubs and lavatories which are annexures nor should any deduction be allowed for electric lights and fans, which are not "machinery" within the meaning of section 154 (2) of the Act, and, which, when installed by a landlord, become part of the premises and are necessary for the user of the premises by the tenant. JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—This is a Reference by the Chief Judge, Small Cause Court, in an appeal before him against an assessment under the City of Bombay Municipal Act. The appellant is the owner of a building at the junction of Warden Road and Napsan Sea Road which is let out in flats under registered leases. The building is fitted up with electric fittings and fans, bath tubs and lavatories; and the question referred to us is:

"Whether in respect of buildings, situated as in this case, deduction in their rateable value should be allowed to the owner, for the reasonable cost of bath-tubs and lavatories and electric lights and fans?"

The learned Judge has also added after the word 'lavatories' the words "with the necessary gas plant." But we are not concerned with gas plant in this case, and those words should be deleted from the Reference.

Now, there can be no doubt that the baths and the lavatories are annexed to the freehold and all electric fittings are also annexed to the freehold, except perhaps such fittings as are attached to plugs in the wall. I should say myself that there can be no doubt as regards the baths and lavatories, that the landlord is not entitled to deduction for the cost of these. Without these conveniences the premises would not be let, unless perhaps a tenant were found to take the premises on a long lease on favourable terms on the understanding that he should put up such fittings himself. But, ordinarily speaking, baths and lavatories must necessarily be put in before tenants can be expected to take the premises. Again, with regard to electric fittings and fans, it may be that the landlord may not attach these conveniences to the premises, and may get tenants to take the premises on the understanding that they should put the fittings themselves. But it is obvious that if the landlord puts in those fittings it will be easier to get tenants. The only reason on which the appellant's claim for deduction can be based is that these fittings should be treated as machinery, which under section 154 (2) of the City of Bombay Municipal Act shall not be included for rateable value of the building. But we have not been referred to any authority under which it is said that electric fittings in a residence come within the term "machinery". It seems to me that when electric fittings are installed by a landlord they become part of the premises and so are necessary for the user of the premises by the tenant.

Therefore, no deduction can be allowed for the costs of such installation.

We, therefore, answer the question in the negative. Costs taxed as on the Original Side to be costs in the case.

SHAH, J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 84—Execution of decrees—Sale—Failure to deposit 25 per cent. of purchase-money—Irregularity.

The failure by an auction-purchaser at a sale held in execution of a decree to deposit 25 per cent. of the purchase-money at the time of the sale, as required by r. 84, O. XXI, Civil Procedure Code, is a mere irregularity which does not affect the validity of the sale unless it can be shown that substantial injury is thereby caused to the judgment-debtor. Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Lyallpur, dated the 19th May 1921.

Lala Mool Chand, R. S., for the Appellant.

Mr. M. L. Euri, for the Decree-holder, Mr. Niaz Ali, for the Auction-purchaser, Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The following facts will disclose the nature of the dispute between the parties:—

On the 24th October 1914 the Panjab National Bank obtained a decree absolute for sale against one Inayat Ullah, judgment-debtor, the amount of decree being Rs. 7,103-12-6. On the 26th October 1914 an application for execution of the decree was made. By the order dated the 21st October 1916 the house No. 149 was directed to be sold. The sale took place on the 23rd November 1916 and the property was sold for Rs. 5,300 in favour of one Jan Muhammad, the highest bidder. One fourth of the sale price, namely, Rs. 1,325 was deposited on the 29th November 1916. According to an application of the auction-purchaser dated the 7th May 1921, page 159 of the record, the amount was tendered on the 18th November 1916 after the sale but could not be deposited owing to the Treasury being closed. It was, therefore, deposited the next day. The balance of Rs. 3,975 was deposited on the 12th December 1916. On the 20th December 1916 the judgment-debtor applied for the setting aside of the sale on the ground of certain alleged irregularities in publishing and conducting the sale. Those objections were disallowed by Diwan Somnath, Senior Subordinate Judge, by an order dated the 3rd December 1917. The objections were set forth in the petition in five paragraphs and were as follows:—

(i) that the proclamation of sale had not been duly published, and the details required by law were not entered in it;

(ii) that the auction-purchaser, Jan Muhammad, had got the sale finally finished in his name by fraud and collusion with the bailiff;

(iii) that the purchaser being a member of the Committee, through his influence, had succeeded in keeping back the purchasers;

(iv) that the auction-sale was not duly carried on at the place specified, and it was carried on in such a manner that it had caused loss to the judgment debtor; and

(v) that the value of the house was at least Rs. 10,000.

The judgment-debtor, objector, failed to adduce evidence in support of his allegations. The Court held that there was "no evidence on the record nor any ground to suspect that the house has been sold at a less price than it would have fetched ordinarily. There is no evidence of any collusion." It also found that there was no irregularity in publishing and conducting the sale and that several persons were present at the occasion. The Court accordingly came to the following conclusion:—"Every thing appears to have been done in due order, and unless anything is proved to be irregular, irregularity cannot be presumed."

No objection appears to have been raised at the time that the 25 per cent. of the purchase-money was not deposited immediately after the sale, as required by Order XXI, rule 84, Civil Procedure Code, and that the sale was, therefore, void or irregular.

Musammnat Begam, wife of Inait Ullah, judgment-debtor, also filed objections against the sale claiming the ownership of the property sold. Those objections were disallowed by an order dated the 6th February 1917. Thereafter she instituted a declaratory suit on the 21st February 1917. During the pendency of the suit on the 23rd June 1917 the auction-purchaser withdrew the $\frac{3}{4}$ ths of the purchase-money which had been deposited by him. The suit of Musammnat Begam was dismissed on the 11th October 1917. On the 1st December 1917 she lodged an appeal in the Chief Court on the 14th December 1917, she applied for the stay of further proceedings in respect of the sale. The Chief Court made an ad interim order on the 17th December 1917. Finally, on the 22nd March 1918 by consent of parties the further proceedings were stayed, and the auction purchaser was allowed to withdraw the balance of the sale price, namely, Rs. 1,325. Musammnat Begam and the Bank were represented by Counsel. Jan Mahomed was present in person, while Inait Ullah, the judgment-debtor, was absent. The money, viz., Rs. 1,325, was actually withdrawn by the judgment-debtor on the 15th April 1918. The appeal of Musammnat Begam was eventually dismissed.

on the 21st January 1921. During the pendency of the suit the Court, by an order dated the 3rd May 1917 had suspended the further proceedings, relating to the sale. After the disposal of the appeal the decree-holder applied on the 20th March 1921 for an order directing the auction-purchaser to put in the sale price for payment to the decree holder. Before this, on the 17th March 1921, the judgment debtor had put in an application objecting to the sale being confirmed, the main objection being that inasmuch as the 25 per cent. of the purchase-money had not been deposited immediately as contemplated by Order XXI, rule 84, Civil Procedure Code, the sale had become void and could not be confirmed. Those objections were disallowed, and the sale was confirmed by an order dated the 19th May 1921. It is against this order that the present appeal has been preferred.

Eleven pleas were taken in the memorandum of appeal presented to this Court, but only two contentions have been put forward before me, namely, (1) that the auction-purchaser having failed to deposit the 25 per cent. of the purchase-money immediately after the sale the sale became void and ought not to have been confirmed, and (2) that even if the sale was not void the non-payment of the money immediately was a grave and material irregularity which had caused loss to the judgment-debtor, and the sale ought to have been set aside.

In support of the first contention Mr. Mool Chand, the learned Vakil for the appellant, relied upon the case of Amir Begam v. Bank of Upper India, Limited (1). The learned Judges, who decided the case relying upon the case of Intizam Ali Khan v. Narain Singh (2), held that owing to the non payment of the $\frac{1}{4}$ th of the purchase money immediately the sale was not merely irregular, but was no sale at all.

Another Division Bench in a previous case Ahmad Baksh v. Latta Prasad (3) had declared the ruling in Intizam Ali Khan v. Narain Singh (2) to be no longer law, and had held that "the fact that an auction-purchaser at a sale held in execution of a decree did not pay the 25 per cent. of the purchase money required by section 206 of the Code of Civil Procedure at the time of the sale was a mere irregularity which would not affect the validity of the sale unless it could be shown that substantial injury was thereby caused to the judgment-debtor." The attention of the learned Judges, who decided the case of Amir Begam v. Bank of Upper India, Limited (1), apparently was not drawn to the decision reported as Ahmad Baksh v. Latta Prasad (3).

A Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court also dissented from the decision in the case of Intizam Ali Khan v. Narain Singh (2), [see Bhim Singh v. Sarwan Singh (4)]. They also held that the non-payment of the 25 per cent. was merely an irregularity. The same rule has been laid down by a Division Bench of the Madras High Court in the case of Venkata v. Sama (5). I must, therefore, hold that the sale was not void and the first contention put forward by Mr. Mool Chand must fail.

As regards the second contention all that I need say is that, on the facts stated above, it is not open to the judgment-debtor to apply for the setting aside of the sale on the ground of material irregularity. He had made an application for that purpose on the 20th December 1916 which was dismissed for want of proof. As already mentioned, the ground now urged was never put forward in that application. Any application to the Court to set aside the sale on the ground of material irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting it would be long barred by time, and would also be barred by the rule of res judicata. It has already been held by Diwan Somnath, Senior Subordinate Judge, that the judgment-debtor has not sustained substantial injury by reason of any irregularity in publishing and conducting the sale. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

*City of Bombay Municipal Act (III of 1888), s. 147
—Landlord and tenant—Tenant sub-letting premises at higher rent than fixed with landlord—Property tax, enhancement of, by Municipality—Landlord, right of, to recover difference from tenant.*

Unless there is strong documentary evidence to show that a landlord has contracted himself out of the protection afforded to him by section 147 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act, he is entitled to claim from the tenant the difference in taxes, if the rateable value of the premises exceeds the amount of rent payable by the tenant.

Case stated for the opinion of the High Court by the Third Judge of the Court of Small Causes, Bombay, under section 69 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act and under Order XLVI, rule 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Sir Thomas Strangman, Advocate-General, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Campbell, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff purchased a certain property in Apollo Street, which had been leased by his vendor on the 29th June 1915 for a period of three years certain and three years optional to Messrs. Lipton & Co. at a monthly rent of Rs. 600, including all rates and taxes whatsoever. Messrs. Lipton & Co. sub-let a considerable portion of the premises at a very high rent, in consequence of which the Municipality raised the assessment for 1920-21 and 1921-22, basing it not on the rent payable by Messrs. Lipton & Co., under the lease, but on the rent received by them from their sub-tenants, plus a proportionate rent at the same rate for the premises which were in their occupation. The result is that the landlord is called on to pay taxes on the assessment of over Rs. 31,000 instead of under Rs. 7,000; and he claims the protection of section 147 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act. That section says:—

"If any premises assessed to any property tax are let, and their rateable value exceeds the amount of rent payable in respect thereof to the person from whom, under the provisions of the last preceding section, the said tax is leviable, the said person shall be entitled to receive from his tenant the difference between the amount of the property tax levied from him and the amount which would be leviable from him if the said tax were calculated on the amount of rent payable to him."

That is a somewhat involved section; but it means this, that the lessor from whom taxes are leviable under section 146 has a claim against a tenant if the rateable value of the premises exceeds the amount of rent payable by the tenant. The only question is whether the lessor under this lease contracted himself out of the protection afforded to him by section 147. Ordinarily, when the lease was granted, it would be intended that the lessor should be liable to pay the taxes which would be based on the rent payable under the lease, and it is difficult to see that the parties contemplated that in case of an increase in the assessment by the Municipality, the responsibility for paying the tax in accordance with that increased assessment should fall on the landlord and not on the tenant. Regarding the protection afforded by section 147 it seems to us that we should require stronger documentary evidence than we have to satisfy us that the parties intended that, however much the rateable value might be increased in the future over and above the rent payable under the lease, still the landlord would have to pay the whole of the tax.

It is sufficient, therefore, for us to say, in answer to the questions referred, that section 147 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act affords relief to the plaintiff in the circumstances of the case, and that his predecessor in title did not contract himself out of the protection afforded by the section. It is not necessary, therefore, to consider the question whether the plaintiff could have validly contracted himself out of the section.

Costs taxed as on the Original Side to be costs in the case.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 8th August 1918, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Amritsar, dated the 17th April 1918.

Lala Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Appellants.

Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., for the Plaintiffs and Bakhshi Tek Chand and Mr Madho Sudhan Bhagat, for Dharam Chand, Defendant-Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs, who are first cousins of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and of their brother Karam Chand, owned a half share in a shop. The other half was sold to them by defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and Karam Chand by a deed, dated the 3rd September 1916, for Rs. 2,650 of which Rs. 175 were paid at the time of the execution of the deed. The remaining sum of Rs. 2,475 was to be paid by the plaintiffs in a month, but has not yet been paid, and one Para Ram obtained a decree against the plaintiffs for Rs. 618-12-0 on account of the share due to Karam Chand which the latter had sold to him. In the present case the plaintiffs sued for possession of half of the shop on payment to defendants Nos. 1 to 3 of Rs. 1,356 4 0, i. e., after the deduction of Rs. 618 12-0 on account of Karam Chand's share for the sum of Rs. 2,475.

The First Court dismissed the suit on the ground that the sale to the plaintiffs was invalid, inasmuch as Karam Chand was shown in the sale-deed as a joint vendor, whereas he had no share in the shop, having been disinherited by his father Ram Dat under a Will (Exhibit D 1), dated the 27th April 1911.

On an appeal by the plaintiffs the District Judge observed in his judgment that, even if Karam Chand had no share in the shop, this would not have been a reason for dismissing the suit, but, he also held that Exhibit D 1 was not a Will, as, according to its terms, Karam Chand was to lose all his rights in his father's property from the date of the execution of the document, and that, therefore, the document, which purported to extinguish Karam Chand's rights in the property, required registration, and not having been registered was inadmissible in evidence. He held consequently that the plaintiffs were entitled to deduct Karam Chand's share from the consideration payable by them. With regard to the plea that Dharam Chand, defendant No. 1, who had effected the sale on behalf of his minor brothers defendants Nos. 2 and 3, was not competent to do so, the District Judge held that the transaction was for the benefit of the minors, since the shop was very narrow and could not be partitioned, and that in accordance with Mastu v. Nand Lal (1) the act of the de facto guardian could not now be impeached. He accordingly accepted the appeal and gave the plaintiffs a decree. Second appeals have been preferred to this Court, one by Dharam Chand (No. 3209 of 1918), and one by his brothers, Madan Lal and Harbans Lal (No. 2530 of 1918).

The first question is as to the construction to be placed on Exhibit D-1, which the appellants contend is a Will. It recites that from the day of its execution the executant, Ram Dat, ceases to have any connection with Karam Chand, that Karam Chand will also have no concern with any of Ram Dat's property, and that after the death of Ram Dat and his wife Karam Chand will have no rights as a son and the other sons will perform the funeral ceremonies. We agree with the learned District Judge that the meaning was that Karam Chand was to lose all his rights in his father's property from the date of the execution of the document, and that the recital that he would not have the rights of a son after Ram Dat's death referred to rights of a religious character and not to rights in the property. The document is, therefore, not a Will and the learned District Judge is right in holding it to be inadmissible in evidence for want of registration. It is ineffectual for another reason also, namely, that while it contains no mention of a gift of the property being made to any person, it purports to alter the rule of Hindu Law regarding succession. Such an attempt to alter the mode of succession is void as held by the Privy Council in Purna Sashi v. Kalihari Rai (2).

It is next contended for the appellants that the name of Karam Chand was entered in the deed of sale as one of the vendors after the execution had been completed, and that the deed is vitiated on that account. The fact is, however, that Karam Chand is mentioned as one of the vendors in the first part of the deed, but further on, as he was not present, it was stated that he was not a party to the sale and that Dharam Chand would get the vendees satisfied so far as Karam Chand was concerned. The evidence of the scribe, Hari Ram, shows that the deed remained with him after Dharam Chand had executed it, and that a few days later Karam Chand came to his shop with the plaintiff Labhu Ram and asked him to add his name to the deed. Hari Ram said he could not do this; so Karam Chand then took the deed and made an addition to it, in which he said that Dharam Chand could not give an assurance to the vendees on his behalf, and that he (Karam Chand) would be paid his share by them. After making this addition to the deed Karam Chand put his signature to it. The deed was produced for registration on the 29th September by the vendees' guardian and Karam Chand, who was present, admitted execution and said that he should be paid Rs. 618-12-0 for his share. Dharam Chand was not present on that day, but he appeared on the 16th October and admitted execution and on the 24th the deed was registered. No objection was raised by Dharam Chand when he appeared before the Registering Officer, and we think he cannot have been ignorant of the fact that Karam Chand had signed the deed, which presumably was read out to him. The addition made by Karam Chand was not, in our opinion, a material alteration which would vitiate the document.

In the appeal by the minors, Madan Lal and Harbans Lal, it is urged on their behalf that the sale is not for their benefit, and that their guardian was their mother, Sharam Kaur, and not their brother, Dharam Chand, who was, therefore, not competent to sell their share in the shop. The learned District Judge has, however, found as a fact that the transaction was for the benefit of the minors, since the shop is a very narrow one which it would be impracticable to partition, and this finding cannot be questioned in second appeal. It is contended that the property was worth much more than the amount for which it was sold, but there is only the statement of the minors' mother in support of this contention. It appears that as the shop could not be partitioned, the parties bid for it at the suggestion of Dina Nath (P. W. No. 2) and the plaintiffs made the highest bid. On the question of guardianship also there is a finding by the District Judge, for he says that as the transaction was for the benefit of the minors the act of the de facto guardian cannot be impeached, and this clearly implies a finding that Dharam Chand was the de facto, guardian. It is contended for the appellants that there is no evidence on the point, but we cannot agree with this contention, as there are statements made by the plaintiff's witnesses, Dina Nath, Keli Charan, and Dharam Chand, which justify the finding. The sale having been effected by the de facto guardian for the benefit of the minors must be held to be valid.

With regard to a plea that Musammat Sharam Kaur, the mother of defendants Nos. 1 to 3, spent Rs. 900 on rebuilding the shop, there is nothing but Musammat Sharam Kaur's own statement on the point, and we are not prepared to accept it. The appeals, therefore, fail and we dismiss them with costs.

Specific performance—Agreement to lease—Construction of agreement—Uncertain terms—Agreement "subject to" condition, meaning of—Agreement subject to "usual conditions", meaning of—Specific performance, whether can be enforced.

Plaintiff brought the present suit to enforce the specific performance of an agreement to let certain premises to him. The agreement ran as follows:—

"We agree to rent to Mr. Haji Shaikh Mahomed Shustary the top floor of our building under construction at Plot No. 3 Ballard Estate for a period of five years and five years' option at a monthly rent of Rs. 1,500 only from the date of the completion of the same subject to the conditions and entering into a regular lease. A deposit of three months' rent amounting to Rs. 4,500 only is paid on signing of this contract." Plaintiff obtained a decree in the Trial Court and on appeal by defendant.

Held, (1) that the document sued on was not a concluded agreement which the Court could direct to be specifically performed, because its terms were too uncertain to be reduced to a formal document, and that the document was merely the result of preliminary negotiations which defined a portion of the terms to appear in the lease as eventually settled, while it left a great many of the terms to be agreed upon thereafter; so that the final agreement between the parties depended on a regular lease

(2) that the effect of the words "subject to" was to introduce a condition or proviso to the effect that the final agreement between the parties depended on a regular lease to be executed later on. [p. 434, col. 1.]

Obiter:—Where an agreement recites that it is to be subject to "usual conditions," the meaning is that when those conditions came to be recorded, the draftsman would put down the usual covenants to be found in agreements of that nature, and that it would be open to the other side either to alter or add to those conditions, and it would be only when the draft had been finally agreed to that the terms of the lease could be ascertained. [p. 434, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decision of Mr. Justice Kajiji.

Sir Thomas Strangman, Advocate-General, Messrs. Colman and Campbell, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Inverarity, Mulla and Desai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff filed this suit for specific performance of an alleged agreement with the first and second defendants to let the third floor of a building on the Ballard Estate. The agreement which he asked the Court to specifically perform is at page 1, Part III, and runs as follows:—

"We agree to rent to Mr. Haji Shaikh Mahomed Shustary the top floor of our building under construction at Plot No. 3 Ballard Estate for a period of five years and five years' option at a monthly rent of Rs. 1,500 only from the date of the completion of the same subject to the conditions and entering into a regular lease. A deposit of three months' rent amounting to Re. 4,500 only is paid on signing of this contract."

The learned Judge has passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff, directing the defendants to specifically perform the agreement and execute in favour of the plaintiff a lease of the third floor of the building situated on the Ballard Estate for a term of five years from the date of the completion of the said building, with an option to the plaintiff for a further period of five years at a monthly rent of Rs. 1,500, such lease to contain the usual covenants.

The defendants have appealed.

GELA RAM V. DISTRICT BOARD, MUZAFFARGARH.

We are of opinion that the document, Exhibit A, could not be considered as a concluded agreement. First, it would be impossible for the parties to draw up a formal lease in accordance with this document because its terms are too uncertain to be reduced to a formal document, and, secondly, it contains the words "subject to the conditions and entering into a regular lease," which made the "entering into a regular lease" a condition precedent to the parties coming to a definite agreement. The learned Judge has considered that the words "subject to conditions" means "usual conditions", namely, conditions which have to be incorporated in a formal document when prepared by a Solicitor. But the word "usual" is not in the document, and, even if it were, it would only amount to this, that when a formal document came to be prepared, the draftsman could enter in the document the usual covenants which are to be found in leases of office buildings in Bombay, and it would be open to the other side either to alter or add to those conditions, and it would be only when the draft had been finally agreed to that the terms of the lease could be ascertained. But even if the nature of the conditions had been defined, and no room for further discussion was left, the words "subject to entering into a regular lease" would remain to be construed, and it is difficult to see how one could avoid bringing the case within the authority of Govind Laxman v. Hirchand Mancharam (1). In Winn v. Bull (2), Lley v. Newell (3) and Watson v. McAllum (4), it was held that the effect of the words "subject to" was to introduce a condition or proviso. It seems obvious to me, therefore, that this is a document which the Court cannot possibly direct to be specifically performed. It was merely the result of preliminary negotiations which defined a portion of the terms to appear in the lease as eventually settled, while it left a great many of the terms to be agreed upon thereafter; so that the final agreement between the parties depended on a regular lease which was to be executed. The appeal, therefore, must be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs throughout.

Trusts Act (II of 1892), s 77 (c)—Land given for public purpose—Trust—Public purpose, failure of—Trust, extinction of—Land, whether recoverable by donor.

Plaintiff gave a plot of land to a District Board for the purpose of being used as a connecting road to a public garden planted by the District Board; finding that the garden was not a success, the District Board sold the land on which it was planted to a third person, whereupon the plaintiff brought the present suit to recover the land given by him:

Held, that the land was held by the District Board as a trustee for the public and when the fulfilment of the purpose for which the land was given became impossible, the trust was then extinguished under section 77 (c) of the Trusts Act, and on the extinction of the trust the owner of the land was entitled to recover it [p. 435, col. 1.]

Lala Rama Nand, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. D. Qureshi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In 1903 two gardens were planted for the benefit of the public on land belonging to the District Board in a village in the Alipur Tahsil of the Muzaffargarh District, and land was also given by some of the proprietors of the village, including the plaintiff, for the purpose of a road to connect the gardens with the main road. After some years, as the gardens did not flourish, the land on which they had been planted was sold by the District Board of Muzaffargarh to one Mangi Ram.

MAHABIR MISSEK v. ASO KUER.

The plaintiff has now sued the District Board to recover possession of the land, 1 kanal 8 marlas in area, which he gave up for the road, on the ground that the land is no longer required for the purpose for which it was given. The Courts below have concurred in dismissing the suit, holding that, as the land was dedicated permanently to the public, and the public have been using it as a way ever since, the plaintiff is not entitled to get it back. The lower Appellate Court has also found that 14 marlas out of khasra No. 704, included in the land in suit, were already a road even before the gardens were made. The plaintiff has filed a second appeal in this Court.

The learned District Judge admits that if the land in suit had been given for the purpose of planting a garden the plaintiff would have been entitled to get it back when it ceased to be required for that purpose, but he thinks that the fact that the land was given, not for the purpose of a garden, but to serve as a road to the garden, makes a difference. I fail to see any material distinction between the two cases. The essential point is that the land has ceased to be required for the purpose for which it was given.

The land in suit having been given for the purpose of being used as a road to connect the main road with the public garden, was held by the District Board as a trustee for the public, and when the land on which the gardens were planted was sold to Mangu Ram and the gardens ceased to exist, the fulfilment of the purpose for which the land in suit had been given became impossible. The trust was then extinguished under section 77 (c) of the Indian Trusts Act, 11 of 1882, and on the extinction of the trust the owner of the property is entitled to recover it. In Nihal Chand v. Asmat Ali Khan (1) where land had ceased to be used as a public highway, and was granted by the Municipality to persons who proceeded to build thereon, it was held that the owners had a good cause of action against them for the demolition of the buildings and the restoration of the property to its original condition.

I hold, therefore, that the plaintiff is entitled to get back the land, with the exception of the 14 marlas which are found to have been a road even before the planting of the gardens.

(1) 7 A. 362; A. W. N. (1885) 56; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 592.

I do not agree with the appellant's contention that the District Judge has made a mistake with regard to the 14 marlas, for the entry in the Settlement Record for 1800 supports his finding.

I accordingly accept the appeal, reverse the decrees of the Courts below, and give the plaintiff a decree for possession of 14 marlas, namely, 8 marlas out of khasra No. 704 2 and 6 marlas out of khasra No. 707-2. The defendant will pay half of the plaintiff's costs throughout.

Appeal.

Mr. Murari Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Harihar Prasad Singh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for correction of certain entries made in the finally published Record of Right. We are in this appeal concerned only with two plots, vis, plot No. 1140 and plot No. 1138; plot No. 1140 being a house and plot No. 1138 being an orchard. The Court of first instance found in favour of the plaintiff in respect of these two plots of land. The lower Appellate Court, however, has reversed the decision of the Court of first instance.

The plaintiff claims as the chela of Janak Das in whose favour, according to him, there was a grant of certain lands by the predecessors in-title of the defendants. Both the Courts have come to the conclusion that the plaintiff is not the chela of Janak Das. That finding is a finding of fact which is binding on me in second appeal. But it is urged on behalf of the appellant that the plaintiff having been in possession of these two plots for some years and having pulled down the old building and built a new house on plot No. 1140 he is entitled to retain possession of these two plots of land. According to him there is no such thing as permissive possession under the Bengal Tenancy Act and that as he was a settled raiyat of the village he acquired an occupancy right to these plots by being allowed by the landlord to retain possession of them. Now, in my opinion, the appellant cannot be regarded as a tenant at all. A 'tenant' as defined in the Bengal Tenancy Act "is a person who holds land under another person and is, or but for a special contract would be, liable to pay rent for that land to that person." The learned Judge in the Court below has come to the conclusion that the plaintiff did not hold any land under the defendants and that it has not been suggested that there was any special contract between the plaintiff and the defendants. The plaintiff would, therefore, not be liable to pay any rent for that land to the defendants. The Bengal Tenancy Act is in no sense exhaustive. It may be that the plaintiff, who looked after Jansak Das during his lifetime, was allowed by the defendants to retain possession to these plots of land. As regards the case of the plaintiff, that he built the house, on plot No. 1140, the lower Appellate Court has found against him. The learned Vakil for the appellant contends that the learned Judge in the Court below misread the documents which were filed on his behalf. That may be so but we are not in second appeal entitled to reverse the decision of the lower Appellate Court merely on the ground that it misread the evidence that was adduced on behalf of the plaintiff. The documents, upon which the learned Vakil for the appellant rely, are not documents of title and accordingly misconstruction of these documents is not a point of law which would justify this Court in interfering with the decision of the Court below.

In my opinion, the appeal involves questions of facts and as these facts have been decided against the appellant by the learned Judge in the Court below I must dismiss this appeal and dismiss it with costs. The analogous appeal is not pressed. That appeal, v.z., Second Appeal No. 101 of 1.20, must also be dismissed but without costs.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit of the usual type for a declaration to the effect that the sale deed dated the 12th July 1911 executed by the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 in respect of land measuring 9 bighas 10 biswas and 12 biswas situate in the village of Hisswal in favour of the defendants Nos. 4 to 5 for Rs. 4,000 shall not affect the interests of the plaintiff's reversioners after the death of the vendors, because the land sold was ancestral property and the transfer was made without consideration and necessity. The plaintiff Niranjana Singh is the son of Roda, one of the vendors. The ancestral character of the property was admitted, but consideration and necessity were pleaded. The defendants also pleaded that they had sunk a well on the land in dispute and were entitled to be re-imbursed for the costs incurred in the case of the alienation being set aside. The major portion of the consideration for the sale consisted of amounts due on previous mortgages. The Court of first instance found that with the exception of two items of Rs. 350 and Rs. 200, total Rs. 550 the rest of the consideration and the necessity for the alienation had been established. The portion of the consideration unproved being less than 1/7th of the whole consideration, it held that it was not a case in which the sale should be converted into a mortgage. The suit was accordingly dismissed. Both parties appealed; the plaintiff reiterating his objections as to the reality of the consideration and the existence of necessity for the alienation and the defendants objecting to the order of the Trial Court disallowing their costs. The lower Appellate Court after considering the evidence with respect to the different items of the consideration came to the conclusion that only Rs. 2,975 had validly been established and necessity for the alienation to that extent only had been made out. The plaintiff's appeal was accordingly accepted with costs, sale transaction was converted into a mortgage and the plaintiff was authorised to get back the property on payment of the above mentioned amount to the defendants vendee, Bhagwan Singh and Harnam Singh, after the death of the vendors. Out of the unsecured debts the lower Appellate Court disallowed three items, namely, Rs. 105, Rs. 95 and Rs. 350. Out of the secured debts it disallowed the item of Rs. 475 said to have been due to one Nikka under an oral mortgage, the mutation in respect of which was sanctioned on the 22nd March 1911. Altogether Rs. 925 were said to be due to Nikka, namely, Rs. 450 under a registered mortgage and Rs. 475 under an alleged oral mortgage. The item due under the registered mortgage has been allowed by the lower Appellate Court, but that said to be due under the oral mortgage has been disallowed. The plaintiff-appellant in his memorandum of appeal to this Court challenges the findings of the lower Appellate Court in respect of all the four items which have been disallowed by that Court. It has been strongly contended by Mr. Tek Chand that the finding in respect of Rs. 475 has been recorded by the lower Appellate Court without taking into consideration the evidence produced by the defendant. He puts his case thus:—that dealings between the vendors and Nikka commenced in July 1907, that in July 1908 and July 1909 balances were struck in the account book of Nikka and were thumb-marked by the vendors, that in July 1910 Rs. 407-11-0 were shown as being due, that on the 9th October 1910 the three vendors appeared before the Revenue Court and got the entry with respect to the alleged oral mortgage made and that the mutation as to the said mortgage was sanctioned on the 22nd March 1911. The learned Vakil further pointed out that Nikka and his son Parsma were examined as witnesses to prove this oral mortgage, and that in addition to this Daulat Ram, the writer of the account-book, was also called to prove the entries in the baki and also the thumb marks of the vendors. Roda, father of the plaintiff, was also called as a witness. The learned Vakil contended that if the lower Appellate Court had taken into consideration all this evidence, it could have come to no other conclusions than that Rs. 475 were due to Nikka and that the alleged oral mortgage represented a genuine transaction, and that consequently both consideration and necessity had been established in respect of Rs. 475. Now the finding of the lower Appellate Court in respect of this item is recorded in the following words:—

“Out of the mortgage-money, the item of Rs. 475 seems to be a fictitious one. No oral agreement is satisfactorily proved. No payment is established and no necessity is proved. This item, though it might have been paid by the vendor, is not chargeable on the property as he does not seem to have made proper enquiry as to its being a just antecedent debt. The very report of the Patwari makes it suspicious.”

It is impossible to say that, in arriving at this conclusion, the learned Judge of the Court below did not consider the evidence adduced on behalf of the defendant to establish this item and the necessity for the transaction. It is quite possible that, if we were to examine the evidence on the point, we may arrive at a different conclusion from that arrived at by the lower Appellate Court, but the question is whether it is open to us to adopt this course. The second appeal section 584 of the old Code of Civil

NAZIR HUSSAIN v. MUHAMMAD EJAZ HUSSAIN.

Procedure was the subject of consideration by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Durga Chowdhuri v. Jewahir Singh Chowdhuri (1), and their Lordships at page 29 made the following weighty pronouncement as to the power of a High Court to interfere with the findings of fact recorded by the first Appellate Court:—

"The lower Appellate Court, it was said, had clearly misapprehended the effect of the Settlement proceedings in 1864; undue weight had been attached to the registration in Beni Singh's sole name; the oral evidence had been wholly discarded; sufficient weight had not been given to the important statement in Beni Singh's petition, or to the separate dealings of his two sons; the Court had thus been led to misconceive the case entirely, and to find for the defendant when the finding should have been for the plaintiff.

"It would be an unprofitable task to inquire how far this contention is well founded, because their Lordships cannot accept the rulings of the High Courts of Calcutta and Allahabad as a correct statement of the law. Nothing can be clearer than the declaration in the Civil Procedure Code that no second appeal will lie except on the grounds specified in section 584. No Court in India or elsewhere has power to add to or enlarge those grounds. It is always dangerous to paraphrase an enactment, and not the less so if the enactment is perhaps not altogether happily expressed. Their Lordships will, therefore, not attempt to translate into other words the language of section 584. It is enough in the present case to say that an erroneous finding of fact is a different thing from an error or defect in procedure, and that there is no jurisdiction to entertain a second appeal on the ground of an erroneous finding of fact, however gross or inexcusable the error may seem to be. Where there is no error or defect in the procedure, the finding of the first Appellate Court upon a question of fact is final, if that Court had before it evidence.....in support of the finding."

We are asked in this case to do exactly what their Lordships of the Privy Council have said we cannot do. Mr. Tek Chand admits it frankly that he is impugning a finding of fact but says that he has a right to do so as the evidence adduced by his clients has not been considered and due weight has not been given to it. It is possible that the finding is erroneous and the error committed is gross and inexcusable but, have we the jurisdiction to correct the error by recording a finding of fact ourselves? It is obvious that we have no jurisdiction to do so. In order to get round this finding of fact Mr. Tek Chand has earnestly asked us to hold that the finding recorded by the lower Appellate Court is no finding at all and that, therefore, we can look into the evidence and record a finding ourselves. If this course be open to us to adopt, a High Court may a same jurisdiction to interfere with the finding of fact in any case by simply remarking that the finding of the lower Appellate Court is no finding at all. In our opinion to adopt the course suggested would be highly dangerous and opposed to the spirit of the injunctions laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in various rulings. The findings with regard to the remaining items disallowed by the lower Appellate Court have not been seriously challenged. The result is, that the decree of the lower Appellate Court must be upheld. The question of the compensation for improvements is not seriously pressed, nor does it arise at this stage. We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.

COURT, J.—This is an application in revision arising out of an execution matter. It appears that Ejaz Hussain obtained a decree against Nazir Hussain. He filed an application to execute his decree against certain property in possession of the judgment-debtor, Nazir Hussain. Nazir objected that the property was waqf property. This objection was allowed by the Court of first instance but on appeal to the District Judge that order has been set aside and execution has been ordered to proceed against the property in respect of which the objection was made.

The application made by the judgment-debtor to the Mansif, that the property which had been attached was waqf property, was headed as being an application under sections 47 and 151 of the Civil Procedure Code. It is contended, however, that the application was not one under section 47, Civil Procedure Code, but was an application under O. XXI, r. 58, and that consequently no appeal lay to the District Judge and the order passed by him is without jurisdiction. The only question for consideration now is whether the application is one under section 47, Civil Procedure Code, or one under O. XXI, r. 58. To my mind there can be no doubt that the application was in fact one under O. XXI, r. 58; and if authority be needed in support of this view it is afforded by the decisions in the cases of Kartick Chandra Ghose v. Ashutosh Dhara (1) and Upendra Nath Kalamuri v. Kusum (1) 12 Ind. Cas. 163; 39 C. 298; 14 C. L. J. 425; 16 C. W. N. 26.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—"Birt," right to, whether property—Suit for possession of "birt," whether maintainable.

The so-called right on the part of a "prohit" to "birt" is, in law, no right at all and does not amount to "property" for the purposes of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. It is a mere spes successionis or contingent right, which is dependent for its existence on the pleasure of the "jajmans."

Gurdas v. Bhog, 11 Ind. Cas. 231; 96 P. R. 191; 148 P. W. R. 191; 216 P. L. R. 191, followed.

A suit, therefore, for possession of "birt" is not maintainable.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Kangra, dated the 30th August 1920, affirming that of the Mansif, First Class, Kangra, dated the 24th June 1920.

Lala Jagin Nath, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. L. Puri, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The parties are Brahmans, and the plaintiffs sue for possession of "birt" which their collateral Ghasi Ram sold, challenging the validity of the sale.

The lower Courts have dismissed the suit, finding (1) that the right to the "birt" is not proved to be ancestral, and (2) that the suit does not lie. The plaintiffs have filed a second appeal.

The finding by the lower Appellate Court, that the right to the "birt" is not proved to be ancestral is alone sufficient for the dismissal of this appeal, as the finding is one of fact.

The decision that the suit does not lie is, also correct, it having been held in Gurdas v. Bhag (1) that the so-called right on the part of a "prohit" to "birt" is, in law, no right at all and does not amount to "property" for the purposes of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, but it is a mere ius successionis or contingent right, which is dependent for its existence on the pleasure of the "rajmans".

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

— DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Chaukidari chakran lands—Resumption by Government—Putnidar's right to retain possession on payment of the revenue assessed—Zemindar, whether entitled to additional rent—Putni contract—Bengal Village Chaukidari Act (VI of 1870), s 51.

On resumption and settlement of chaukidari chakran lands a putnidar is entitled to obtain possession of the same on payment of the additional revenue assessed by Government and is not liable to pay additional rent in respect of these lands to the zemindar, if those lands were included in the original putni lease granted to him. [p. 443, col. 1.]

Ranjit Singh Bahadur v. Kali Dasi Devi, 40 Ind. Cas. 981; 44 C. 841; 21 O. W. N. 609; 32 M. L. J. 595; 15 A. 1. J. 350; 25 C. L. J. 439; 19 Bom. L. R. 463; 119.7 M. W. N. 479; 6 I. W. 101; 2 P. L. Bejoy Chand v. Krishna Chandra, 66 Ind. Cas. 357; 34 C. L. J. 27, referred to.

Upon the resumption of chaukidari chakran lands by Government the rights of the putnidar are those conferred on him by the estate and interest created by the putni lease; and it is this right which is kept alive by section 51 of the Bengal Village Chaukidari Act, VI of 1870. Consequently the zemindar cannot claim to vary the putni by enhancing the rent in respect of lands which were included in the original demise even though the profits of those lands were not taken into account in fixing the rent. [p. 442, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Birbhum, dated the 13th September 1919, affirming a decision of the First Munsif at Rampurhat, dated the 30th September 1910.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. B. Chakrabarty, (with him Babus Brojbal Chakrabarty and Enul Kumar Bose), for the Appellant.—The point is this. There was putni grant of five mautas in favour of the appellant by a document of 1853. Certain chaukidari chakran lands were included within the putni, which were resumed by Government under the provision of Bengal Village Chaukidari Act, VI of 1870. It is not disputed that the lands in question were included in the original putni patti. The sole question is whether the putnidar in obtaining possession is liable to pay anything more than the Government revenue assessed on these lands. The putnidars were receiving services from the chaukidars who held those lands and whose duties were partially public and partially in favour of the putnidars who took the place of the Zemindars.

The question in each case is mainly a question of contract. Reads the putni grant. It is abundantly clear that nothing was reserved to the Zemindar. The first case to which I would draw your Lordships' attention is that reported in Nalinakhyi Basu v. Bejoy Chand Mahatap (1). The next case on which I rely is Monohar Mukherjee v. Kali Das Nandi (2). Reads the argument of the Vakil for the appellant. Unless the right to additional rent is reserved the Zemindar has no right to it. The Zemindar is not entitled to anything more than what has been assessed upon resumption. Refers to Nafar Chandra Chandra v. Bejoy Chand (3), Kali

NARAPAT SINGH & BHUPENDRA NARAYAN SINGH,

Newaz Khoda v. Ram Jadu Dey (4). Hari Narain Mozumdar v. Mukund Lal Mundal (5) has been distinguished in Kazi Newaz Khoda v. Ram Jadu Dey (4). Under the Statute as well as under the grant I am bound to pay the additional revenue but nothing more. There is a case in Khondkar Mehdi Hossein v. Umesh Chandra (6) which points out that the case in Hari Narain Mozumdar v. Mukund Lal Mundal (5) does not lay down any general principle. The matter must depend on the contract between the parties and the course of dealing with the property. Refers to Rajendra Nath Mukerjee v. Hira Lal Mukerjee (7), Gopendra Ohandra Mitter v. Taroprasanna Mukerjee (8).

Babu Mahendranath Ray (with him Babu Hemendranath Sen and Priya Sankar Maunadar), for the Respondent.—The question before your Lordships is a very important one. The Courts here have laid down certain general principles governing cases of this character. The assets upon which the putni rent is assessed is based upon the amount of rent collected from the tenants minus the collection charges. The first question is who is entitled to the lands. The law on the point is settled. The next question is upon what terms is the putnidar entitled to the lands.

[GRAVES, J.—If unless expressly excluded the chakran lands pass to the putnidar, then on what principle is the Zamindar entitled to rent?]

The reason of the decision on the question of the passing of the chakran lands is stated in Ranjit Singh Bahadur v. Kali Dasi Debi (9).

The question, vis-à-vis, is the putnidar entitled to hold the chakran lands without payment of additional rent? Two views are possible—either the contract was contract or if the rent was fixed with reference to the income derived, the putnidar would be entitled to hold it only on payment of additional rent.

[GHOSE, J.—Can the Court make a new contract for the parties?]

It would not be making a new contract but interpreting the contract. And your Lordships cannot lightly brush aside a current of decisions in my favour beginning with Hari Narain Mozumdar v. Mukund Lal Mundal (5). The contract cannot hold good in respect of lands whose assets were not taken into account in settling the rent. The reasonable view is that the putnidar is liable to pay a share of the profits to the Zamindar. The case will not be a case of variation of a contract but will cover a case not contemplated by the parties, so far as the payment of rent is concerned. Refer to Kazi Newaz Khoda v. Ram Jadu Dey (4), Ranjit Singh Bahadur v. Mahera Bahadur Singh (10). I am not arguing that the putni grant was a contract to assign and not an assignment. What I am arguing is that the terms of the assignment do not cover a contingency like the present. The question is when the putni rent was fixed was the matter in the contemplation of the parties. The highest judicial authority has pronounced that the resumption of the chaukidari chakran lands could not have been in the contemplation of the parties at the time of the putni grant. Reads Ranjit Singh Bahadur v. Kali Dasi Debi (9). The question of the liability of the putnidar to pay rent in respect of the resumed lands stands quite independent of the assignment of those lands. On the same principle as these lands are liable to assessment of revenue, they are also liable to assessment of rent. Reads Hari Das Goswami v. Nistarini Gupta (11), Rajendra Nath Mukerjee v. Hira Lal Mukerjee (7), Gopendra Ohandra Mitter v. Taroprasanna Mukerjee (8). Refers to Khondkar Mehdi Hossein v. Umesh Ohandra (6). The position is summed up in Bejoy Ohand v. Krishna Ohandra (12). Upon precedent as well as on principle it is clear that the Zamindar has the right to claim a portion of the rent realized by the putnidar from the tenants over and above the revenue payable to the chaukidari chakran fund.

NARAPAT SINGH v. BRUPENDRA NARAYAN SINGH.

Mr. B. Chakrabarty in reply.—Until the two decisions of the Privy Council in Ranjit Singh Bahadur v. Kali Dasi Debi (9) and Ranjit Singh Bahadur v. Maharaj Bahadur Singh (10) came out there apparently was a considerable amount of doubt with regard to the word 'contract' used in section 51 of Bengal Village Chaukidari Act, VI of 1870. My short point is this. The title to the land passed to the Zamindar at the time of the Permanent Settlement. Confusion has arisen by reason of the idea that there was an acquisition to the Zamindar. Under the Statute it was only clogged with liability to further assessment. The land which was transferred remained the land of the Zamindar. If there was no reservation in the putni grant the putnidar gets into the shoes of the Zamindar. Read Ranjit Singh Bahadur v. Maharaj Bahadur Singh (10). There was nothing annexed under the putni contract. It was a real right conferred upon the putnidar. It has to be enforced not by a suit for specific performance of contract but by a suit for possession. Read Ranjit Singh Bahadur v. Kali Dasi Debi (9). The confusion has been caused by the expression "transfer after resumption," as if on resumption the Government became owner who transfers to the Zamindar. It is not a new right. It is a confirmation and continuation of an old right created at the time of the Permanent Settlement.

JUDGMENT.—These appeals are preferred by the plaintiff against decisions of the District Judge of Barbhui affirming decision of the First Munsif at Rampurhat.

The suits were brought to recover khās possession of certain resumed chaukidari chakran lands together with mesne profits. The plaintiff claimed these lands as included in the putni taluk granted to his predecessors-in-interest by the first defendant, who is the Zamindar, by a putni patta of the year 1853, the Bengali date being the 29th Kartik 1260. It is not disputed that the lands in question were included in the putni patta but it is said that these lands were not taken into account in settling the rent payable under the patta and that consequently the Zamindar, the respondent, is entitled to a share of the rent derived from settling the resumed lands with tenants. No dispute arises with regard to the payment of the Government revenue which has been assessed on the resumed lands and which, under the terms of the putni patta, is payable by the appellant. It is conceded that, from the time of the creation of the putni until the lands were resumed, the chowkidars rendered private personal service to the putnidar and not to the Zamindar.

The First Court declared the appellant's title to the lands in suit and decreed khās possession on condition that the appellant paid to the Zamindar in respect of the resumed lands an additional rent to that named in the putni patta. The appellant was awarded mesne profits. The District Judge affirmed this decision and remanded the cases to the First Court (1) for determination of the conditions and terms under which the putnidar was to hold the lands under the Zamindar, (2) for the ascertainment of mesne profits.

The appellant resists the Zamindar's right to share in the rents and profits derived from the settlement of the resumed lands, firstly, on the ground that the lands are comprised in the putni patta and that consequently the rents and profits are his, secondly, on the ground that these rents and profits must be taken as the equivalent of the personal service formerly rendered to him by the chaukidars prior to the resumption.

The Zamindar respondent, as already stated, claims a share of the rents and profits as he says that these lands were never taken into account when the jama was fixed and he relies on a long series of decisions, to which we have been referred, as establishing the Zamindar's right to a share of the rents and profits, in addition to the amount payable to the chaukidari fund under the provisions of Act VI of 1870, unless it can be shown that the lands were taken into account in fixing the jama when the putni was created. These decisions have recently been considered and followed in the case of Bejoy Chand v. Krishna Chand (12) which was decided in December 1920, and no useful purpose would, we think, be served by going through them again. They undoubtedly do support the contention urged before us on behalf of the Zamindar respondent and it is useless to suggest that they are, in the main distinguishable from the cases before us. But, with the exception of the case of Bejoy Chand v. Krishna Chand (12) above referred to, they were all decided prior to the decisions of the Judicial Committee in Ranjit Singh Bahadur v. Kali Dasi Debi (9).

PARDUMAN SINGH v. PIONEER JEWELLERY CO. LTD.

and Banitt Singh Bahadur v. Maharaj Bahadur Singh (10). By the first of these decisions it was for the first time finally established that the Zemindar at the time of the Permanent Settlement obtained or retained in the chaukidari chukran lands situate within the territorial boundaries of a village comprised in his Zemindari an interest capable of being made the subject of a patni lease and in Banitt Singh Bahadur v. Maharaj Bahadur Singh (10) ubi supra, where the nature of the patnidar's rights in resumed chaukidari chukran lands was considered, it was laid down that upon the resumption of such lands by Government the rights of the patnidar were those conferred on him by the estate and interest created by the patni lease and that it was this right which was kept alive by section 51 of Bengal Act VI of 1870.

By the joint effect of these decisions the patnidar's interest in such lands if, as here, they are comprised in his patni is derived from the patni itself and from nothing else. This being so it is difficult to see on what principle the Zemindar can claim to vary the patni by enhancing the rent in respect of lands which were included in the original demise even assuming that the profits of these lands were not taken into account in fixing the rent. The learned Vakil for the respondent has not been able to suggest to us any principle, although by way of analogy he prays in aid the assessment by Government of additional revenue in respect of these lands. This analogy, however, cannot assist him as the Government's right to make such assessment is derived from the provisions of Act VI of 1870 and is, therefore, a right conferred by Statute.

Under the circumstances stated above we do not think that the decisions relied on by the respondent Zemindar can be taken now to be correct and the case of Bejoy Chand v. Krishna Chand (12), (ubi supra), admittedly only follows these decisions. We think it would not be correct to say that the patnidar is only entitled to obtain possession on terms and that the Court is to assess rent on these lands when it has been held that his title accrued from the time of the patni settlement. We agree with the decisions in the cases of Nalinakha Basu v. Biroy Chand Mahatap (1) and Monohar Mukherjee v. Kali

Das Nandi (2). In the result these appeals succeed and we set aside that portion of the decision of the District Judge which remands the cases to the original Court to determine the conditions and terms under which the patnidar is to hold the lands under the Zemindar. The rest of the remand order will stand. That portion of the Muniri's decrees which imposes on the appellant, as a condition of obtaining khass possession, the payment of additional rent to the Zemindar respondent will be set aside. The appellants will be entitled to their costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court.

DEB. OR.—APPELLANT

THE PIONEER JEWELLERY COMPANY, LIMITED, IN LIQUIDATION, AND OTHERS
—DEB. OR.—RESPONDENTS.

Companies Act (VI of 1882), s. 150, 156—Payment order, assignee of, right to enforce.

A person to whom the Liquidator of a Company has transferred a payment order made by the Court under section 150 of the Companies Act, 1882, against a contributory, is entitled to invoke the summary jurisdiction of the Court for the purpose of recovering the money due from the latter; the fact that the Company has been finally dissolved would not prevent the assignee from seeking relief from the Liquidation Court, and render it necessary for him to bring an action for the recovery of the money.

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the District Judge in charge of Liquidation Work, Lahore, dated the 8th June 1920.

Lala Har Gopal, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. K. Mukerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of proceedings in the winding-up of the Pioneer Jewellery Company; and the questions of law, upon which we are invited to express our opinion, are:—

(1) Whether a person, to whom the Liquidator has transferred a payment order made by the Court under section 10 of the Indian Companies Act, VI of 1882, against a contributory, is entitled to invoke the summary jurisdiction of the Court for the purpose of recovering the money due from the latter; and

(2) Whether the circumstance that the Company has been finally dissolved prevents the assignee from seeking relief from the Liquidation Court and renders it necessary for him to bring an action for the recovery of the money.

The District Judge has answered both the questions in favour of the assignee, and after hearing arguments we are not prepared to dissent from the view taken by the learned Judge.

As regards the first question, it is to be remembered that the Court had already passed a payment order in favour of the Liquidator, and it is conceded that the latter would have been entitled to recover the money from the contributory by asking the Court to enforce that order in the same manner in which a decree of the Court made in a suit can be enforced, vide section 163 of the Indian Companies Act. It is true that a payment order is not a decree, but that section provides that it is to be executed in the same manner in which a decree can be executed. There is no valid reason why the person, to whom the Liquidator has assigned a payment order, should not stand in the shoes of his assignors, and should not avail himself of the remedy which was open to the latter. Whether a person who purchases the assets of a Company before any payment order has been made in respect of those assets should be entitled to the summary remedy prescribed by the aforesaid section is a question which does not arise in this case; and we do not, therefore, consider it necessary to decide whether the judgment in Doaba Bank v. Kundan Lal (1) which answers this question in the negative is a correct exposition of the law on the subject. As pointed out above, the respondent in this case has got a payment order, and he asks the Court to exercise in his favour the same jurisdiction as it would have exercised at the instance of his predecessor—in title. No cogent reason has been shown for placing the assignee in a worse position.

The second question is not free from difficulty. It is true that section 159 requires the Court to pass an order of dissolution when the affairs of the Company have been completely wound up, and there is authority for the view that unless and until the order of dissolution has been set aside, it prevents any proceedings being taken against the promoters, directors or officers of the Company in respect of any misfeasance or breach of trust, or a creditor proving a debt against the Company, vide Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume V, page 567. But in the case before us the Liquidation Court has already passed an order of payment, and if that Court is in existence, there is nothing in the law to prevent it from enforcing its own order. Though the Company is defunct, the Court has not ceased to exist; and we cannot, therefore, hold that the learned District Judge had no jurisdiction to enforce the payment order made by him.

For the afore-said reasons we dismiss the appeal with costs.

MAHMUD ALI KHAN alias AGHA ALI KHAN AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS.

Benami—Registered partition-deed—Co-sharers—Burden of proof—Limitation and adverse possession—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 14, 14A.

The burden of proving that the grant of a share to a person by a registered partition-deed was benami for another lies on the person alleging it. [p. 451, col. 1.]

To prove dispossession and adverse possession against such person clothed with all the insignia of beneficial ownership, very strong and reliable evidence should be required. Limitation against a co-sharer does not begin to run until his title is openly denied. [p. 451, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal from a decree of the Allahabad High Court, dated the 10th November 1915, reversing that of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Cawnpore.

ARAB ALI KHAN v. MAHMUD ALI KHAN.

FACTS.—The appellant instituted the present suit for declaration of his title and for possession, if the Court thought that he was not in possession. The Trial Judge decreed his claim but the High Court dismissed his suit on the ground that he failed to prove satisfactorily that he was in receipt of rents or profits within twelve years prior to suit. Hence the present appeal.

The facts are fully set out in the judgment of the Judicial Committee.

Mr. Narasimham, for the Appellant.—The appellant bases his title upon the registered partition-deed of 1889. In pursuance of that deed, the appellant's name was entered in the revenue registers on the joint application of all the parties to the deed. This entry was continued and not challenged till 1904 when the respondent applied to have the appellant's name struck out from the revenue registers. The ground alleged was that the appellant's name was entered in the partition-deed of 1889 benami for Panah Ali Khan through whom the respondent claims the property. The plea that the appellant never received rents nor profits of the property in dispute is opposed to the several statements of Panah Ali himself before 1904 and the accounts produced in the case. These accounts show that the agents of Panah Ali and the appellant remitted moneys to both of them on account of the collections from the suit properties and they were admittedly signed by Panah Ali and the appellant. No adverse possession was set up before 1904 and the suit was instituted in 1911. According to the partition deed of 1889 the appellant was entitled to a one-third share and his name continues on the revenue registers for such share to the present time. The onus of proving that the appellant was only a benamidar is on the respondent. Hardit Singh v. Gurmukh Singh decided by this Board on the 29th January 1908 and Kuthali Moothavar v. Peringati Kunharankutty (1). There was no proof at all. The High Court judgment is difficult to follow. It seems to have been based on the supposition that the transaction of 1889 must have been of a benami character. That is clearly wrong. The reason given by the respondent and Panah Ali before him, to have the appellant's name entered in the partition-deed, was that Panah wanted to defraud his brothers and get a larger share for himself. But Panah even after the death of his brothers admitted that the appellant was his co sharer.

Mr. Dunn, K. C. (with him Mr. Dube), for the Respondents.—The High Court had not gone into the material point. Our case is that the appellant had no title whatever and that he was only a benamidar for Panah. He was never a co-sharer. The Trial Court held against us on this point. The High Court had not found upon it. It had not gone into the question whether the transaction evidenced by the partition deed was real or not. The fact that the appellant was never paid rents or profits is strong evidence that he was not a co sharer.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—You cannot prove the benami nature of the transaction without asking us to accept the reason given by your client that he was committing a fraud.]

Mr. Narasimham for the Appellant was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.

LORD ATKINSON.—This is an appeal from a judgment and decree, dated the 16th November 1915, of the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad, which reversed a judgment and decree, dated the 30th April 1913, of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore.

The action out of which the appeal has arisen was an ejectment brought by Arab Ali Khan, the appellant, to recover possession of certain property, described in a list attached to the plaint. The defendants filed separate written statements in the usual course. In addition to denying the plaintiff's claim, they pleaded, (1) that the transaction embodied in a certain partition-deed, dated the 13th March 1889, was, on the part of his grand uncle Panah Ali Khan, a benami transaction; (2) that it was never acted upon or given effect to, and was void; and (3) that the plaintiff never had possession of the property in dispute and that his claim was barred by limitation and adverse possession. Several issues were framed upon these pleadings by the Additional Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore. Of these the two following are the most material for the purposes of this appeal, (1) Whether the tikainnama, dated the 13th March, 1889, was an agreement by way of family settlement and was enforced; (2) the compound issue whether or not the plaintiff was in possession of the property sued for within twelve years prior to the institution of the suit, whether the defendant and his predecessors have been in adverse possession of it for more than twelve years, and whether or not the suit is barred by limitation.

On the first issue this learned Judge found that—

"The partition deed of the 13th March 1889 was an agreement for consideration and was entered into by way of a family arrangement, and that it was substantially enforced by the parties thereto, although the oral Will of Ummad Ali Khan mentioned in the deed might never have existed or was never made."

On the second issue he found in favour of the plaintiff that his suit was not barred by time, and made a decree for possession of all the properties mentioned in the list B, annexed to the plaint, with the exception of one Chitaura, and as to another, Garwal, he gave the plaintiff a decree for a 4 annas share. On appeal to the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad, the learned Chief Justice and the Hon. Muhammad Rafique, Judge, thereof held, apparently, that the deed of the 13th March 1889 had been acted upon and was a valid instrument, but reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge on the ground, as stated in their judgment, that it had been shown to their satisfaction that the plaintiff had never received any of the rents or profits of the land sought to be recovered, but that these were always received by Panah Ali Khan for his own use and benefit. They, therefore, allowed the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below, and dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs in both Courts.

It is not very clear to their Lordships whether the learned Judges of the High Court meant to hold that the transaction carried out by the deed of the 13th March 1889 was as between Panah Ali Khan and Arab Ali Khan a mere benami transaction, Arab Ali Khan being the benamidar; or whether the plaintiff's right to recover the property in suit, even if he were the absolute owner of it under this partition deed, was, owing to the non receipt of the rent and profits of it, barred by limitation.

From the following passage in their judgment their Lordships are inclined to think that they took the latter view:—

"The defence cannot claim that the deed was never acted upon at all. It undoubtedly was acted upon fully with regard to Fazal Ali Khan and Madad Ali Khan, two of the brothers of Ummad Ali Khan. It was acted also in respect of the plaintiff Arab Ali Khan to this extent, that mutation of names was made in his favour in accordance with its terms. We think that this case should be decided in the plaintiff's favour if we can find on the evidence that he was in receipt of the rents and profits either directly or through Panah Ali Khan. On the other hand, we think that the plaintiff's suit should be dismissed if we come to the conclusion that he never received these rents and profits but that they were always received by Panah Ali Khan for his own use and benefit. It is not pretended that Panah Ali Khan stood in loco parentis to Arab Ali Khan. They may no doubt have been (and there is reason for believing that they were) on friendly terms. In fact the fact of Panah Ali Khan was that Arab Ali Khan had agreed to lend his name with a view to Panah Ali Khan getting a larger share in the estate of Ummad Ali Khan than he would have got under the Muhammadan Law. But Arab Ali Khan did not live with his uncle Panah Ali Khan. In his evidence he stated that he had lived with his 'mother, father and grandfather.' He also said that after the death of Ummad Ali Khan his business was done by Panah Ali Khan and Fazal Ali Khan. We mention this because if we had found that Arab Ali Khan lived more or less jointly with Panah Ali Khan, the receipt of the rents and profits by Panah Ali Khan might be said to be the receipt thereof for himself and Arab Ali Khan. This, however, is not the plaintiff's case."

With all respect to the learned Judges of the High Court, their Lordships are unable to concur with them in thinking that the evidence, when carefully examined, established either that Arab Ali Khan was by the deed of the 13th March 1889 constituted in respect of the property in suit merely the benamidar of Panah Ali Khan or that his right as plaintiff in this ejectment to recover that property was barred by limitation. The relation in which the parties to this deed stood to each other is shown by the following pedigree:—

Ummad Ali Khan, the eldest son of Wali Bakhs Khan, died childless on the 26th February 1888, leaving his three brothers surviving him. Aulya Begam, his sister, the grandmother of Arab Ali Khan, predeceased her brother, Ummad Ali Khan. The plaintiff was consequently not one of the heirs of the latter.

On the 11th January 1889 the three brothers, Panah Ali Khan, Fazal Ali Khan and Madad Ali Khan, executed an agreement by which they granted a maintenance allowance to one Najaf Ali Khan, and his heirs, and charged the property left by Ummad Ali Khan deceased with the payment of this maintenance allowance. On the 13th March 1889 the same three brothers and Arab Ali Khan executed the deed of partition by which they divided amongst them this same property, a 4-annas share in Mauza Mandauli, part thereof being allotted to Arab Ali Khan.

This is the property in suit.

It is not suggested on behalf of any person interested that Ummad Ali Khan deceased ever made a written Will in favour of Arab Ali Khan, but, with a view possibly of gaining priority over the charge upon the property of the deceased imposed by the deed of the 11th January 1889, it has been stoutly and persistently contended by Arab Ali Khan, and apparently by the brothers of the deceased, that the latter made an oral Will whereby he, amongst other things, devised to Arab Ali Khan the property in suit. The deed of partition of the 13th March 1889 purports to be made to carry out this oral Will, but in neither this case nor in the several other suits referred to in this case has this story as to the making of an oral Will been accepted. Several schedules, styled "specifications," are attached to the partition deed of the 13th March, 1889. One of them deals with the enumerated annas of Mauza Manduli, with Gadhiwa Majhgawan, permanent and fluctuating, of Ummad Ali Khan, Chak Teni, situated in Pargana Hatgaon, Khas Manpatti Adhar Singh Taraf Zorawar Singh, Ladhaura and Khairi Rawat, all in Pargana Hatgaon, and with Sichauli Pargana, District Fatehpur and Ranipur Pargana Dha'a, District Fatehpur. These names become matters of importance in dealing with the accounts of income and expenditure for the year 1893, which have been given in evidence. The Government revenue of them is stated to be Rs. 2,032-4-0.

This schedule is headed thus —

"Specification of the property which shall remain in proprietary possession of Fazal Ali Khan, Panah Ali Khan and Arab Ali Khan alias Ehsan Ali Khan without the participation of Madad Ali Khan who shall have nothing to do with it."

Another schedule, dealing with property, the Government valuation of which is stated to be Rs. 1,044 is headed thus:—

"Specification of the property which shall remain exclusively in proprietary possession of Madad Ali Khan, and with which Fazal Ali Khan, Panah Ali Khan and Arab Ali Khan alias Ehsan Ali Khan shall have no concern."

A third, dealing with property the Government valuation of which is valued at Rs. 438-13-0, is headed thus:—

"Specification of the property which shall remain in proprietary possession of Fazal Ali Khan without the participation (of any person) and with which Madad Ali Khan, Panah Ali Khan and Arab Ali Khan alias Ehsan Ali Khan shall have no concern. This property was given to Fazal Ali Khan by Madad Ali Khan in his lifetime."

The parties interested in this transaction treated it in a most business-like way. In April 1889 these three co-sharers presented a petition to the Assistant Collector of the District of Fatehpur, reciting that an order for the entry of the names of the petitioners, and of Madad Ali Khan, in place of the name of Umed Ali Khan, had in the year then current been passed in respect of the village named in the title, i. e. Mandauli permanent Mahal Umed Ali Khan Pargana Ekdala, that the mutual dispute had been settled under a compromise dated the 13th March 1889; that the share of Madad Ali Khan had not been maintained in respect of this village and other villages with the exception of certain villages named thereafter; that only the three petitioners were in possession; and that, therefore, the application was presented. It is then prayed that the names of these petitioners might be entered in equal shares, and the name of Madad Ali Khan struck out. There is then added the note: "The deed of compromise is filed with the record of the case relating to Manza Mandauli." The names of the three petitioners are then given, and they are described as Zemindars in possession of the village. A blank is left for the name of the village because, presumably, it has been already stated.

On the 4th May 1889 the Assistant Collector made an order on this petition by which, after reciting amongst other things that Madad Ali Khan, Fazal Ali Khan, Panah Ali Khan and Arab Ali Khan had been summoned through the Collector of the Allahabad District for the 26th April 1889; that accordingly Panah Ali Khan, for himself and on behalf of Fazal Ali Khan, and Ghazi-Bakhsh, General Attorney of Arab Ali Khan, Karim Bakhsh, General Attorney of Madad Ali Khan, presented themselves and stated that Madad Ali Khan was no longer in possession of the property named, that Fazal Ali Khan, Panah Ali Khan, and Arab Ali Khan were in possession of the property in equal shares, and that the names of these persons should be entered according to possession and the deed of partition; that none of the parties produced witnesses in proof of possession, but that it appeared from the registered document that possession had been delivered; that the term of notice had expired and no one had taken objection; and further reciting that the Assistant Collector was of opinion that according to the partition deed the name of Madad Ali Khan should be expunged and the names of Fazal Ali Khan, Panah Ali Khan, and Arab Ali Khan should be entered up against the aforesaid property, and that the record of the case should be sent to the Pargana officer for proper orders. On the 23rd June 1889 an order was made by the Assistant Collector directing the mutation to be effected.

Thus, by the pronouncement of the three surviving brothers of Umed Ali Khan deceased, Fazal Ali Khan, Panah Ali Khan, and Arab Ali Khan, were by these proceedings based upon the deed of the 13th March 1889 treated as and represented to be the absolute duly registered owners in equal shares in possession of this Manza Mandauli. In the judgment of the Subordinate Judge at page 418 the following passage is to be found:—

"It is conceded in argument, and cannot of course be denied, that so far as the three brothers of Umed Ali Khan, namely, Fazal Ali Khan, Panah Ali Khan, and Madad Ali Khan, were concerned, the deed in question was a family settlement and was carried into effect, each brother taking possession of the property allotted to him under the deed."

On the 20th June 1889 Fazal Ali Khan and Arab Ali Khan executed a power-of-attorney appointing one Lala Har Pershad, their Attorney, to, amongst other things, grant leases to their tenants in respect of their Zemindari property, make collections in and manage the same. In this document, which was duly registered by the Special Sub-Registrar of Allahabad on the 20th June 1889, Fazal Ali Khan and Arab Ali Khan are described as Zemindars of villages in the District of Fatehpur, in Cawnpore, and Allahabad, while in the deposition of Panah Ali Khan, dated the 14th July, 1891, made in a suit instituted by him against Shirin Begam, he distinctly states that "Ahsan Ali Khan (which is another name for Arab Ali Khan) is my co-sharer. My brother has given him a 4-annas share." There is no suggestion in this deposition of Arab Ali Khan's being merely his benamidar in respect of this 4 annas share or any other share.

In the khewats of this Mauza Mandauli for the concluding portion of the year 1889 Fazal Ali Khan, Panah Ali Khan and Arab Ali Khan are stated to be sharers in equal shares of the Mauza. In the column for remarks the dealings with the Mauza are set out in detail. It is stated that by order of the 23rd March 1889 the name of Ummad Ali Khan deceased was struck out and the names of Madad Ali Khan, Fazal Ali Khan, Panah Ali Khan, and Arab Ali Khan were entered in equal shares by right of inheritance, and that by and under the the second order, dated the 8th May 1889, the name of Madad Ali Khan was struck off and the names of Panah Ali Khan, Fazal Ali Khan, and Arab Ali Khan were entered in equal shares, according to mutual agreement. These are official documents, and weight must be given to them, at all events as to the reputed rights and interests of Arab Ali Khan in this Mauza.

In the judgment, delivered on the 13th July 1906, of the Additional Commissioner of Allahabad on the application of Mahmud Ali Khan to have the name of Arab Ali Khan removed from the khewat in respect of his 5-annas and 4-pies of this Mauza, he states that Panah Ali Khan was then alive, and actually played the part of head of the family; that Fazal Ali Khan was dead, leaving a widow, who had re married; that Madad Ali Khan was also dead, and had left a son, the applicant, who was a minor, Panah Ali Khan being his guardian; and that until the suit in which judgment was given in September 1904—i. e., for a period of sixteen years—the legality and genuineness of Arab Ali Khan's title was never doubted or impugned by any of the parties concerned; and that Arab Ali Khan during all that time was recorded as a 5 annas 4-pies sharer, and that his title to be so recorded was never contested till the 4th September 1904. The Additional Commissioner then proceeds to explain how Arab Ali Khan, being thus attacked, caused, on the 25th October 1904, as a counter move, a suit against Panah Ali Khan, Sayad Karamat Hussain, the Lambardar, Shirin Begam (the widow of Fazal Ali Khan) and Bakhsh Begum (the latter woman's second husband), to recover the sum of Rs. 277-14-6, the rents and profits of his share in Mauza Mandauli; that this Lambardar had purchased from Panah Ali Khan on the 30th November 1895 the latter's share of 5 annas and 4-pies in the Mauza; that the purchaser then became Lambardar; while Panah Ali Khan was no longer recorded as co-sharer in the Mauza.

This suit of Arab Ali Khan's was dismissed not at all on the ground that he was not the beneficial owner of his share of 5-annas and 4-pies in the Mauza Mandauli, but because the Lambardar proved that he had always paid the rents and profits of the Mauza to Panah Ali Khan with the consent of Arab Ali Khan himself, and that, therefore, he could not be required to pay these sums twice over. Arab Ali Khan in this suit made a deposition in which he stated that after the death of Ummad Ali Khan, Panah Ali Khan was managing member of the family and was appointed Lambardar; that he continued to make collections, and paid him, Arab, the profits of his share, until September 1904; that he did not remember if he ever got the profits of this very property in dispute (i. e., the 5-annas 4 pies share of Mandauli) from Panah Ali Khan, because he used to receive profits collectively. He received profits for the last time eight or nine months later, that is to say, May 1905. This is a most important statement having regard to the accounts to which attention will be drawn presently. It will be observed that Panah Ali Khan took no steps to have Arab Ali Khan declared his benamidar for the 5 annas 4-pies share, to which the latter claimed to be entitled. He submitted to have his name removed from the register as one of the co-sharers, although, as he subsequently contended, he was then beneficially entitled, in addition, to the share registered in the name of Arab Ali Khan, his benamidar.

Their Lordships cannot quite concur in the view taken by the High Court as to the reasons assigned by Panah Ali Khan for having secured a grant in tenami to be made to Arab Ali Khan. It was not merely, as they apparently supposed, for the purpose of securing for himself a larger share of the estate of his deceased brother than he would have got under the Muhammadan Law. If the grant was made in benami at all it must have been made, (their Lordships think, for the purpose of, by a mean and knavish trick, defrauding one or both of his brothers. If both of his brothers, Madad and Fazal, were aware of the alleged nature of the gift, then it was perfectly unnecessary to resort to a benami grant. The increased share Panah desired to secure could readily and would naturally have been given to him expressly by the terms of the deed. There was no need for concealment or contrivance. If they did not know of his device then the brothers must, owing to their ignorance, have been defrauded of some portion of their rightful shares by the bringing in of the benami grantee. Owing to the conflict of evidence which exists upon these crucial points, Panah's conduct, as reflecting on his good faith and credibility, becomes a matter of importance. In a deposition made by him in a suit instituted in 1909 by the heirs of Najaf Ali Khan, Panah Ali Khan, Arab Ali Khan and Mahmud Ali Khan to recover the maintenance allowances originally granted to the deceased, he gives his own account of the transaction. He says that Arab Ali Khan was the son of his sister-in-law, his name was inserted in the deed of partition that he (Panah) might get a larger share, and again he says:—

"Caused Arab Ali Khan's name to be entered in order that I might secure a larger share than those of my brothers. There was no dishonesty about it. It was a matter among brothers. I was the youngest of all the brothers. I had two brothers, Madad Ali Khan and Fazal Ali Khan. Madad Ali Khan had separate property. Fazal Ali Khan agreed that the name of Arab Ali Khan might be recorded. Madad Ali Khan took his share of the property and became separate one or two months after Ummad Ali Khan's death."

Both Madad Ali Khan and Fazal Ali Khan were dead at the time this deposition was made. There is no record in any of the legal proceedings, which are proved in evidence in this case, that either of the brothers gave any evidence or made any statement corroborating this story of Panah Ali Khan's. If by the word "recorded" he meant recorded in the register, then it would go to show that Fazal Ali Khan thought that Arab Ali Khan was a genuine co-sharer with him, rather than a mere benamidar for his brother. If, on the other hand, he meant by recorded, inserted in the deed of partition, the story is scarcely credible, because if the brothers agreed that Panah should have a double share, nothing was easier than so to provide in the partition deed. If Arab Ali Khan was made a benamidar for Panah Ali Khan, it could only have been for the purpose of overreaching one or both of his (Panah's) brothers, and secrecy was essential to effect that result. In addition, he stated in this deposition, that Arab Ali Khan did not get any portion of the profits of the property, that he never gave him (Arab) a pie of the profits. Arab Ali Khan, however, says, on the other hand, as has been already pointed out, that he was paid these profits not distinctly and separately, but collectively.

There is no proof whatever in the mass of evidence produced in the case that Arab Ali Khan ever stood to Panah in any relation other than that of co-sharer with him in this Mauza Mandauli, which could make Panah liable to pay him money. Yet in the statement of account given in evidence, considerable sums of money are taken credit for by the agent who furnished these accounts, as having been remitted to Panah Ali Khan and Arab Ali Khan. Most of these accounts deal with the income from Chak Tani, but the interest of Ummed Ali Khan in the Mahal of Chak Tani is according to the specification already referred to, given by the deed of the 13th March 1889 to the three co-sharers. The same remark refers to Exhibit No. 1, an account dealing with the income from Khas Mau. It also is included in this specification. The credits in these accounts begin with a sum of Rs. 47-14-7 stated to be remitted to Arab Ali Khan and Panah Ali Khan. Next a sum of Rs. 58-12-7, next a credit of Rs. 338-15-6, next Rs. 41-2-6, all similarly described. The account in which these items appear is signed in autograph by Panah Ali Khan. The next is a sum of Rs. 58-12-7 similarly remitted. There are several other items of the same kind, and ultimately an entry of a sum of remittance to Panah Ali Khan and Arab Ali Khan of Rs. 5,208-8-0.

These accounts, embracing as they do the income derived from some of the properties granted to the three co-sharers, strongly corroborate Arab Ali Khan's statement that he was paid the income of his one-third share collectively. It is much to be regretted that accounts similar to those given in evidence covering the years from 1893 to 1904 were not produced and given in evidence; but Arab Ali Khan distinctly swears he was paid collectively the rent and profits of his share up to 1904, only seven years before the institution of the present suit.

On turning to the khewat for the closing period of the year 1889 of the Mandauli, Panah Ali Khan, Fazal Ali Khan and Arab Ali Khan are named as the co-sharers of this village in equal shares. Similar entries are made in the khewat for this Mauza for the year 1892 and subsequent years.

The burden of proving that the grant of a one-third share in this Mauza made to Arab Ali Khan was made to him as bsnamidar for his brother rested upon the respondents. In their Lordships' view they have utterly failed to adduce any satisfactory or reliable evidence to discharge that burden. Neither do they think that it has been satisfactorily shown that Arab Ali Khan, clothed as he had been with all the insignia of a beneficial ownership in possession of this one-third share, was before 1904, if even then, dispossessed of the possession of it, or that he has ceased to be in possession of it. Neither are they of opinion that the respondents or their predecessors have been in adverse possession of his share.

Neither the 142 nor the 144 Article of the First Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, therefore, applies, and the statutory period of twelve years prescribed by those enactments had not commenced to run (if at all) before the year 1904. The plaintiff's remedy is, therefore, not barred by effluxion of time. Their Lordships are accordingly of opinion that the decree appealed from was erroneous and should be reversed, that the decree of the Subordinate Judge was right and should be restored, and that this appeal should be allowed with costs here and below and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

The rent arrear and current due, being actionable claims, cannot be transferred by word of mouth, a transfer can only be effected by means of an instrument in writing in accordance with the provisions of section 130, Transfer of Property Act. [p. 453, cols. 2 & 3.]

An oral gift must be proved by satisfactory oral evidence by the person who relies upon such a gift. [p. 454, col. 1.]

A mere intention to give does not operate as a gift, there must be (1) a transfer of property and

(2) an acceptance by or on behalf of the donee in accordance with sections 122 and 123, Transfer of Property Act. [p. 461, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where the undoubted evidence is consistent both with the allegation of the plaintiff as with the denial of the defendant, the plaintiff must fail. [p. 458, col. 2.]

The substance of a maintenance grant is that it is the rents, issues and profits that are alienated and not the immoveable properties out of which such rents, issues and profits arise, which remain the property of the grantor and annexed to his estate. [p. 459, col. 2.]

In order that there may be accretion there must be an estate to which the accumulation may accrete. Therefore, where a female is in possession of certain villages not as a Hindu widow, but under a lease granted to her by her husband, she has no estate in the villages, but only a maintenance grant, and her savings or accumulations would vest in her heirs and not follow the properties from which they arose. JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—The main question which we have to deal with in this appeal is whether there was a verbal gift of the cash balance standing to the credit of Rani Ram Kumari at the time of her death by Raja Ram Narain Singh of Ramgarh in favour of his wife, the plaintiff. The admitted facts are these: On the 22nd of December 1897 Raja Ram (Nan?) Narain Singh, the father of Raja Ram Narain Singh, and the father-in-law of the plaintiff, made a grant of certain villages in favour of his wife, Rani Ram Kumari. These villages were subsequently placed in charge of the defendant who happened to be the younger son of Raja Ram Narain Singh. It will be convenient to describe these villages as Ram Kumari villages to distinguish them from the villages which Raja Ram Narain, about the same time, granted to the plaintiff and which were also placed in charge of the defendant. Rani Ram Kumari died on the 26th November 1910 and thereupon the Ram Kumari villages reverted to the Raj of which the title was then vested in Raja Ram Narain. On the 17th June 1911 Raja Ram Narain made a gift of the Ram Kumari villages to the plaintiff and placed them in charge of the defendant. The plaintiff alleges that, on or about the 17th June 1911, Raja Ram Narain made a further gift to her of the cash balance standing to the credit of Rani Ram Kumari at the time of her death, and it is her case that the defendant is bound to render an account to her of his dealings with Ram Kumari villages for the purposes of ascertaining what that cash balance was. The defendant in his written statement denied that any gift of the cash balance was made by Raja Ram Narain in favour of the plaintiff. The learned Subordinate Judge has found in favour of the plaintiff and has directed an account to be taken of the dealings of the defendant with the estate of Rani Ram Kumari for the purpose of ascertaining what the cash balance was at the date of the death of Rani Ram Kumari.

Before dealing with the evidence in the case, it will be necessary to consider the case which the plaintiff has made in her plaint. Her case is fully set out in the 3rd paragraph of the plaint and is as follows:—“That in the meantime, Rani Ram Kumari died in 1867 Sambat and all the moveable and immoveable properties reverted according to law and usage to the Raj; that is to say, the Raja for the time being, the plaintiff's husband, became the malik of the properties left by her and he used to affix his seal and signature on the receipts, etc., for sometime; and he allowed all the properties, collection of rent, arrear and current, collection in cash and kind, the collection papers, in short, everything to remain in the defendant's hand. Sometime after, in 1868 Sambat, the plaintiff's husband made a gift of all the properties left by the said Rani Ram Kumari, deceased, including the taxil in cash and kind, the rent arrear and current due till 1867 Sambat to the plaintiff; he executed a khorphoshnama in respect of the maueahs. From that time the plaintiff became the malik of all the properties including the savings in cash and kind, mentioned above, and all the papers connected with the said properties. The properties belonging to the plaintiff were from before under the management of the defendant and she allowed those properties as well to remain under his management and he acted as manager till Katik 1970 Sambat; when he had, for some reasons, to be removed from the management of all those properties." The case as made in the plaint certainly suggests that the gift of "the tahvil in cash and kind, the rent arrear and current due till 1967 Sambat" was made as part of the transaction by which the gift of the villages was made. This case, however, was abandoned at the hearing and it was then suggested that although the gift of the villages was made by a registered document on and bearing date the 17th June 1911, the gift of the cash balance was made orally though made on or about the 17th June 1911. Indeed, the abandonment of the case made in the plaint became inevitable when it was discovered that the registered instrument creating the gift of the villages could not be construed so as to include "the tahvil in cash and kind the rent arrear and current due till 1967 Sambat". The learned Vakil appearing for the defendant protested that, on the pleadings, evidence as to the oral gift was not admissible; but the learned Subordinate Judge overruled the objection and allowed the evidence to be led in regard to the alleged oral-gift.

In my opinion the case of the oral gift is inherently improbable. It is admitted that there was a registered instrument in regard to the gift of the villages. It is admitted that the gift of the cash balance was part of the transaction which resulted in the gift of the villages. There is no explanation whatever why the gift of the cash balance should have been made orally when there was no lack of opportunity to make it by the document which brought into existence the gift of the villages, especially when it is remembered that so far at least as part of the gift is concerned, it could only be effected by an instrument in writing signed by the donor. The alleged gift was of "the tahvil in cash and kind, the rent arrear and current due till 1967 Sambat." It is true that we are not in this suit concerned with the rent arrear and current due; but it is still permissible to enquire whether the rent arrear and current due could be transferred orally to the plaintiff. I have no doubt whatever that they could not; for they were actionable claims and could only be transferred "by the execution of an instrument in writing signed by the transferor or his duly authorised agent". See section 130 of the Transfer of Property Act. It is necessary, therefore, to scrutinize the evidence with some care to see whether, on the evidence in the case, the oral gift has been established.

Next, it is admitted that the account-books which were kept by the defendant were examined regularly by Raja Ram Narain Singh. The evidence is that Raja Ram Narain had in his possession the seal both of Rani Ram Kumari and of his wife the plaintiff and that the account-books were regularly placed before Raja Ram Narain for his examination. Most of the entries in the account-books are in fact sealed with the seals of the ladies and as the seals were admittedly kept by Raja Ram Narain and as admittedly the account-books were placed regularly before Raja Ram Narain, these entries establish, in my opinion, that Raja Ram Narain accepted the accounts, as kept by the defendant, as correct. That being so, we would expect, if the plaintiff's case be correct, the cash balance standing to the credit of Rani Ram Kumari at the date of her death, that is to say, the 26th November 1910 to be transferred to the credit of the plaintiff on that date or soon thereafter. But as a matter of fact the cash balance was never transferred to the credit of the plaintiff's account. The plaintiff challenged the genuineness of the books of account produced by the defendant, but the learned Subordinate Judge has come to the conclusion, and I entirely agree with him, that the books produced by the defendant are genuine and that, to quote the words of the learned Subordinate Judge, "we must take it as a stern fact the deposited cash balance was not entered in the Rani's rokar after the sal tamami". Now it seems to me incredible that the cash balance whatever it was should not have been transferred to the credit of the plaintiff's account if in fact there was a gift of that cash balance in favour of the plaintiff. The defendant was the custodian of such properties as then belonged to the plaintiff. He had regular books of account relating to such properties. Those books of account were regularly checked by Raja Ram Narain, the husband of the plaintiff. The matter could not have been overlooked by Raja Ram Narain and it is impossible to take the view that the defendant successfully deceived Raja Ram Narain who, as the documents show carefully scrutinized the plaintiff's accounts as kept by the defendant. In order to succeed it was absolutely necessary for the plaintiff to establish as was undoubtedly her case, that the cash balance was in fact entered in the plaintiff's rokar and that the genuine rokar has been suppressed. That was her evidence in the Court below, but the learned Subordinate Judge found it impossible to rely on that evidence. That being so the case of an oral gift becomes still more improbable.

Now an oral gift must be established by satisfactory oral evidence; but the oral evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiff did not make any impression on the learned Subordinate Judge. In the course of his judgment the learned Subordinate Judge said as follows:—"I would not place the least reliance on the evidence of the plaintiff's witnesses 'ouching the loose conversations which had happened several years ago and which they came to reproduce before me. But other facts and circumstances to which I shall presently refer make it fairly clear to my mind that there was indeed a verbal bequest by the Maharaja in favour of his wife which, by some reason or other, was not incorporated in the khoryoth deed, contemporaneous as it was and that the Rani came into possession of them in due course through the defendant as her manager or agent". It will be necessary for me to examine the other facts and circumstances, but so far as the oral evidence is concerned, all that I need say is that I entirely accept the view of the learned Subordinate Judge on this point.

It is necessary now to consider the "other facts and circumstances" to which the learned Subordinate Judge has referred. These consist of entries in the books of account of Rani Ram Kumari and of the plaintiff respectively which have been produced by the defendant which, according to the learned Subordinate Judge, establish the case of the oral gift. In order to understand the evidence to which the learned Subordinate Judge refers, it is necessary to remember that we are concerned with three distinct periods in the history of the defendant's management of the Ram Kumari villages. The first period is the period of Rani Ram Kumari which comes to an end with her death which took place on the 10th Aghan 1967 corresponding with the 26th November 1910. The second period has been referred to by the learned Subordinate Judge as the khas period, the period during which the title was with the Raj, that is to say, the period between the 10th Aghan 1967 corresponding with the 26th November 1910 and 5th Ashar 1968 corresponding with the 17th June 1911. The third period is the plaintiff's period which began on the 17th June 1911. The defendant has produced the rokars, jinsi and nakdi (grain and cash) of the period both of Rani Ram Kumari and of the plaintiff; but he has not produced any account-books of the khas period, his case being that these books were returned to the Raj office and are now to be found in the Raj office. The explanation seems a reasonable one, for there is no reason to think that the books of account belonging to the Raj would remain with the defendant.

Now, the important fact that emerges on a critical examination of the books of account that have been produced by the defendant is that the cash balance standing to the credit of Rani Ram Kumari at the time of her death was in fact not transferred to the plaintiff's rokars. This certainly does not support the case of a gift in favour of the plaintiff especially when it is remembered that Raja Ram Narain regularly scrutinized the books of account and sealed practically every entry in the books of account with the seal of the plaintiff. The plaintiff's books of account, therefore, do not furnish any direct evidence of gift; but the learned Subordinate Judge has come to the conclusion that there are entries in the books of account which are consistent only with the case of gift and incapable of explanation on any other hypothesis. It will be necessary, then, to deal with these various entries in order to see whether the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge can at all be supported. In dealing with these entries I will follow the order which was adopted by the learned Subordinate Judge:

RAMESHWAR NARAIN SINGH v. RIENATH KOERI.

(1) Exhibit 53 (1), Exhibit 21, Exhibit 54, Exhibit 53 (1) is an entry from the jinsi rokar of the plaintiff dated the 8th Bhado Sadi 1963 corresponding with the 1st September 1911. This entry shows that there were 856 maunds 22 seers of grain to the credit of the plaintiff's account on the 1st September 1911. Exhibit 21 is an entry from the jinsi rokar of Rani Ram Kumari dated the 2nd December 1910 and it shows that on that date 850 maunds of grain were transferred from the account of Rani Ram Kumari to the account of Raja Ram Narain. It will be remembered that Rani Ram Kumari died on the 26th November 1910 and Exhibit 21 supports the case that soon after the death of Rani Ram Kumari the defendant treated Rani Ram Kumari's properties, whether moveable or immoveable, as having reverted to the Raj. Exhibit 54 is the entry from the jinsi rokar of the plaintiff dated the 2nd Aghaon Sadi 1968 corresponding with the 22nd November 1911. It shows that there was a previous balance standing to the credit of the plaintiff of 1806 maunds 37 seers as per goswara jinsi rokar for 1867. The learned Subordinate Judge says that the balance of 1806 maunds can only be explained on the hypothesis that 850 maunds which were transferred to the account of Raja Ram Narain on the 2nd December 1910 were again transferred to the account of the plaintiff sometime between the 2nd December 1910 and the 22nd November 1911. The argument of the learned Subordinate Judge substantially is this: "I find that on 1st September 1911 the plaintiff had 856 maunds of grains to her credit. I find that on the 22nd November 1911 the plaintiff had 1806 maunds of grain to her credit. The difference can be explained only on the hypothesis that that which was transferred to Raja Ram Narain on the 2nd December 1910 was carried forward to her account." The weakness of the argument is that if in fact there was a gift in favour of the plaintiff on or about the 17th June 1911 as alleged by the plaintiff, the transfer would have been made in the books of the plaintiff sometime before the 1st September 1911 and Exhibit 53 (1) would have shown the transfer. Now, the jinsi rokars of the plaintiff are before us and it is certainly a remarkable circumstance that there is nothing in these rokars which suggests the inference that that which was transferred to the account of Raja Ram Narain was carried forward to the account of the plaintiff. The khas period was between the 26th November 1910 to the 17th June 1911. If the plaintiff's case be true then the grains collected during the khas period should have been entered in the plaintiff's rokar on the 17th June 1911 or soon thereafter, and would certainly have been shown in the entry of the 1st September 1911. The reasoning of the learned Subordinate Judge is based on nothing more substantial than this that 856 maunds plus 850 maunds make up a figure which is very near 1806 maunds. I am unable to accept these entries as establishing the case of gift; and my ground is this: that if there was in fact a gift in favour of the plaintiff then the plaintiff's rokars would undoubtedly have shown the transfers both of the cash balance and of the grains. That evidence is not furnished by the books of account and I am unable to hold that there was a gift on what appears to me to be an accidental circumstance in the case.

(2) Exhibit 25 (5) and Exhibit 25 (6). These entries purport to show that Rs. 471.1 which stood to the credit of Rani Ram Kumari in her silami bahi on the 5th Bhado Badi 1969 corresponding with the 1st September 1912 was carried to the credit of the plaintiffs' account on the 5th Assin 1969 corresponding with the 15th October 1912; but the note showing that the money was carried to the credit of the plaintiff's account was penned through, and there is a side-note to the effect that as no corresponding entry was found in the plaintiff's silami bahi, that entry, namely Exhibit 25 (5), was cancelled. The learned Subordinate Judge is of the opinion that this is a deliberate attempt on the part of the defendant to do away with a strong piece of evidence in plaintiff's favour. I am unable to agree with the view of the learned Subordinate Judge. In the first place, there is nothing to show that Rs. 471.1 which was undoubtedly credited in the book of Rani Ram Kumari was, as a matter of fact, collected prior to her death. Rani Ram Kumari died on the 26th November 1910, and the grant in favour of the plaintiff took place on the 17th June 1911. The entry, Exhibit 25 (5), is dated the 1st September 1912. It is obvious that premiums collected in respect of Ram Kumari villages were entered in the salami bahi of Rani Ram Kumari long after her death, for on no other hypothesis can we explain the fact that Rs. 471-1 was credited in her book on the 1st September 1912 though she died on the 26th November 1910. In my opinion, therefore, the entry is inconclusive; It does not establish that a sum of money standing to the credit of Rani Ram Kumari was transferred to the account of the plaintiff. It is one thing to say that a sum of money entered in a book which once belonged to Rani Ram Kumari was transferred to the plaintiff's book; it is quite another thing to say that money belonging to Rani Ram Kumari was transferred to the plaintiff's account. The salami bahi of Rani Ram Kumari begins from 1906 and it is obvious that after her death no new book was started by the defendant either in the name of Raja Ram Narain or of the plaintiff. Having regard to the fact that the entry of 1st September 1912 is admittedly after the date of the gift of Ram Kumari villages to the plaintiff. It is impossible to base any argument upon this entry. In the next place, there is no reason to doubt the genuineness of the side-note. All that that note says is that as that Rs. 471-1 was in fact not transferred to the salami bahi of the plaintiff as Exhibit 25 (6) purported to show that entry was cancelled. But as a matter of fact the salami bahi of the plaintiff does not show that Rs. 471-1 was transferred to her account either on the 5th Assin 1909 or at any other time. The defendant has disclosed the salami bahis of the plaintiff. They are Exhibits 68 and 69 and are from 1906 to 1909. If they do not in fact show that there was a transfer of Rs. 471-1 to the plaintiff's salami bahi on the 5th Assin 1909 then the side-note was correct, and there is no reason to hold that it was introduced into the book in order to get rid of a damaging entry.

(3) Exhibit 19 (1) and Exhibit 54. Exhibit 19 (1) is an entry dated the 7th Aghan Badi 1907 corresponding with the 23rd November 1910. It shows that

Rs. 437-8 was due to Rani Ram Kumari by certain tenants of Mouza Chak, one of the Ram Kumari villages, and that the tenants executed an instalment bond in favour of Rani Ram Kumari agreeing to pay the amount due in certain instalments. Exhibit 54 is an entry dated the 1st July 1912 and it shows that Rs. 29-12 was realized from Mouza Chak and was credited to the plaintiff's account. The argument of the learned Subordinate Judge is that Rs. 29-12 was due to Rani Ram Kumari's estate but when realised was credited to the plaintiff's account. In my opinion Exhibit 54 does not establish that Rs. 29-12 represented the sum which was due to Rani Ram Kumari under the instalment bonds executed by the tenants in her favour. There was admittedly a gift of the villages including Mouza Chak in favour of the plaintiff on the 17th June 1911 and it may well be that rent became due to the plaintiff between the 17th June 1911 and the 1st July 1912 and that Rs. 29-12 was realized on account of the debt due to the plaintiff between the 17th June 1911 and the 1st July 1912. The entry, in my opinion, is wholly inconclusive.

But even if we assume that Rs. 29-12-0 was realised by the defendant from the tenants who had executed instalment bonds in favour of Rani Ram Kumari, the conclusion is not reached that there was a gift as alleged by the plaintiff. The claim of Rani Ram Kumari to the money covered by the instalment bonds was an actionable claim and it could only be assigned to the plaintiff by an instrument in writing under the provision of the Transfer of Property Act. There was, therefore, no transfer of the claim of Rani Ram Kumari to that money to the plaintiff. But the defendant may well have taken the view, not an unreasonable view, that the gift of the villages to the plaintiff carried with it the right to recover the debt due in respect of those villages. I am, therefore, unable to look upon these entries as establishing the case of gift.

(4) Two rent suits were instituted in 1912 in respect of the Ram Kumari villages: one suit was instituted by Raja Ram Narain in respect of the rent that accrued due prior to the death of Rani Ram Kumari, the other suit by the plaintiff in respect of rent that accrued due after the title to the villages had vested in her by the gift which took place on the 17th June 1911. The fact that two suits had to be instituted one by Raja Ram Narain and the other by the plaintiff supports the case of the defendant, for if there was in fact a gift by Raja (P) Ram Kumari to the plaintiff of all that Rani Ram Kumari died possessed of or entitled to there is no reason why one of the suits should have been instituted by Raja Ram Narain. But the plaintiff relies upon the fact that money recovered by Raja Ram Narain in execution of the decrees obtained by him was credited to the plaintiff's account. Now, in my opinion it is impossible to found any argument on this circumstance having regard to the fact that the suit to recover the amount was instituted by Raja Ram Narain and not by the plaintiff. I shall presently show that the funds which stood in the names of Rani Ram Kumari and of the plaintiff respectively were entirely under the control of Raja Ram Narain and that he dealt with those funds as his own without the slightest regard either to Rani Ram Kumari or to the plaintiff. Just as he withdrew money at his pleasure from those funds so he deposited money to the credit of those funds at his pleasure. The circumstances relied upon by the learned Subordinate Judge merely establish that Raja Ram Narain operated on those funds just as it suited him. It does not, in my opinion, establish that he made a gift of the outstandings in favour of the plaintiff either on the 17th June 1911 or at any other time.

(5) Exhibit 86 (1)—a letter from the defendant to Raja Ram Narain, dated the 2nd Bhado 1912 corresponding with the 17th September 1912. In this letter the defendant pointed out to Raja Ram Narain the inconvenience and the expense involved in having to institute rent suits some in the name of Raja Ram Narain and some in the name of the plaintiff and he asked for a parwana to be issued to the effect "that the collection and realization of outstanding arrears should be made by institution of suits in the Courts etc." and he added this, "The reason is that the arrears, too, in respect of the Mouzas recently given to the Maharani Sahiba, have been assigned to her as her property." The translation is not quite correct. The sense conveyed by the letter is that the assignment of the arrears followed the assignment of the Mouzas. This is certainly the view which the defendant was putting forward in this letter, and he asked for authority to institute rent suits in respect of rent which accrued due to Rani Ram Kumari in the name of the plaintiff. He took the assignment to be one of law, not one of fact; and according to him since the Mouzas were assigned to the plaintiff the plaintiff had a right to sue in regard to the arrears of rent in respect of those Mouzas. I can find no admission by the defendant in this letter that there was a gift of the cash balance to the plaintiff as alleged by the plaintiff.

(6) Exhibit 5 (8). It appears that per order No. 234, dated the 6th Magh Badi 1968 corresponding with the 11th January 1912 Raja Ram Narain had remitted on account of rent due in respect of certain Ram Kumari villages the sum of Rs. 1,227-2. After the death of Raja Ram Narain, the defendant made a claim upon the Court of Wards who took possession of Ramgarh estate on behalf of the minor son of Raja Ram Narain for a very large sum of money and one of the items which he sought to recover on behalf of the plaintiff was Rs. 1,227 2 0 referred to in order No. 234. The learned Subordinate Judge says that "this evidence was depended upon as defendant's admission with regard to the gift;" but, curiously enough, the learned Subordinate Judge does not say whether he accepted this evidence as in any way bearing upon the alleged gift. In my opinion it is obvious that the entry has no sort of bearing on the question at issue between the parties. The remission was made on the 11th January 1912 and there is nothing to suggest that the remission was made in respect of the rent which accrued due to Rani Ram Kumari who had died on the 26th November 1910. The villages were granted to the plaintiff on the 17th June 1911 and it may well be that the remission was granted in respect of the rent which had accrued due to the plaintiff. The entry, therefore, is inconclusive.

(8) Exhibits 88, 51 (4), 87, 51, (3).—The learned Subordinate Judge says that these entries establish that the liabilities of Rani Ram Kumari were paid out of the fund that stood to the credit of the plaintiff's account. These entries purport to show that Rs. 60-12-0 was spent in connection with a pyne of Mouza Mokhrowl and that the defendant ordered that the money be paid to Deodip Narain out of the plaintiff's account. The liability of Rani Ram Kumari was in respect of one of the villages which belonged to her. That village was admittedly granted to the plaintiff and the fact that the defendant discharged the liability out of the income which accrued to the plaintiff from the villages granted to her by Raja Ram Narain after the death of Rani Ram Kumari does not, in my opinion, establish that there was an oral gift of the cash balance in favour of the plaintiff. The learned Subordinate Judge says that the defendant could give no explanation whatever. The defendant when he was cross examined with reference to those entries stated, it is true, that he could not say why those payments were made from the plaintiff's properties. It is necessary to remember that he was cross-examined on the 23rd July 1918 with reference to the entries which were of 1910. In my opinion no explanation is necessary when it is remembered that the liability that was discharged by the defendant out of the income of the plaintiff was a liability in respect of the villages which were admittedly granted to the plaintiff after the death of Rani Ram Kumari.

(9) Exhibits 24 and 25 series.—The learned Subordinate Judge says that these entries show "that salami monies received by Ram Kumari from 1960 to 1935 were refunded on and the same day Assin 1939, to different persons out of plaintiff's salami monies". It is difficult to understand what is exactly meant by the learned Subordinate Judge. The entries, as they stand, certainly do not support the view of the learned Subordinate Judge, but in the argument before us it was attempted to be shown that the salamis recovered by Rani Ram Kumari were transferred to the credit of the account of the plaintiff. I have already dealt with this point under paragraph (2). In my opinion these entries do not support the case of the plaintiff.

These are the entries upon which the learned Subordinate Judge has come to the conclusion that there must have been a gift of the cash balance standing to the credit of Rani Ram Kumari's account to the plaintiff by Raja Ram Narain. I am wholly unable to agree with the view which has been taken by the learned Subordinate Judge in this case. The onus is upon the plaintiff to establish the oral gift. Where the undoubted evidence is consistent both with the allegation of the plaintiff as with the denial of the defendant, the plaintiff must fail for the simple reason that she must establish the affirmative of the proposition which she asks us to accept. In the first place the case is inherently improbable having regard to the fact that there was admittedly a registered instrument in respect of the villages. No reason has been assigned why Raja Ram Narain should not have made the gift of the cash balance in writing since he had the time and the opportunity to make a gift of the villages by a registered document. In the second place, the account books which have been disclosed by the defendant and which have been accepted by the learned Subordinate Judge as genuine afford no direct proof of the gift as they should have, had the plaintiff's case been true. There is no reason at all why the cash balance standing to the credit of Rani Ram Kumari should not have been transferred to the account of the plaintiff since the entries were carefully scrutinized by Raja Ram Narain and the defendant must have known that Raja Ram Narain would scrutinize the accounts. In the third place, the oral evidence which has been adduced on behalf of the plaintiff is not such as commended itself to the learned Subordinate Judge. There then remain certain entries in the books of account produced by the defendant, of which those which are relevant are equally consistent with the allegation of the plaintiff as with the denial of the defendant. They do not, in my opinion, lead to inevitable conclusion that there must have been a gift by Raja Ram Narain in favour of the plaintiff. In the absence of a written document and direct evidence as to the gift, the entries in the books of account, if they are to be relied upon as proving the case of the plaintiff, must not only be consistent with the plaintiff's case but must be incapable of explanation on any other hypothesis. In my opinion they are capable of explanation on the hypothesis that there was in fact no gift by Raja Ram Narain in favour of the plaintiff. The question, I am aware, is one of fact; and it is not without strong reason that I would venture to differ on a question of fact from so careful a Judge as Mr. Tulsidas Mukharji. But I consider that I have greater freedom in the matter, since the conclusion reached by the learned Subordinate Judge was not based on his estimate of the oral evidence. In my opinion, the learned Subordinate Judge took no note whatever of the inherent improbabilities of the plaintiff's case. I have anxiously considered them and also the documentary evidence in the case; and I have come to the conclusion that the plaintiff has failed to establish the case which she made in the plaint.

The conclusion reached by me in regard to the question which I have just discussed is sufficient to dispose of the appeal; but as various other questions have been argued before me, I think it necessary to indicate my views in regard to them, especially as the case is likely to travel across the sea. And the first question which arises for consideration is, was Raja Ram Narain competent to make a gift of the undisposed of accumulations of Rani Ram Kumari to the plaintiff? The villages which were granted to Rani Ram Kumari for and by way of maintenance undoubtedly reverted to the Raj on the death of Rani Ram Kumari, and it was undoubtedly within the power of Raja Ram Narain to make a gift of them to the plaintiffs. But the savings effected by her stood on a different footing and would ordinarily vest in her heirs unless it be that they were accretions to the villages and followed them into the hands of Raja Ram Narain. The plaintiff's case, as made in the plaint, is that "all the moveable and immoveable properties" which belonged to Rani Ram Kumari "reverted according to law and usage to the Raj." So far as usage is concerned, the evidence did not satisfy the learned Subordinate Judge; and I am not prepared to differ from the learned Subordinate Judge on this point. But the learned Subordinate Judge thought that the savings followed the properties from which the savings arose and that accordingly they followed the properties into the hands of the Raj. He relied upon the case of Isri Dutt Koer v. Hansbutti Kosrain (1). That was a case where the Judicial Committee had to consider the question of succession to the savings effected by a Hindu widow out of the estate of which she was in possession as and for a Hindu widow's estate. Their Lordships came to the conclusion that such savings could not be regarded as the stridhan of a Hindu widow, and that, if she has made no attempt to dispose of them in her lifetime, they follow the estate from which they arose. We are here concerned with an entirely different case. Rani Ram Kumari was in possession of the villages, not as a Hindu widow by right of inheritance, but under a lease granted to her by her husband subject to the payment of rent by her to her husband. In truth she had no estate in the villages, but only a maintenance grant; and the substance of a maintenance grant is that it is the rents, issues and profits that are alienated and not the immoveable properties out of which such rents, issues and profits arise which remain the property of the grantor and annexed to his estate. If I am right in my view as to the true nature of a maintenance grant, it is difficult to see how the undisposed of accumulations "follow" the estate, since the title to the estate was never in Rani Ram Kumari, but was always in the grantor. In order that there may be accretion, there must be an estate to which the accumulation may accrete; and as there was no estate which was in the possession of Rani Ram Kumari, I am of opinion that the undisposed of accumulations could not be regarded as having vested in Raja Ram Narain. I hold that Raja Ram Narain was incompetent to make a gift of the undisposed of savings to the plaintiff.

The next question is, assuming that Raja Ram Narain was competent to, and did in fact, make the gift of the undisposed of savings to the plaintiff, did the transaction, as spoken to by the plaintiff's witness, operate to pass the title in those savings to the plaintiff. The evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiff may be summarised as follows: On the fourth day after the death of Rani Ram Kumari, Raja Ram Narain informed the defendant that the Rani's khoreposh properties reverted to him together with all her goods, cash, grains etc., and asked the defendant to make collection in respect of the resumed villages. To this, the defendant assented. Four or five days after the sradh of Rani Ram Kumari, RAMESHWAR NARAIN SINGH v. RIKNATH KUMRI.

Raja Ram Narain informed the defendant that he intended to give the resumed villages together with all the goods and cash to the plaintiff. To this the defendant replied that the proposal was a proper one and that he would manage the properties both moveable and immoveable. Stopping here for a moment, it is quite clear that up to this point of time, there was no gift, for all the authorities are agreed that an intention to give does not operate as a gift. The evidence then continues that in Assar following (June 1911), Raja Ram Narain said this to the defendant. "The deed has been executed in the name of the Rani in respect of the villages. You do enter the khorporah villages together with the goods left by Rani Ram Kumari and also the collections of the khorporah villages made by you in my time in my wife's name in the rokar." To this the defendant replied as follows: "The year is going to expire. I will enter all the said properties as directed in the new bahi to be opened soon". The question which we have to decide is whether there was a gift by Raja Ram Narain to the plaintiff as a result of what took place in June 1911 between him and the defendant.

Now in dealing with this question, it is necessary to remember that there is no suggestion that the plaintiff took any part in the conversation or accepted the gift or authorised the defendant to accept it on her behalf. There is no suggestion that she dealt with the subject matter of the gift or at any time gave any order to the defendant to deal with the subject-matter of the gift in any way. The unimpeachable documentary evidence in the case establishes that the defendant throughout acted under the direction and control of Raja Ram Narain and that Raja Ram Narain dealt with the properties just as he liked without any reference to the plaintiff: See Exhibits D3, D4, D5, D6, D8, D24, D27, D28, B6, B20, B23.

Now, under the law in India, in order that a transaction may operate as a gift, there must, first, be a transfer of the property which, in the case of moveable property, may be effected either by a registered instrument or by delivery, and secondly, there must be acceptance by or on behalf of the donee. This is the law as laid down in section 122 and section 123 of the Transfer of Property Act. Was there then a transfer of the property to the plaintiff? It is conceded that the transfer was not effected by a registered instrument, but it is contended that, if the property be in the hands of a third person as undoubtedly it was, a request to such person by the donor to deliver is the only delivery possible. Now I do not think that the proposition in the form in which it was stated by Mr. Dutt is correct. Section 50 of the Contract Act provides that delivery of goods may be made by doing anything which has the effect of putting them in the possession of the buyer, or of any person authorised to hold them on his behalf. Under section 123 of the Transfer of Property Act, the delivery required in the case of gift of moveables is that described in section 50 of the Contract Act. Admittedly nothing was done which had the effect of putting the property in the possession of the plaintiff, but it was contended that there was constructive delivery to the plaintiff in that the defendant consented to hold them on behalf of the plaintiff.

There is, in my opinion, an obvious weakness in the argument employed, for there is nothing to show that the defendant was authorised to hold the property on behalf of the plaintiff. Illustration (f) of section 50 of the Indian Contract Act, taken from Godts v. Rose (2) will make good my point. That illustration is as follows: "A agrees to sell B five tons of oil at Rs. 1,000 per ton, to be paid for at the time of delivery. A gives to C, a wharfinger, at whose wharf he had 20 tons of the oil, an order to transfer five of them into the name of B. C. makes the transfer in his books, and gives A's clerk a notice of the transfer for B. A's clerk takes the transfer notice to B. and offers to give it him on payment of the price of the oil. B. refuses to pay. There has been no delivery to B. as B. never assented to make C. his agent to hold for him the five tons selected by A." As was pointed out by Jervis, C. J., in delivering the judgment in the case from which the illustration is taken "All these cases of delivery of the symbols of property are founded upon that sort of tripartite contract which is adverted to in some of the cases, between the vendor, the vendee, and the wharfinger....The defendant got possession of it," that is to say, the paper given by the wharfinger acknowledging the order of the plaintiff who was the seller, "by means of a fraud or an accident or mistake, and not with the intention to adopt Humphray," that is to say, the wharfinger as his agent. "The wharfinger seems to have acted upon the notion that the order transmitted to him amounted to an absolute transfer of the property. The distinction now pointed out by my brother Byles and Mr. H. James was not adverted to at the trial. The plaintiff never in fact parted with the property at all". The argument of Serjt. Byles to which reference was made in the judgment was that the delivery was not complete until the vendee had accepted the wharfinger as his agent. This was the view which was accepted by the Court. Crowder, J., in the same case said as follows, "The plaintiff intended that five tons of the oil which he had at Humphray's wharf should be delivered to the defendant, and he gave an order to the wharfinger to transfer that quantity accordingly. Did that bind the goods, and was it equivalent to a delivery to the defendant? The wharfinger, in obedience to the plaintiff's order, did transfer five tons of the oil to the name of the defendant. Was that transfer operative until the defendant had agreed to accept it? I find no authority to show that a mere delivery of an order to the wharfinger, or any act done thereon by the wharfinger, has the effect of binding the vendee, without his acceptance." In this case there is nothing more than an order on the defendant who was in possession of the goods on behalf of Raja Ram Narain to transfer the goods in the name of the plaintiff. There is no evidence that the plaintiff ever assented to make the defendant her agent to hold for her the goods given to her by her husband. In my opinion, the transaction did not operate to transfer the property in the goods to the plaintiff.

It was contended by Mr. Datt that the service of the notice by the plaintiff upon the defendant to make over the account books to her must be taken as her assent to the position occupied by the defendant. But the argument is of no avail, since the notice was served on the defendant after the death of the donor. At the time of the death of the donor, the property in the goods was still in him, and nothing that was done by the plaintiff subsequent to the death of the donor could take away the property from his heir and vest it in her.

The other prerequisite of a gift is also wanting. The Statute requires that there must be acceptance by or on behalf of the donee and during the lifetime of the donor. It is conceded that there was no acceptance by the plaintiff during the lifetime of Raja Ram Narain, but it was contended that there was acceptance by the defendant and that was the same thing as acceptance by the plaintiff. I am unable to accede to this argument, as there is no proof that the plaintiff assented to make the defendant her agent to accept the gift on her behalf. In my opinion the transaction spoken to by the witnesses examined on behalf of the plaintiff did not operate to vest the savings of Rani Ram Kumari in the plaintiff.

There were two other questions discussed by Mr. Manuk before us, the question of jurisdiction and the question of limitation. The argument as to jurisdiction is based on section 129 (7) of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act which provides that all suits by landlords and others in receipt of the rent of the land against any agents employed by them in the management of land or the collection of rents of money received or accounts kept by such agents in the course of such employment or for papers in their possession shall be cognizable by the Deputy Commissioner and shall be instituted and tried or heard under the provisions of Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act and shall not be cognizable in any other Court. It was contended that the suit was in substance a suit by a landlord against an agent employed in the management of land or the collection of rents for money received by such agent in the course of such employment. Now, in my opinion, in so far as the plaintiff sought to recover from the defendant an account of the dealings of the defendant with the specific sum of money that stood to the credit of Rani Ram Kumari at the time of her death, the suit was cognizable by the Civil Court of Hazaribagh, for such a suit cannot be said to be a suit by a landlord against an agent for money received by him as such agent. But in so far as the plaintiff sought to re-open the accounts of Rani Ram Kumari in order to show that a much larger sum of money should have been shown to the credit of Rani Ram Kumari at the time of her death, the suit fell within the class of suits mentioned in section 139 (7) and was cognizable only by the Revenue Court. For what is the right of the plaintiff to re-open such accounts? Either she claims in the right of Rani Ram Kumari as the person in whom the right of Rani Ram Kumari to claim an account from her agent is vested, or she has no cause of action at all. Her claim is substantially this: Rani Ram Kumari was undoubtedly entitled to claim an account from the defendant of his dealings with the rents, issues and profits that arose out of the Ram Kumari villages; after the death of Ram Kumari that right devolved on Raja Ram Narain, when Raja Ram Narain made a gift of the Ram Kumari villages to her together with the undisposed of savings effected by her and which were in the hands of the defendant, she obtained the right to obtain from the defendant an account of his dealings with the Ram Kumari villages to discover what those undisposed of savings were. Her claim so put is one which is possible to understand; but then that claim being in the right of Ram Kumari is one which was cognizable by the Revenue Court, and by no other Court; for the relationship between Rani Ram Kumari and the defendant was one of landlord and agent, and the savings whatever they were, represented money received by the agent in the management of land and the collection of rents and in the course of such employment as agent. The suit as constituted undoubtedly invited the Court to go into the accounts of Rani Ram Kumari, and, in my opinion, it was not cognizable by the Civil Court of Hazaribagh.

It was, however, contended by Mr. Dutt that certain specific sums of moneys undoubtedly stood to the credit of Rani Ram Kumari at the time of her death, and that it was competent to the plaintiff to institute a suit in the Civil Court for recovery of those specific sums of moneys. This contention is right; and, if the plaintiff had established her case as to the gift, she would clearly be entitled to a decree in respect of such specific sums of moneys as stood to the credit of Rani Ram Kumari at the time of her death. Admittedly there was a sum of Rs. 19,059 6 to the credit of Rani Ram Kumari at the time of her death. Mr. Dutt contends that he is entitled to recover four other sums of moneys which according to him undoubtedly belonged to Rani Ram Kumari and which he says he has been able to trace into the hands of the defendant. The first is an item of Rs. 23,414-9-0 covered by Exhibit 71-1, an entry in the loan book under date the Jeth Badi 10, 1961. The entry shows that the defendant took a loan of Rs. 23,414-9-0 from the money which was in his hands. The entry bears the seal of Rani Ram Kumari. Raja Ram Narain, therefore, had notice of the loan and it may be assumed that the loan was taken by the defendant with the assent of Raja Ram Narain. When the relationship between the parties is remembered, there is no difficulty in understanding the entry. The question is—is the plaintiff entitled to recover this sum of money by virtue of the gift alleged to have been made in her favour by Raja Ram Narain? In my opinion it is impossible to uphold the contention of the plaintiff. It may be that Raja Ram Narain had a claim to recover this sum of money from the defendant; but an actionable claim can not be transferred by word of mouth; it could only be transferred by an instrument in writing signed by the transferor and admittedly the plaintiff does not base her claim on any instrument in writing signed by Raja Ram Narain. The next is an item of Rs. 30,000 which was given to the defendant as "aid for building a house". Exhibit 31-1 is the entry upon which Mr. Dutt relies. This entry again was inspected by Raja Ram Narain and was sealed by him. We must assume that the aid was in fact given to the defendant and the plaintiff cannot recover this sum of money from the defendant. The next is an item of Rs. 6,000 which was given to the defendant as an "aid". This item does not appear to have been sealed, but the defendant in his evidence states that he took the amount under Raja Ram Narain's order. The entry is Exhibit 32-1 and it is unlikely that the defendant could have appropriated this sum of money without the knowledge of Raja Ram Narain who, as I have already mentioned, regularly inspected the books of account. Lastly there is a sum of Rs. 5,722-6-3 which again was given to the defendant as "aid for building a house". The relevant entry is Exhibit

NADAR SHAH V. ISHAR DAS.

2-1. The entry does not appear to have been sealed, but as I have said before, it is unlikely that he could have taken this sum of money without the assent of Raja Ram Narain. In my opinion if the plaintiff succeeds on the question of the factum and the validity of the gift and if it is established that Raja Ram Narain was competent to make a gift of the undisposed of savings of Rani Ram Kumari to the plaintiff, the plaintiff would be entitled to a decree as against the defendant for the sum of Rs. 19,059-6 0.

Lastly, there is the question of limitation. In my opinion Article 89 of the Limitation Act applies and the plaintiff's suit in so far as it may be considered to be a suit for recovery of such sums of moneys as stood to the credit of Rani Ram Kumari at the time of her death, is not barred by limitation. But so far as the plaintiff invited the Court to re-open the accounts of Rani Ram Kumari in order to show that there was a much larger sum of money standing to the credit of Rani Ram Kumari at the time of her death, the suit is clearly barred by limitation. It is true that Rani Ram Kumari was entitled to claim an account from the defendant as to his dealings with the rents, issues and profits that arose out of the Ram Kumari villages in the hands of the defendant. The agency came to an end with the death of Rani Ram Kumari which took place on the 26th November 1910. Raja Ram Narain had three years from the death of Rani Ram Kumari to maintain an action for account as against the defendant. The suit was brought more than three years after the date of Rani Ram Kumari's death and in so far as the suit is a suit for account of the dealings of the defendant with Rani Ram Kumari's estate, it is clearly barred by limitation. Mr. Dutt contended that the defendant was an express trustee in respect of the funds which belonged to Rani Ram Kumari and which were in his hands. I am unable to agree with this contention.

In the result, I would allow this appeal, set aside the judgment and the decrees passed by the Court below and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs in both the Courts.

Limitation Act (IX of 1871), s. 20—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 19—Acknowledgment not signed by all mortgagees, effect of.

An acknowledgment of the right of redemption, in order to save limitation, either under Act IX of 1871 or Act XV of 1877, should be made by all the mortgagees. If it is not signed by all the mortgagees, it does not hold good even with regard to the shares of those who signed it, if the mortgage is indivisible. [p. 484, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sue for redemption of land which they say was mortgaged about 100 years before suit, and the question in the case is whether limitation is saved by an acknowledgment made by some of the mortgagees in the Settlement Record of 1873. The Courts below have concurred in holding that the acknowledgment is not effectual and that the suit is barred by limitation. The plaintiffs have filed a second appeal in this Court.

The acknowledgment in the Settlement Record of 1873 was signed by six of the mortgagees, namely, Dogar Das, Thakar, Haria Ram, Rupa, Chandi Ram, and Mehru and not signed by the remaining four who were Hukma Ram, Hazuri Ram, Bishan Dial and Ganga Ram and even if Mehru can be regarded as having signed also on behalf of his brothers Hukma Ram and Hazuri Ram, who were minors, it is impossible to get over the difficulty that none of the signatories signed or was competent to sign on behalf of Bishan Dial and Ganga Ram. Although Bishan Dial and Ganga Ram were then described as absentees they had not abandoned their rights, for, in 1879 they took part in a partition in which the land in suit was included. In order that the acknowledgment might have the effect of saving limitation it was necessary that it should have been made by all the mortgagees. As two of the mortgagees did not sign it, and it is not shown that the others had authority to sign it for them. The acknowledgment is wholly ineffectual, whether the Limitation Act to be applied is Act IX of 1871 or Act XV of 1877. I am further in agreement with the Courts below in holding that as the plaintiffs have not shown that the mortgage took place within 60 years of the date when Act XV of 1877 came into force, the Act applicable is Act IX of 1871 under which an acknowledgment of the right of redemption, in order to save limitation, had to be signed by the mortgagee or by some person claiming under him, there being no provision in that Act by which the acknowledgment would be sufficient if signed by a duly authorized agent of the mortgagee.

It is contended that even if the acknowledgment does not affect the shares of those who did not sign it should hold good as regards the shares of the others. I cannot agree with this contention or with the contention that the mortgage was divisible. There was one single mortgage, and that the fact that each branch of the family was recorded as having a one sixth share would not have entitled the plaintiffs to sue each separately for redemption so also the acknowledgment cannot separate so as to save limitation in regard to the claim for a part of the mortgaged property, while it is ineffectual so far as the claim for the remainder is concerned.

Another argument put forward is that the defendants being the descendants of the persons who signed the acknowledgment in 1873, are estopped from pleading that the absence of the signatures of Bisban Dial and Ganga Ram renders the acknowledgment ineffectual. This argument also does not appear to be correct. I cannot agree that the plaintiff's position has been changed as the result of the acknowledgment given in 1873, and I see no reason why the defendants should be precluded from setting up a plea, which Bisban Dial and Ganga Ram to whose rights they have succeeded, could have raised.

The Courts below have rightly held that the suit is barred by limitation, and I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Where the plaintiff claims in the plaint, in his own right of succession, possession of properties as well as the position of mohunt on the ground that the defendant has forfeited the mohuntship by marrying, section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code is no bar to the suit although some of the grounds of his claim are such as would be contemplated in that section. JUDGMENT.

BUCKNILL, J.—This is an appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Muzafferpur, dated the 18th December 1918.

The circumstances under which this litigation has taken place are in themselves simple enough but raised somewhat difficult questions. The defendant is the mohunt of an Asthal of considerable historic importance which has been referred to throughout the proceedings as the Sitamarhi Asthal. It appears to have been founded in the year 1539 and to have been situated near a water from which the goddess Sita is believed to have emanated. The first mohunt appears to have been one Hiram and since him there have been seven more; the last being the defendant. It is common ground that, ever since the foundation of this establishment, each mohunt has appointed as his successor his nephew, and that all the mohunts have hitherto been unmarried. What has happened up till now is that each successive mohunt has taken his nephew as his chela and has been succeeded by him. Although in the plaint in the suit brought by the plaintiff against the defendant there are various allegations, such as of illegal dealing with property attached to the Asthal, the only matter which has been brought before this Court on this appeal is the admitted fact that the defendant has married, and it is alleged by the plaintiff that by having contracted a marriage the defendant has incurred forfeiture of his mohuntship; in addition to this question arises the further point as to whether the plaintiff has any legal status for bringing this suit. The plaintiff was admittedly a chela of the defendant's predecessor whose name was Bhagwat Das and he claims to be an agnate relative of the defendant; he does not claim to be the defendant's nephew but to be the nephew of one of the second cousins of the defendant; he also is admittedly a guru bhai of the defendant, they both having been chelas of the defendant's predecessor. In 1915 the plaintiff brought his action against the defendant and he asked, firstly, that it might be declared that the plaintiff was entitled to the mohuntship and gaddinashini of the Asthal; secondly, that the right of the defendant thereto has become extinct; that he is not entitled to keep the property appertaining thereto and that his possession is unlawful; thirdly, that a decree might be passed in his favour awarding him possession and dispossessing the defendant; and, fourthly, that an enquiry should be made as to the mesne profits from the date of the defendant's marriage. The defendant raised various defenses; firstly, that the suit was barred as it had not been brought under the provisions of section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code; secondly, that marriage did not entail forfeiture and that the defendant was entitled to marry without incurring any disability; thirdly, he denied having dealt illegally with or wasted or mismanaged the property; fourthly, he denied that the plaintiff belonged to the family of his predecessor or that he was a Gotia or blood relation, and, lastly, he disputed, in any case, the claim made by the plaintiff to the succession on the ground that he (the defendant) had initiated several chelas who were relatives of the family of previous mohunts.

A very large quantity both of oral and documentary evidence, was produced before the Subordinate Judge, who, in the course of a long and elaborate judgment, came to findings to the following effect:—

1. That the fact that the provisions of section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure relative to the procedure to be adopted where litigation is contemplated in connection with public charities had not been adopted was a bar to the plaintiff's suit, in so far as the question of wastage of the Asthal properties was concerned but did not debar him from obtaining relief if the defendant by his marriage had put himself under such disability as would prevent him from continuing to hold his mohuntship.

2. That there had in fact been no wastage by the defendant of the Asthal properties.

3. That the properties in suit were all properties attached to the Asthal and that if the defendant lost his post as mohunt he would lose the properties also.

4. That the plaintiff was not an agnate son or even an agnate relative of the defendant.

5. That the defendant had initiated Bairagi chelas.

6. That the defendant's marriage did not result in forfeiture of his office.

The Subordinate Judge on these findings dismissed the plaintiff's claim with costs. Some of these findings, such as, for example, that on the question of waste, have not been argued before this Court and indeed the case has, I think, been presented to this Court in a somewhat different way to that in which it was placed before the Subordinate Judge. To my mind there are really but two points which have to be considered. These are:—

1. Has the plaintiff any locus standi to bring this suit in its present form?

2. If he has, then does the fact that the defendant has married result in his having to give up office as mohunt of the Asthal?

Now, with regard to the first question, it is very important to see in what way the plaintiff himself placed his claim in his plaint. He says in paragraph 3 "that for the purposes of appointment of a successor to the reigning mohunt the said Asthal is a maurusi ore, that is to say, that the reigning mohunt has the right to appoint one of his Bairagi chelas as his heir, representative and successor under a deed or without it by giving him tilak, kanthi, chaddar and pugri. It has been the custom of the said Asthal that the reigning mohunt has been appointing one of his Bairagi chelas belonging to his girkhasti family as his heir, representative and successor." Now, so far, the defendant admits this and that the statements made by the plaintiff are substantially correct, specifically doing so in paragraph 20 of his statement of defence. The plaintiff, however, then proceeds to say, "it is also the custom of the said Asthal that if the reigning mohunt die without appointing his successor or heir or do any act which renders him unfit to remain as such, the eldest of an Vaishnav Bairagi chelas who is also his agnate by descent or in case of there being no such Vaishnav Bairagi chela, the eldest of his Vaishnav Bairagi guru bhais who is his agnate by descent, would be the girkhastin of the said Asthal and would take possession of the properties appertaining thereto." This part of the claim is stoutly denied by the defendant. In paragraph 7 of his plaint the plaintiff claims that, as a chela of the defendant's predecessor and as the only girkhasti chela of that mohunt he is the only person who is entitled to become the mohunt, on the forfeiture, owing to his (the defendant's) marriage, of the post and the appurtenant properties. It has been pointed out how it would appear that, so long as it was possible, all mohunts of this Asthal have taken as their chelas and nominated as their successors their agnate nephews; but there is no evidence whatever, in my opinion, to show (and indeed there could be none to show) that if, as in this case, there was no nephew, there was any custom of the Asthal as to who should succeed the mohunt; for no occasion has occurred on which any question of what was the proper method of succession had arisen. It seems, therefore, to me to be impossible that there should have been any evidence of custom as is alleged by the plaintiff as to what was the nature of succession where a mohunt had no Bairagi chela belonging to his agnate girkhasti family.

The primary question which has to be carefully considered is, who is, the proper successor to the mohunt of this Asthal. As has been mentioned before, the matter hitherto has given rise to no difficulty for the simple reason that each mohunt has in fact adopted, as his chela and successor, his agnate nephew. Out of this fact arise several questions: firstly, does this fact constitute a custom which excludes the succession to the mohuntship of any one who is not an agnate relation to the out-going mohunt? What is the proper method of succession? I think that it is here of very great importance to see if there is anything in the documentary evidence which helps in a decision upon this point and here must be noted a document (Exhibit B) which is dated 13th of Kartik 1007 F.S. (1599 A.D.) which constitutes a grant, from one Sri Nirpati Singh in favour of the first mohunt, who is described as Fakirana Gosain Sri Hira Ram Mohunt, of certain Mouzas, in the following terms:—"You shall cultivate, grow corn and settle the said Mouza and you with your disciples and disciples of disciples shall enjoy the entire produce thereof. The Mouza should be treated as khari jama and no resistance should be offered." Now, it is perfectly clear that, at any rate, with regard to this endowment it was thought that a not unusual practice would be followed, namely, that each mohunt would be succeeded by his chela. There is no idea in the mind of the donor that the chela successor must necessarily be a relative of the mohunt. It is quite intelligible that, as a matter of family interest, it has been the practice very naturally to keep the valuable properties appertaining to this Asthal in the hands of the mohunt's family, but it is very difficult to say that it is possible to assert that any exclusive custom has been established which would prevent a mohunt, should he so wish, from appointing as his successor a chela who is not necessarily a member of his grihasti family. The question is whether, if a mohunt chose to appoint as his successor one of his chelas who is not a relative, the family of the mohunt could successfully oppose such an appointment. This point, namely, that there can be no exclusive custom in this Asthal that the devolution of the mohuntship must fall upon a blood relative, has been very forcibly urged before this Court by Mr. Hasan Imam, Counsel for the respondent. It is contended by him that, as it is possible here to trace the nature of the original grant of, at any rate, a portion of what now forms the Asthal properties and that as in that document the usual succession from mohunt to chela is contemplated it is not competent for the donee and his successors to graft on to the conditions of this grant any custom which would restrict the devolution of the incumbency to the family. And it is also pointed out that in numerous other documents which indicate the manner in which other properties became appurtenant to the Asthal there is nothing to indicate any form of restrictive devolution. I am bound to say that it seems to me that this argument possesses considerable force but when one considers that for 300 years the incumbency has been maintained strictly within the family by the adoption by the reigning mohunt of his agnatic nephew I am inclined to think that it would be contrary to good sense to depart from that practice. But there is more than this to be said about the matter. It would appear quite clear that this point was not raised before the Subordinate Judge and is raised now by the respondent as what is practically a new case on appeal and one which the plaintiff has never had a proper opportunity of meeting. The Subordinate Judge writes in his judgment "it is an admitted fact that the mohunts of Sitamarhi Asthal must be a Gour Brahmin connected with their natural family." Again, in paragraph 20 of the statement of defence it is definitely stated that "the custom and usage alleged by the plaintiff in the first part of paragraph 3, to wit, that the Sitamarhi Asthal is a maurusi (one that goes by descent) Asthal and a chela related by blood to the reigning mohunt succeeds on the demise of reigning mohunt, are substantially correct." It is also quite clear from the defendant's own evidence that the tradition and the method of devolution was in fact always normally to be followed if possible and he states "in case I had died immediately after Bhagwat Das's death, Raghunath Das who is a chela of Bhagwat Das and who is my agnate's cousin's son (mohunt Janki Das's son) would have become the mohunt after me." The plaintiff's own case is, of course, based upon the necessity for maintaining the agnatic tradition. To my mind, therefore, there is no doubt that before the Subordinate Judge the whole case proceeded on the common ground that there did exist a definite custom that the mohuntship and possession of the properties of the Sitamarhi Asthal were limited primarily to chelas who are blood relatives of the deceased or the outgoing incumbent. I do not think, therefore, that it is possible to allow the respondent to raise this question at this stage.

Having now disposed of this point, I think, before proceeding to the next, it is desirable to endeavour to ascertain what is really meant by the use of certain phrases which seem to have been somewhat loosely utilised. We see the words "natural family" "grihasti family" and "blood relation," and the question really is, whether they are used as intended to have the same meaning; can they be utilised in the ordinary way to denote cognatic as well as agnatic relationship? Here, again, I think that the case before the Subordinate Judge proceeded on the assumption that an agnatic chela of an out-going mohunt would take preference over any other chela; and it would seem from what the defendant himself states that if he had died without having appointed any chela, an agnatic chela of his predecessor would succeed to the post. This, coupled with what I have stated above, shows, I think, that the belief of those connected with the Asthal of whatever party they may be was that, in the event of there being no agnatic chela of an out-going mohunt any agnatic relative who had been a chela of any mohunt of the Asthal would succeed. But the matter has to be followed out a little further; the question is whether this insistence on the agnatic succession would, in the event of the out-going mohunt having appointed chelas who though not agnates were cognatic relatives or who perhaps were not even relatives at all, have the effect that such chelas of the out-going mohunt would be preferred in the succession to an agnatic relative who was a chela of an earlier mohunt. This is the natural question which is the next one in this case which rises for consideration, for it is here admitted that the defendant has appointed chelas, that these chelas are not agnatic relatives but some, at any rate, of them are cognatic relatives. There is really nothing much which can possibly guide one in coming to a definite decision upon this point and perhaps it is unnecessary to say more than that whilst, on the one side, one sees the principle (indicated in the grant) that the mohuntship should descend to a mohunt's chela, on the other side, one has the strong impression of traditional necessity for keeping the incumbency in the agnatic family. If a cognatic chela of the out-going mohunt would not be preferred to an agnatic chela of a prior one, it is obvious that a chela of an out-going mohunt who was not even a cognatic relative could not have any priority over a chela who was an agnatic relative of a prior one; and, if one cared to explore this matter still further, it might be of importance to ascertain whether any agnatic relative, who was properly trained and qualified to be a mohunt, would not be preferred to any one else even though he may not have been a chela of any of the mohunts of the Asthal.

But in addition to this, i. e., a claim as an agnatic relative, the plaintiff also bases his claim not only on being an agnatic relative but also on being a guru bhai of the defendant. There is nothing, however, which I can see in the evidence, which can possibly substantiate his claim to succeed to the incumbency merely as a guru bhai of the present holder of the position and his status must, apart from any other question, be, in my opinion, dependent upon whether he is or is not in fact an agnatic relative. Now, on this very important question there was a great deal of evidence of an extremely contradictory character and the two stories put forward respectively by the plaintiff and the defendant are completely in conflict. The plaintiff maintains that he is, what I suppose in English terminology would be called, a third cousin of the defendant on the father's side. The defendant, on the other hand, alleges that the plaintiff is not an agnatic relative at all but that he is connected with him by the fact that his (plaintiff's) brother's son married the defendant's niece's daughter. The Subordinate Judge has examined the voluminous evidence at considerable length and with considerable care. He comes to the conclusion that the plaintiff has failed to prove that he is an agnatic relation. I think that it is conceded by the defendant and certainly there is ample evidence to show that the plaintiff was not only a person of considerable importance in the affairs of the Asthal but was connected in some way with him; he was undoubtedly a chela of the defendant's predecessor and a guru bhai of the defendant. There is however, very little documentary evidence in support of the plaintiff's claim to relationship of an agnatic character. In Exhibit 1, which is a deed dated the 8th December 1904, executed by the Mohunt Bhagwat Das in favour of the plaintiff's brother and others, a certain passage occurs which is thus translated, "but Ramantar Missir (this person is admittedly the plaintiff's brother) and others are related to the girhasti family of me, the declarant." The important word here is the word 'related' and the Subordinate Judge, who gives the passage in the vernacular, does not consider that the word there used necessarily connotes any agnatic relationship. The learned Subordinate Judge in coming to this conclusion has taken into account also a passage in Exhibit D which is a deed also made by the Mohunt Bhagwat Das on the 9th of December 1904 in which a word occurred which is again translated "related". The two words in the two documents are in fact connected, that in the first being "rishtimand" whilst in the latter the word is "rista". All that the learned Subordinate Judge can decide on this point with regard to these documents is, that the word "rishtamand" might include either agnatie or cognatie relatives. However, there is another way in which this document, Exhibit 1, has been utilised by the defendant; it is to attempt to destroy the statement by the defendant that the only relationship between the plaintiff and the defendant is through the plaintiff's brother, Ramautar Missir, by the latter's son's marriage to the defendant's niece's daughter; it is utilised in this way:— it is said by the defendant in his evidence that this marriage took place some 12 or 13 years ago; the defendant gave his evidence in August 1918 and it is pointed out, therefore, that it would seem that Exhibit No. 1, which was dated the 8th December 1904, was probably executed before the marriage and that, if that was really so, there was some connection other than that through the marriage between the plaintiff and the defendant or otherwise he would not have used in that deed the word translated as "related". I am not at all sure, even supposing that it was clearly proved that the marriage took place after the execution of this deed, that the expression in the deed proves anything conclusive, although I think it is not at all improbable that in some way or other the plaintiff was connected with the family of the mohunts. But the onus upon him, of course, is to prove his agnatie connection without any doubt. The Subordinate Judge goes through the oral evidence given in favour of the plaintiff at some length and with one or two exceptions specifically refers, I think, to all those witnesses who speak as to the relationship. I have myself made an independent analysis. There is, first of all, the plaintiff himself who says that Bhagwat Das the mohunt who was the defendant's predecessor was cousin to the plaintiff's father and he gives a detail of relationship which can be worked out in the following table:—

His brother supports him, but the Subordinate Judge does not feel that he can accept their evidence as in any way reliable or trustworthy as they are such deeply interested parties. There are numerous witnesses who in some sort of way support the plaintiff's story; for example, the plaintiff's witness No. 4, who is a mohunt, states that the plaintiff was a nephew of the defendant's predecessor by "natural relationship," but, as is pointed out by the Subordinate Judge, his means of information were simply that he had been told by the defendant's predecessor that a Brahmin of his brotherhood who had become his chela cooked his food; and it is clear that the word "brotherhood" does not necessarily indicate agnatic relationship but merely religious fraternity. Plaintiff's fifth witness is a Z mindar; he also says that the plaintiff is by "natural relation" a nephew of the defendant. He says that he heard that the plaintiff was the defendant's predecessor's nephew from the defendant's predecessor himself; he cannot say when this was nor had he ever seen any genealogical tree. Plaintiff's witness No. 7, who is also a mohunt, simply states that the plaintiff was "the nephew of the defendant's predecessor" but he does not say how he acquired this information. Plaintiff's witness No. 8 is a Pundit; he states that the plaintiff is a son of a "cousin brother of Bhagwat Das (i. e. defendant's predecessor) in the natural family." This witness states that he was a Pundit at Sitamarhi Asthal but the Subordinate Judge discards his evidence entirely, on the ground that he was not the Purohit at the Sradh of the defendant's father and mother and had presumably no special means of ascertaining the family history. Plaintiff's witness No. 9 was a chela of defendant's predecessor; he says that the plaintiff was the nephew of defendant's predecessor by natural relationship but he also states that he had no particular knowledge of the family history and has never seen any genealogical tree. Plaintiff's witness No. 11 is a Zemindar; he simply states that the plaintiff is a nephew of Bhagwat Das by natural relationship. He comes from Necknampur which, he states, was the birth place of the ancestors of Bhagwat Das's family; he states that he knows their genealogical history. Plaintiff's witness No. 17 is a chela of the Sitamarhi Asthal; he says that the plaintiff is a son of the cousin of the defendant's predecessor according to natural relationship. The Subordinate Judge does not seem to have mentioned this witness nor the following two of the plaintiff's witnesses, namely, No. 21, who is also a chela of the Asthal, and says that the plaintiff is a nephew of the defendant's predecessor by natural relationship and No. 22, another chela of the Asthal, who says that the plaintiff was the brother's son or cousin's son of the defendant's predecessor. The Subordinate Judge does not consider that these witnesses belonged to the plaintiff's natural family or that they could have had anything more than a superficial or hearsay knowledge of what they stated. It is perhaps hardly necessary here to observe that two circumstances are here present; the first is, that there is no doubt, that the present dispute has split those who are connected with the Asthal into two sides, some of whom vigorously support the plaintiff throughout, whilst others strongly uphold the defendant, whilst secondly it is, of course, quite easy to obtain persons on either side simply to come forward and speak to a relationship between persons in bold statements which it is almost impossible to controvert except by showing them to be mere matters of hearsay or at any rate to be unsupported by any documentary evidence or derived from any effective authority. Now, I am far from saying that the plaintiff has not, in view of the number of witnesses which he has called and in view of his own evidence, made out some kind of case in favour of his claim to be an agnate of the defendant but he is met by a very large body of evidence given on behalf of the defendant which absolutely contradicts the evidence given on his (the plaintiff's) behalf. The Subordinate Judge considers that the evidence of the witnesses for the defendant is considerably stronger than that given on behalf of the plaintiff and he, therefore, came to the conclusion that the plaintiff was not an agnatic cousin of the defendant and was not connected with him as an agnate at all. The evidence put forward on behalf of the defendant in connection with this point consists of that of defence witness No. 1 who is a chela; he states that the plaintiff was not an agnate of defendant's predecessor whose agnates had never lived at Necknampur but whose ancestors were resident at Miraulia in the District of Shahabad. He states further that the defendant's predecessor himself told the witness that the plaintiff was not his agnate. The defendant himself states that his family has many agnatic relations at Miraulia where his agnatic family and ancestors reside and that none of the mohunts of Sitamarhi were ever born at Necknampur. He gives a long account of his version of the family-tree which is quite different to that put forward by the plaintiff. He denies flatly that the plaintiff is an agnate and states that he has no knowledge of Sheo Dayal whom the plaintiff declares was his great grand-father. He says that the only connection between him and the plaintiff is that a daughter of his sister's daughter married the plaintiff's brother's son. The defendant says also that he did see a genealogical table once of his family at their family seat at Misraulia with one Mohunt Jagannath Das. This certainly did not confirm the descent as claimed by the plaintiff. Finally, he declares positively that he has himself personal knowledge of the nature of the relationship between the plaintiff and himself which is merely that of the marriage. Defendant's witness No. 6 is a chela of the defendant's predecessor residing at the Sitamarhi Math. He states that the plaintiff does not belong to the defendant's family, that is to say, his natural family. He also says that the defendant's predecessor, who had adopted the defendant as his chela and successor, was anxious that the defendant should marry because there was no other agnatic male member in his family, using these words, "I wish to marry Sita Ram Das (i. e., the defendant) as there is no other male member in my family. Otherwise the gadi will go to another family." The defendant's witness No. 9, who is a Zemindar residing in Darbhanga District, says that the defendant's predecessor was anxious that the defendant should marry because there was no other man to succeed him. This witness states that the defendant's predecessor openly stated that the plaintiff did not belong to his (defendant's) family and that it was observable that on the occasion when news of the death of one of Bhagwat Das's family at Misraulia was brought to Sitamarhi, although the defendant and Bhagwat Das observed Asaush, the plaintiff did not do so; and that it was on that occasion that Bhagwat Das stated that the plaintiff did not belong to his family. Defendant's witness No. 10 is the personal servant at Sitamarhi Asthal. He seems to be a hereditary officer, his father and grand-father having served there in the same capacity to previous mohunts. He states that the plaintiff does not belong to defendant's family and that he himself never saw the plaintiff observe Asaush in the case of the death of any members of the defendant's family. The next witness No.

11 is a cultivator residing at Janukpur in the District of Muzaffarpur; he is from the Misraulia family to which the defendant belongs and he states that none of his ancestors had ever settled at Neeknampur, thus contradicting the plaintiff's story of his descent from Sheo Dayal who is alleged to have migrated from Misraulia to that place. This witness deposes that Bhagwat Das is of his own family and an agnate and he states definitely that the plaintiff is not his or Bhagwat Das's agnate. He says that he can tell the names of his ancestors up to the 11th degree of ascent. The next witness is one of the Porohits of the Sitamarhi Asthal (defendant's witness No. 12); again, this man appears to have occupied an hereditary office as his father and grand-father had undertaken the same duties. He knows that the defendant's ancestors came from Misraulia and that the plaintiff is not an agnate of Bhagwat Das. Defendant's witness No. 13 is a Zemindar living at Misraulia; he gives a long family trail and claims to have had with the mohunts of the Asthal a common descent. He knows the plaintiff whom he says does not belong to his family and is not his agnate. He appears to have some considerable knowledge of his own family history. Defendant's witness No. 25 is a cultivator also residing at Misraulia and an agnate relative of the defendant's family; he also knows the plaintiff whom he says is certainly not an agnate of his family. Defendant's witness No. 26 is also a cultivator at Misraulia and again an agnatic relative of the defendant. He supports the other witnesses and denies that the plaintiff is his agnate; he seems to know a good deal of his family history. Defendant's witness No. 32 is a mohunt living at Misraulia and an agnatic relative of the defendant; he states that no branch of the family ever settled at Neeknampur, although a branch settled at Janukpur and another at Sitamarhi; the family was settled at Misraulia; he produced a genealogical table (Exhibit M) which he says he obtained from his grand-father. This apparently does not include the plaintiff's family in any way; he denies that the plaintiff is an agnate relation. Although the Subordinate Judge does not attach much importance to this genealogical tree (Exhibit M) which he thinks could easily have been written out for the purpose, he does attach great importance to the presence and testimony of such a large number of his family in support of his (defendant's) statements. He points out that it is very strange that not a single man of the Misser family comes from Misraulia to support the plaintiff's allegation. He states that he cannot believe that all these men would have spoken untruly and juggled with the names of their own ancestors in order to support the defendant. There is no doubt that the evidence given in support of the defendant as to the case is distinctly strong. Numerous members of the particular family to which the defendant admittedly belongs and to which the plaintiff desires to show that he also belongs, have given evidence denying that the plaintiff is an agnatic relative. The plaintiff's story that his ancestors, originally residing at Misraulia, migrated to Neeknampur (thus accounting for the practical separation of the branches) does not seem to have been adequately established. The Subordinate Judge has weighed the evidence given on both sides. He has seen the witnesses and he has come to the conclusion that the weight of evidence is undoubtedly in favour of the defendant. Unless I could see very strong reasons for saying that the Subordinate Judge was wrong, I think it would be altogether improper to disagree with the conclusion to which he has come; and, indeed, on reading through and considering carefully the evidence on both sides, I have come to the conclusion that the Subordinate Judge was quite right; I think that the plaintiff by his evidence succeeded in giving to his claim to be an agnatic relation of the defendant some semblance of plausibility; I do not, however, think that the evidence put forward on his behalf is, when it has been so seriously challenged and strongly met, sufficient to prove conclusively his story. If the plaintiff is not an agnatic relative; he, whatever may be the other circumstances or whatever may be the other questions for decision, clearly has no locus standi for bringing the present suit. The matter is, therefore, substantially disposed of by the view which I take of this point. As, however, it is possible that the case may go further it is perhaps desirable that I should express my opinion upon certain other points which have been raised. The first of these is whether the plaintiff is debarred from bringing this action because he has not taken the steps which, under certain circumstances, are laid down by section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This section reads as follows:—

"(1) In the case of any alleged breach of any express or constructive trust created for public purposes of a charitable or religious nature, or where the direction of the Court is deemed necessary for the administration of any such trust, the Advocate-General, or two or more persons having an interest in the trust and having obtained the consent in writing of the Advocate-General, may institute a suit, whether contentious or not, in the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction or in any other Court empowered in that behalf by the Local Government within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the whole or any part of the subject-matter of the trust is situate, to obtain a decree—

- "(a) removing any trustee;
- "(b) appointing a new trustee;
- "(c) vesting any property in a trustee;
- "(d) directing accounts and inquiries;
- "(e) declaring what proportion of the trust property or of the interest therein shall be allocated to any particular object of the trust;
- "(f) authorizing the whole or any part of the trust-property to be let, sold, mortgaged or exchanged;
- "(g) settling a scheme; or
- "(h) granting such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require.

"(2) Save as provided by the Religious Endowments Act, 1863, no suit claiming any of the reliefs specified in sub-section (1) shall be instituted in respect of any such trust as is therein referred to except in conformity with the provisions of that sub-section."

The Subordinate Judge thought that a mohunt of an Asthal being merely a sort of trustee can be removed from his office if he is guilty of violation of his trust and that the plaintiff was barred by section 92 from claiming any relief against the defendant on account of the alleged waste of the trust property but, on the other hand, the Subordinate Judge thought that section 92 did not debar the plaintiff from obtaining the relief which he sought on the ground that by the defendant's marriage he (the defendant) had forfeited his office. It should be observed that what the plaintiff claims here in his plaint does not altogether contemplate merely matters which are comprised in section 92, for he claims, as in his own right of succession, possession of the properties as well as the position of mohunt on the ground that the defendant has forfeited them owing, amongst other reasons, to the fact that he has married. Although it may be that, mingled with this application, there is also a claim based upon an alleged breach of trust, such as is contemplated under section 92, I hardly imagine that a claim for ejectment and possession of the character made in the present case, such claim being based upon an alleged personal right of the plaintiff, is one which can be regarded as falling within the purview of section 92.

I do not think that it is necessary to comment in any way upon the question as to whether the defendant was guilty of any of the charges which were brought against him in connection with waste or misappropriation of the property appertaining to the Asthal, for the point has not been raised here in this Court, although before the Subordinate Judge it was strongly urged but decided by him in favour of the defendant.

The only other question for consideration is as to what, if any, is the effect upon the position of the defendant in relation to his mohuntship produced by the admitted fact that he has contracted a marriage alliance. It must be confessed that, when entering upon this question, one finds oneself confronted with considerable difficulties. These difficulties present themselves from more than one direction. In the first place, one is plunged into the extremely intricate sea of observances and traditions which surround the hierarchy of the Hindu priesthood; secondly, one is met with a mass of evidence much of which appears to be entirely contradictory although in some cases adduced by witnesses whose character and credibility one would think were normally beyond criticism. I am trying, however, to think that to a large extent much of what appears to be the conflict between what is stated by some of the witnesses on the part of the plaintiff and some of those on behalf of the defendant is due to the fact that some of the technical religious or semi-religious words which are used by them are not always used in precisely the same sense; and, from what I have been able to gather during the hearing of this appeal, it is certainly the case that some of these phrases are in ordinary parlance often utilized in a somewhat loose fashion. So far as it is of any value, however, in the plaintiff's favour, a start in the consideration of the question may be made by the admitted fact that, from the commencement of the foundation of this Asthal in 1599, all the mohunts have been celibates until the defendant, the 8th mohunt, chose to marry. There is also no doubt that the fact of his having done so has been the, or one of the, causes which has given rise to this expensive and protracted litigation and has given umbrage to some of those who are connected with the Asthal. It must not, however, be lost sight of that the incumbency of this Asthal is a valuable and coveted possession and probably one from which the incumbent can derive possibly both for himself, his family and his adherents and, for all I know properly, a comfortable livelihood. There is nothing, so far as I can ascertain, in the documents which have been produced in this case to show that any condition of celibacy was extrinsically imposed upon the holders of the mohuntship. It may, however, be contended, with some force, that if the custom or usage or tradition of succession by agnatic chelas (mentioned at an earlier stage of this judgment as obtained since the foundation of the Asthal) is to be regarded as a definite custom now binding upon the institution and which cannot properly and legally be departed from (unless, of course, no agnatic relation qualified for the post existed) and one to which effect must be given, it is difficult to see why this tradition of celibacy extending over a like period should not also be recognised as a custom equally obligatory upon the incumbents of the Asthal. Indeed, in some respects it may be thought that the presumption, in favour of the tradition of celibacy being obligatory, might be considered as stronger than that of the agnatic succession; for whilst the latter can be clearly comprehended owing to the natural desire to retain the benefits derived from the Asthal in the hands of the family the former is, speaking generally, a departure from the normal and is a self-imposed condition which essentially is not usual in ordinary human life. I have, however, at an earlier stage of my observations already dealt at considerable length with the question as to the binding character and the usage of agnatic succession. I have pointed out that it was a custom which, so far as this case is concerned, had, in my opinion, not been in issue between the parties and that, although I was inclined to think that after so long a period it might be regarded as a tradition which should rightly and properly be always followed, a decision as to this point did not arise in this litigation and should not perhaps be allowed to be raised in this Court. The position with regard to the necessary celibacy of the mohunts of this Asthal has, on the other hand, always been, together with the relationship between the plaintiff and the defendant, the principal point at issue between the parties to this litigation. I must admit that in my mind I think that the very fact that none of the mohunts of this Asthal have ever married hitherto presents the plaintiff with a strong prima facie case; but, on the other hand, it must be remembered that up till now the adoption by each insumbent mohunt of his nephew as his chela and successor has presented no difficulties. The defendant himself states in his evidence that his predecessor, the mohunt Bhagwat Das, observing that this tradition of nepotism was in most serious danger of coming to an end desired that the defendant should marry in order, presumably, to retain the mohuntship and the benefits derived from the properties appertaining to the Asthal in close agnatic succession contemplating that the devolution would descend upon a son who might be born to the defendant. This testimony may or may not be true but it sounds plausible and, if credit should be attached to it, it shows that the tradition of celibacy was not thought to be more than a self-denying ordinance in no way inviolable and one the practising of which did not affect the tenure of any insumbent who so contracted a matrimonial connection. Although, therefore, at first sight, one would be inclined to think that the fact that for over three centuries no mohunt of this Asthal had in fact married constituted a strong presumption in favour of ecclesiastically obligatory celibacy of the holders of the office, I think that it is legally necessary to look at the matter from a somewhat broader point of view and to consider whether as a fact there is any clear reason to think that marriage by a mohunt would necessarily result in the extremely grave effect that he should in law be compelled to abdicate or be capable of ejection from his position. I feel very great diffidence in venturing to enter into the tangled paths of the doctrinal and dogmatic rules which govern the priests of the Hindu religion, or in particular, of all those sections of it to which it is supposed that the mohunt of this Asthal must adhere, and I am afraid that my efforts so to do must of necessity appear to those who are thoroughly familiar with the subject as somewhat elementary; and I cannot help feeling that in matters of this kind it might be advantageous if the Legislature could devise some tribunal composed of clerics assisted possibly by some chosen from the laity which could deal with questions of this character in a more complete manner than they can be dealt with by persons who may be of a different faith, unversed in such religious or sectarian practices and only schooled in the ordinary principles of jurisprudence. However, the matter has to be faced and I accordingly venture to give a short summary of what I assume to be a real issue between the parties. The position may roughly be recorded thus:—

A guru, a holy man, who was the ancestor of the defendant, migrated from Misraulia, his family home in the Shahabad District in this Province, about the end of the 16th century and took up his station near a tank of water at a place then known as Sulchhini but now called Sitamarhi. This locality was a very famous one in Hindu mythology because the belief was that, after the conclusion of the ancient Sagas of Hindu folk and religious lore, the goddess Sita who had been there transported arose from a crucible unearthed where this water now stands. This Achaic legend seems to correspond to some extent with the western Aryan myth of the birth of Aphrodite. This worthy guru evidently succeeded in attracting interest from the great personality of the neighbourhood, for he obtained the grant in November 1599 of the Mauza now known as

RAGHUNATH DAS V. SHRO KUMAR MISSIR.

Sitamarhi to which reference has already been made; and, eventually, a building was erected near the tank where the principal deity of the Hindu pantheology worshipped was Sri Jankiji Maharani; this goddess is regarded as the daughter of the god Janaka and the goddess Sita. Prosperity and accretions of property gradually came and the Asthal is now a very important one.

Now, it is agreed that, in connection with the worship of the great god Ram, there have been several revelationists; one of these was named Ramanand whose work lay in the 12th century; a later teacher who appears to have been of a more liberal type was Ramanuj. According to the theory which is put forward on behalf of the plaintiff, the followers of Ramanand are more ascetic than the followers of Ramanuj; and I think that, broadly speaking, this may be regarded as correct. The former, it is said, may not, the latter may, marry. We see the same kind of difference in the priesthood of various branches of the Christian Church in which, though Roman Catholic Priests must be single, the Greek Catholic Clergy need not be so although a Bishop of the Greek Catholic Church cannot be a married man although he may be a widower; whilst, in the Anglican community, there is nothing in the nature of enforced celibacy of any kind. We here come to several moot points relating to phraseology. It is said on behalf of the plaintiff that a mohunt who belongs to the Ramanandi sect cannot marry; whilst in regard to the Ramanuji sect it is said that there are two classes the first being called "Acharya," who are, what may be described as, lay teachers and upon whom celibacy is not imposed, the other portion consisting of what are called "Bairagi," who are ascetics and who, having cut off their connection with all worldly matters, must be celibate. It is here that we begin to experience confusion with regard to the use of particular vernacular expressions and it is quite obvious, after reading through the evidence, that many of the witnesses did not mean with precision exactly the same when they were using the same words. The principal controversy arises with regard to several vernacular words with which, to the best of my ability, I shall now try to deal. The first of these is the word "Bairagi"; I suppose that this word means "withdrawn from worldly affairs" and perhaps in its primary sense it was intended to convey the idea of complete asceticism, that is to say, an eremitic life in which the individual cut himself off from his worldly desires and environments and retreated into a condition of isolated contemplation of things divine; but there is no doubt from the evidence before me that this word has long since ceased to have any such restrictive meaning and it would seem that it now almost only has the significance of a person devoted to religion and does not itself in any way contemplate the necessary incidence of celibacy. The next word which gives rise to some difficulty is the word "Birakti." This word is found prefixed to the word "Bairagi" and it would be seen to denote a more rigid asceticism than is indicated by the word "Bairagi" alone. I gather that it essentially means "one who has renounced the world"; but whatever may have been its original meaning, it now seems to be like the word "Bairagi" used somewhat loosely and I am not sure that "Birakti," even with the conjunction of the word "Bairagi," now necessarily contemplates a non-marriageable state.

The Subordinate Judge, Mr. B. K. Biswas, who is a Hindu himself, has dealt with this matter in very great detail and with a wealth of knowledge of Hindu religious matters with which it is quite impossible for me to compete. He gives the whole history of the Ramanandi and Ramanuji movements; and he comes to the conclusion that the Sitamarhi Asthal was not a Ramanandi but a Ramanuji foundation. He considers the term "Bairagi" as simply denoting one who can restrain his passion and that it is not a phrase descriptive of any particular religious order of which a man must be member in such a fashion that his property can be inherited by others than his blood relations. Like myself, in my groping enquiry, he attaches little legal importance to the expression "Bairagi" which he regards merely as of a loosely descriptive character. It is said, next, that when an individual became a mohunt of the Sitamarhi Asthal he changed his family gotra whatever it may have been into the celestial gotra of "Achyut"; that is to say, he became one of the deity's chosen people. He does not attach any great importance to this question because he does not think, that as a matter of fact, any such charge took place nor does he think that, at any rate, the last mohunt prior to the present defendant ever disassociated himself from his gihasti family.

I have already said that there is on both sides in this case a great deal of documentary and oral evidence which bears upon the question of fact as to whether the mohunts of this Asthal are condemned or not to celibacy. The documentary evidence is not very convincing; there is some to show that, when an outlying property which appears, perhaps, originally to have belonged to or to be appertaining to the Sitamarhi Asthal (and there are several outlying properties of this big institution), went out of the possession of its incumbent, one of the mohunts of Sitamarhi (the 4th) took steps, at the instigation of the widow of the mohunt of his outlying temple, to recover the property and to bring it back under the control of the Sitamarhi Asthal; that Sitamarhi mohunt does not seem in any way to have been affected by the fact that the incumbent of the Subordinate Institution (admittedly under the control of the Sitamarhi Asthal) had married but on the contrary appears to have made provision for the maintenance of his widow. The 7th mohunt, as I have previously mentioned, appears pretty clearly not to have been a supporter of any necessary obligation of celibacy.

When we come to the oral evidence we get much divergence of opinion and much evidence which, although possibly in the main of no doubt honest character, indicates how differently different persons construe religious tenets. The Subordinate Judge has dealt with these witnesses very carefully and with a knowledge which I do not profess to own. He comes to the conclusion that the Sitamarhi Asthal does not belong to the Ramanandi sect but is a Ramanuji foundation and that the mohunts of the Sitamarhi Asthal did not altogether, and need not altogether, cut off their connection with their gihasti family. He also deals with the important question as to whether under the Hindu Law a property once vested in an individual can be divested on account of subsequent disability. This aspect of the case, I must confess, is to me somewhat novel but at any rate there are possibilities under section 92 of our Civil Procedure Code which seem to enable the difficulty, initiated by the Subordinate Judge to be overcome in many respects, particularly with regard to a concern which may be considered as in the nature of a public religious institution. The Subordinate Judge quotes numerous Hindu authorities to show that there is nothing in the Hindu Law to prevent a mohunt from contracting a matrimonial alliance and he had no authority produced before him to indicate that by so doing a mohunt must necessarily abdicate his incumbency. He points out that it is admitted that no vow of celibacy is taken by any Bairagi chela of the mohunts of this Asthal; he also says that there are many monastic or religious institutions in this Province the heads of which are, as a matter of fact, celibate, but he does not conclude that the fact of marriage of a mohunt necessarily entails a forfeiture of his position. He then proceeds to point out, as is undoubtedly the case, that there are a large number of religious institutions in this Province where the mohunts have been married men; he indicates that some of the immediate apostles of Ramanandi of whom, notably, is Sur Siranand Pipa, were married; he also indicates as an important factor that a certain Totadri Swami, who is a witness for the defendant and who is a man of admittedly very great importance in the Ramanuji hierarchy, came from the Deccan, where he occupies a position of the utmost importance, being styled as His Holiness, and visited recently the Sitamarhi Asthal. He thinks that had this Asthal belonged to the Ramanandi sect or its mohunt become patit (outcaste) by his marriage it would have been altogether impossible for him to pay it a visit. I must admit that I think that the evidence of this gentleman, whose testimony shows the broadminded aspect of religion adopted in modern days by most great prelates, is of the utmost importance in this case and I am sure that it will be useful if I quote some portion of what he says. His name is Swami Ranga Acharya Koil Kandhare Gobardan and he is a Tamil Brahmin residing at Gobardhan and RAGHUNATH DAS V. SHAO KUMAR MISHRA.

Brindaban in the United Provinces; he is a Hindu priest. He is a man of very high religious rank; he takes the view that there are no real differences of doctrine or should not be between the Ramanandi and Ramanuji sects. He is quite satisfied that the mohunt of the Sitamarhi Asthal is an Acharya of the so-called Ramanuji portion of his sect. It is obvious from his evidence that this cleric was a man of high position and of very considerable knowledge; a broad-minded modern priest. He says that the Sitamarhi Asthal was founded indeed by a disciple of his own ancestor Ganga Ram and he definitely states that a mohunt of Sitamarhi Asthal can continue as a mohunt and perform the pūja of the idols in spite of his having been married. He confirms the suggestion that Birakt and Bairagi should be construed as meaning the same thing and states that the mohunts of Sitamarhi Asthal are not of that category. He is himself a married man which in no way interferes with the tenure of his high and important office.

The Subordinate Judge, then, comes to the conclusion that the Sitamarhi Asthal is a Ramanuji Asthal and that the mohunts did not disassociate themselves from their family; he goes on to point out what is the real meaning of the word Bairagi and states that there is no Sastric religious prohibition against the marriage of either Ramanandi or Ramanuji Bairagi and, finally, he considers the question whether, in view of the long tradition of celibacy, the fact that this mohunt (the defendant) has married entails upon him burden of forfeiture of his office. He appreciates very fully the fact of the tradition for so many years and he then proceeds to examine in detail the evidence which has been adduced on both sides with regard to what happened to a mohunt who was not a celibate. He says, and I think rightly, that the plaintiff has failed to show any direct instance where a mohunt has been compelled to forfeit his office on account of his subsequent marriage; but, on the other hand, he shows also that the defendant has adduced evidence of the marriage of many mohunts of different places some of whom appear to have been even of Ramanandi sect and others of the Ramanuji persuasion. He, therefore, comes to the conclusion, in which I think he is right, that the plaintiff has failed to show in this case that the marriage of a mohunt (and that is to say, of the defendant) necessarily entails a forfeiture of his office and he accordingly on that ground amongst others dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

I must congratulate the Subordinate Judge upon an extremely able judgment upon matters of Hindu religion upon which it is difficult for a Christian unversed in these subjects to express any very confident opinion; but it is impossible, unless very cogent argument is produced before this Court to show that the Subordinate Judge was wrong, that this Court should upset his finding upon questions which after all are merely questions of fact. No one realises more than I do the importance which to those interested is attached to the possession of this undoubtedly valuable property and position; I should have personally thought, as a matter of abstract opinion, that the traditions of agnatic succession and celibacy ought, if possible, to have been maintained. That, however, is one of those views which have nothing to do with the legal aspect of any case but which cannot but compel one to think, as I have said before, that the most suitable solution of questions such as this would better be entrusted to the consideration not of the ordinary Civil Courts but of a tribunal composed of ecclesiastical personages (assisted no doubt by some legal chairman) which would decide matters of the nature on lines and with knowledge which might be more satisfactory and more certain than those upon which the High Courts in this country can ordinarily proceed.

In my opinion, therefore, this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

DAS, J.—I entirely agree.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs brought two suits contesting the validity of two mortgages effected by Sundar Singh, one for Rs. 2,500 and the other for Rs. 800. The Subordinate Judge held the mortgage for Rs. 2,500 to be valid to the extent of Rs. 1,322-5-9, and the other mortgage to be valid to the extent of Rs. 425-10-9, and passed decrees accordingly. Both parties appealed to the District Judge. The defendants filed their appeals one day too late, but they added a note that they had not been informed of the completion of the copies for which they had applied till two or three days after the copies were ready, and also asked that if the appeals were time-barred they might be treated as cross-objections in the plaintiffs' appeals. The District Judge dismissed the defendants' appeals as time-barred and also held that as the appeals were dismissed they could not be heard as cross-objections. He then proceeded to hear the plaintiffs' appeals and accepted them, declaring one alienation to be valid only to the extent of Rs. 200 and the other to be valid only to the extent of Rs. 80. The defendants have preferred second appeals to this Court.

The first point taken by them is that in computing the period of limitation for their appeals to the District Court the period from the date of their applying for copies of the judgments and decrees up to the date on which the copies were delivered to them should have been excluded, and that, therefore, the appeals were within time. I am, however, not prepared to differ from the lower Appellate Court's view that only the time from the date of the application up to the date on which the copies were ready for delivery could be excluded. Moreover, the District Judge's finding as to the time requisite for obtaining the copies is one of fact and cannot be attacked in second appeal. See Sher Singh v. Pem Raj (1).

But the second contention, that the defendants were entitled to have their appeals to the District Judge heard as cross-objections, appears to be correct.

Ramji Das v. Ajudhia Prasad (2), which is relied upon by the learned Judge in support of the view taken by him, is not in point. What was held in that case was that it is not open to a party who has appealed to file cross-objections after his appeal has been dismissed. The present case is quite different. The defendants did not file cross-objections after the dismissal of their appeals, but they only asked that the appeals which they filed might, in case they were found to be time-barred, be treated as cross-objections in the plaintiffs' appeals, and no authority has been cited to show that their appeals could not be so treated.

Hindu Law—Alienation by widow—Compromise decree, whether binding on reversioner—Burden of proof—Reference to Full Bench—Hypothetical questions.

By the Full Bench.—In an action against a Hindu widow on a contract made by the widow, a compromise by which she makes over the estate stands on no different footing from a conveyance by her of the property; and the burden of proving that the compromise is binding on the reversioner is on the alienee. [p. 482, col. 2.]

Muthukumarasamy Odayar v. Subramania Iyer, 33 Ind. Cas. 687; 31 M. L. J. 87, Kadakkalai Nadan v. Nadakkannu Nadan, 62 Ind. Cas. 752; (1921) M. W. N. 342; 18 L. W. 533, Srinivasa Aiyer v. Thiruvengada Maistry, 55 Ind. Cas. 588; 10 L. W. 594; 26 M. L. T. 350, Rajlakshmi Dasee v. Katyayani Dasee, 12 Ind. Cas. 464; 38 O. 639, Sant Kumar v. Deo Saran, 8 A. 365; A. W. N. (1886) 129; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 135, referred to.

Per Schwabe, C. J.—By the Hindu Law, a widow in possession of property inherited from her husband has a life-interest with power to alienate for necessities. The reversioners are protected by the rule that if she does alienate the onus is on the alienee to show that the alienation was, in fact, for necessities. [p. 481, col. 2.]

An order of reference to a Full Bench should not ask hypothetical questions or ask the Full Bench, so to speak, to give a dissertation on general principles of law but to do what is quite enough for any Judge to do, to answer the question which directly arises in the case before the Court. [p. 483, col. 1.]

Per Coutts Trotter, J.—Where a widow represents the estate it would be unreasonable to deny her the same discretion to avoid useless litigation as would be vested undeniably in a male manager. [p. 483, col. 1.]

But that must be subject to this qualification that where the obligation sought to be enforced against the estate is one of her own creation, she stands in exactly the same position with regard to the justification of the compromise as she does with regard to that of her original contract, and is clothed with no higher authority and no less degree of responsibility by the accident that she has superadded to her character of a widow in possession that of a litigant. [p. 483, col. 1.]

The rule that a widow, as representing the estate, can effectually settle claims arising out of the acts of others, is a salutary one—ut sit finis litium. But to give her the same power in relation to her own acts would be to make her, as it were, a judge in her own cause. [p. 483, col. 1.]

Per Kumaraswami, J.—In considering the question as to whether a compromise arrived at by the widow is binding on the reversioners, the main consideration is whether the suit or claim against the widow is a suit or claim arising out of a contract or transaction entered into by her husband with strangers who claim against the estate or whether the suit is upon a contract or transaction which is entered into by the widow herself. In the former case there can be little doubt that she represents the estate and a bona fide compromise by her would bind the reversioners. In the latter case there is always the question as to whether she acted in her individual capacity or whether she acted as representing the estate. This question has to be solved in cases where the suit proceeds to trial by the evidence adduced in the case and the findings on the issues. A mere allegation by the plaintiff that the widow acted for the estate or a mere assertion by her that she so acted would not by itself show that she acted in her representative capacity or that the decree is binding on the reversioners [p. 483, col. 2.]

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Coimbatore, in Appeal Suit No. 26 of 1920, presented against a decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Coimbatore, in Original Suit No. 102 of 1919.

This second appeal came on for hearing on the 12th and 16th August 1921, upon perusing the grounds of appeal, the judgments and decrees of the lower Appellate Court and the Court of first instance and the material papers in the suit, and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. A. Krishna-swami Aiyar, for the Appellants, and of Mr. P. Somasunderam, for the Respondents, the Court (Krishnan and Odgers, JJ.) made the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

The facts necessary for this reference are briefly these. One Davuluri Swami who was the original owner of the plaintiff properties mortgaged them usufructually to the first defendant in 1887 for Rs. 171-8-0 and died soon after. On his death his estate passed into the hands of his widow Sathemma. In 1891 she executed a deed of simple mortgage for Rs. 200 in favour of the same person, the first defendant, as a second mortgage on the same properties with some addition. In 1901 she was sued by the first defendant for recovery of the money due on the second mortgage by sale of the mortgaged properties presumably subject to the first mortgage. This suit, Original Suit No. 564 of 1901, was compromised by the widow with the first defendant and it was arranged thereby that the first defendant was to take the properties as sold to him outright in settlement of his claim. The widow thereafter went away to Rangoon and has not been heard of since for many years. The present suit is by the Swami's daughter, the first plaintiff, and an assignee of a half share of her properties, the second plaintiff, and they sue on the footing that the widow is dead and the reversion has fallen in to the first plaintiff, to redeem the usufructuary mortgage granted by the Swami, ignoring the compromise decrees and the second mortgage executed by the widow. The defendant's set up the compromise in answer to the suit and an issue was framed whether it was binding on the first plaintiff.

On that issue the Subordinate Judge held that the burden of proof was on the defendants, the alienees, to prove that the mortgage debt and the compromise were binding on the reversioner, and finding that they had not established it on the evidence he set aside the compromise and the sale under it and allowed redemption to the plaintiffs. The learned Vakil for the appellants contends that this view of the burden of proof is opposed to the rulings reported in Muthukumarsamy Odayar v. Subramania Iyer (1) and Kadakkara Nadan v. Nadakkannu Nadan (2). But on the other side the ruling in Srinivasa Aiyar v. Thiruvengada Maistry (3) is cited in support of it. The two sets of rulings seem to be directly contradictory on this point, the one expressly dissenting from the view taken in the other. In these circumstances we think it right that the question should be authoritatively settled by a Full Bench. As all the authorities bearing on the question are cited and discussed in the above rulings it is not necessary to refer to them in detail again.

We, therefore, refer to the Full Bench the following questions :—

(1) Which of the two views taken in the above rulings as to the burden of proof is the correct one? and

(2) On whom was the burden of proof in the present case?

This second appeal came on for hearing on the 19th December 1921.

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Iyer, for the Appellants.—The learned Subordinate Judge is wrong in throwing 'the burden of proof' of proving necessity in the case on the appellants. They claim title to the property not on the alienation made to them by the widow but on a compromise decree entered into with them by the widow when they sued her on her mortgage. If it is the ordinary case of alienation, no doubt the Subordinate Judge is right in putting the alienees to the proof of the necessity of the transaction. But the present case is different. The widow has under the Hindu Law power to enter into a compromise which is binding on the reversioners. That is decided expressly by this Court in Muthukumarasamy Odayar v. Subramania Iyer (1) and in Kudakkurai Nadan v. Nadakkannu Nadan (2). These decisions are sufficient to shift the burden of proof from the alienees on the reversioners.

Mr. P. Somasundaram, for the Respondents.—No doubt the proposition enunciated by my learned friend is correct in cases when the suit, in respect of which compromise is effected, is based upon a debt which is binding on the estate. But where the debt itself is binding only on her personal estate, the mere fact that in addition there is the force of a 'suit' and a 'compromise' consequent upon it would not place the matter any higher. The burden is as heavily on the alienees to prove the binding nature of the debt as in any other case [Srinivasa Aiyar v. Thiruvengada Maistry (3) and Bhogaraju

v. Adapalli Seshayya (4)] were then referred to] in support of the argument. To hold otherwise would be really to deny the protection which is afforded to the reversioners under the law. In the case before us, the debt in respect of which the suit was brought was a creation of the widow herself. So the onus is on the appellants to prove the binding nature of the debt. That is so decided by the Subordinate Judge. In fact there is no real conflict between the cases referred to in the referring order.

OPINION.

SCRAWAY, C. J.—By the Hindu Law, a widow in possession of property inherited from her husband has a life-interest with power to alienate for necessities. The reversioners are protected by the rule that if she does alienate, the onus is on the alienee to show that the alienation was, in fact, for necessities. In this case, the widow Sathemma inherited from her husband Dayaluri Swami certain properties, then the subject of a mortgage to the first defendant by the husband. She executed a second mortgage for Rs. 200, which, it is recited in the deed, was advanced for payment of the debts of the husband to the first defendant and for maintenance of the widow. The widow having died, the plaintiffs, the reversioners, wish to redeem the first mortgage. The first defendant's answer to this claim is that a suit was brought in 1901 by the first defendant against the widow to recover the money due on the second mortgage and that the suit was compromised by the widow agreeing that the first defendant should take the property absolutely, as if sold to him, in settlement of his claim.

It is admitted that, apart from the compromise decree, the onus would be on the defendant to show that the second mortgage was, in fact, for necessities. It is also admitted that, if the widow had sold the property to the first defendant at the date of the compromise, the onus would have been on him to show that the sale was for necessary purposes. But it is contended that the widow, in her representative capacity as manager of the property, had power to compromise the suit, and that it must be taken that she compromised the suit in that capacity, and that, in the absence of evidence adduced by the reversioners to the contrary, she must be taken to have acted properly in so doing.

(4) 12 Ind. Cas. 123; 33 M. 560; 10 M. L. T. 179.

NALLA TIRUPATIRAJU U. NANDIKOLLA VENKATYA.

The result would be somewhat startling for it follows that the whole protection, which the law gives to reversioners in respect of dealings by the widow and which the reversioners had before the compromise, can be taken away by a further act of the very person against whom it is the policy of the Hindu Law to protect, which act in itself amounts to a further alienation.

It is said that there are authorities on this point and it is by reason of their supposed conflict that this case is referred to the Full Bench. I can myself find no such conflict in the cases which are quoted in the order of reference. There are two cases, Muthukumarasamy Odoyar's case (1) and Kadakkaladi Nadan's case (2), which decided that a compromise by a widow of a suit relating to the property inherited from her husband is binding on the reversioners. In both these cases she was sued in her representative capacity as representing the estate, and it may well be that she, in that representative capacity, can bind the estate by a compromise, I am not giving any decision upon that point, which we can deal with when it arises. At present I see no reason to dissent from the view expressed in either of those two cases. But in this case she was not, in fact, sued in her representative capacity. She was sued as a mortgagor on the second mortgage, that is, to enforce a contract made by her, and she compromised that suit by purporting to make over the property to the mortgagee absolutely. This, in my judgment, she cannot do except subject to the rule stated above for the protection of the reversioners. If she could, it would be open to her to adopt simple means for avoiding the rule which is made for the protection of the reversioners. All that she would have to do would be first to mortgage and then, if the plaintiff sued on the mortgage, to compromise by alienation. Thus the whole protection which the Hindu Law has given to reversioners under similar circumstances would be taken away because she went through the formality of compromising an action instead of taking the more simple course of selling the property in her capacity as widow. That this is not permitted is clear from Srinivasa Aiyar v. Thiruvengada Maistry (3) and, if that case is rightly decided, the question in this case must be answered by saying that the onus is on the mortgagee. I confess that, for my part, after listening with care to the arguments which have been addressed to us on either side, I entirely agree with what is said in that judgment. I also entirely agree with the remarks of Mockerjee, J. in Raglakshmi Dasee v. Katyayani Dasee (5) and those of Mahmood, J. in Sant Kumar v. Deo Saran (6). They seem to me entirely right in principle. It may be that some of the remarks made in these judgments go a little further than was necessary for the decision of those cases. I want to guard myself from being taken to express the view that in no case can a widow compromise a suit and thereby bind the reversioners. I am quite clear that there are cases in which she can do so. But what I do hold is that in an action against the widow on a contract made by the widow, a compromise by which she makes over the estate stands on no different footing from a conveyance by her of the property. In the two cases quoted in the order of reference I find that, at any rate, the original contract was not made by the widow and I find that it is quite clear that the widow had been sued in her representative capacity and, therefore, I think that those cases should not be regarded as conflicting with Srinivasa Aiyar v. Thiruvengada Maistry (3), and the cases there quoted. If they do conflict, I prefer the decision in the latter case. It follows from what I have said that the answer to question No. 2 is that, in the present case, the burden of proof is upon the defendant.

The other question "which of the two views taken in the above rulings as to the burden of proof is the correct one" is a question which, speaking for myself, I decline to answer. The use of the words "two views taken in the above rulings" is certainly open to comment. The rulings in the cases referred to so far from taking two views are, I think, consistent with each other, and, for that reason, it seems to me to be a question to which no answer is required. I should like to take this opportunity of pointing out that, in my judgment, the order of reference to a Full Bench should not ask hypothetical questions or ask the Full Bench, so to speak, to give a dissertation on general principles of law but to do what is quite enough for any Judge to do, to answer the question which directly arises in the case before the Court.

COUTIS TROTTER, J.—I am of the same opinion, and have little to add. With great respect to the learned Judges who referred the case, I do not think there is any necessary conflict between the decided cases. I quite assent to the principle that where a widow represents the estate it would be unreasonable to deny her the same discretion to avoid useless litigation as would be vested undeniably in a male manager. But I think that that must be subject to this qualification—which exists in the present case—that where the obligation sought to be enforced against the estate is one of her own creation she stands in exactly the same position with regard to the justification of the compromise as she does with regard to that of her original contract, and is clothed with no higher authority and no less degree of responsibility by the accident that she has super-added to her character of a widow in possession that of a litigant. To hold otherwise, it seems to me, would be nothing less than an abrogation of common sense. I think that the rule that a widow, as representing the estate, can effectually settle claims arising out of the acts of others, is a salutary one—ut sit finis litium. But to give her the same power in relation to her own acts would be to make her, as it were, a judge in her own cause; she is not solely concerned with her duty to the estate, as may be supposed in the former case, but is obviously liable to a bias in favour of attempting to validate her own act. Such a conclusion would obviously deprive the reversioners of the very protection which the Hindu Law endeavours to give them; and would unquestionably lead to endless collusive compromises, as the present one may well have been. I do not think that such a conclusion has even the superficial merit claimed for it that on its face it is a logical deduction from the fact that she has a discretion as to settling claims which do not arise out of her own acts.

In the view I have taken of this case, I agree with my Lord that it is not necessary for us to answer the second question propounded, as, I think, the answer to the first resolves the supposed conflict between the authorities.

KUMARASWAMI SASTRI, J.—On the facts of this case I am of opinion that the onus lies on the alienees to prove that the compromise-deed is binding on the reversioners. In considering the question as to whether a compromise arrived at by the widow is binding on the reversioners, the main consideration is whether the suit or claim against the widow is a suit or claim arising out of a contract or transaction entered into by her husband with strangers who claim against the estate or whether the suit is upon a contract or transaction which is entered into by the widow herself. In the former case there can be little doubt that she represents the estate and a bona fide compromise by her would bind the reversioners. In the latter case there is always the question as to whether she acted in her individual capacity or whether she acted as representing the estate. This question has to be solved in cases where the suit proceeds to trial by the evidence adduced in the case and the findings on the issues. A mere allegation by the plaintiff that the widow acted for the estate or a mere assertion by her that she so acted would not by itself show that she acted in her representative capacity or that the decree is binding on the reversioners. It has been held in numerous cases that where her husband's property is sold in execution of a decree against her and the question as to the quantum of interest conveyed under the decree passed against her is raised, it has to be determined by the nature of the claim, the evidence addused and the findings in the case. As pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Jugal Kishore v. Jutendro Mohun T gore (7), if the suit is simply on a personal claim against the widow, then a sale in execution will merely pass the widow's qualified interest and the reversionary interest will not be bound by it. If, on the other hand, the suit is against the widow in respect of the estate, or on a cause of action which is not a mere personal cause of action against the widow, the whole estate will pass. I may also refer to Kirāmbala Debi v. Kali Oharan Singha (8), Trilochan Hazra v. Bakkeswar (9) and Vesrabai Aiyar v. Marudogi Narhar (10). Where there are findings of fact as to the claim, it is easy to determine with reference to the proceedings how she acted and how far the decree will bind the reversioners; but in cases where there are no findings and where we have to rest merely on the allegation of the plaintiff or of the widow, it seems to me difficult to hold that because an allegation is made by one side or the other, the reversioners ought to be bound by the consent-decree passed in the suit by the alienor against the widow. In cases where a person wants to bind the estate on a personal contract or transaction by the widow, he invariably alleges that what she did was for the benefit of the estate and is binding on the reversioners and in cases where the widow deals with the estate and borrows monies for her personal use, allegations are made of necessity to show the binding nature of the debt on the reversioners. It seems to me that in cases of compromise where the suit is on a contract by the widow or in cases where the cause of action is personal to her, she cannot, by simply consenting to a decree, make that which can only bind her life interest, if the matter rested merely on a contract or conveyance bar the reversioners. If there was no decree, the onus would clearly be on the alienor to show necessity and the recitals in the document would not by themselves prove necessity. In Brij Lal v. Indar Kumwar (11), their Lordships of the Privy Council observed at page 133: "The onus of supporting a sale from a Hindu widow is undoubtedly on the purchaser. In the present case the appellant has adduced no evidence to prove such legal necessity as would bind the husband's estate. He has relied simply on the recitals in the schedule attached to the sale deed. Recitals in mortgages or deeds of sale with regard to the existence of necessity for the alienation have never been treated as evidence by themselves of the fact. And it has been repeatedly pointed out by this Board that to substantiate the allegation there must be some evidence aliunde." It is clear that a widow cannot do what is beyond her legal powers by simply going to Court and filing a compromise petition or consenting to a decree. I need only refer to Great North-West Central Railway v. Charlebois (12). It is also clear that the widow's action in alienating her husband's estate for her private debt or for a purpose which under Hindu Law would not amount to necessity is beyond her power, and she cannot take advantage of her representative capacity to validate a purely personal transaction. The interposition of a decree by consent would not, in my opinion, make any difference as to the onus of proof in such cases. Where the pleadings show that both the plaintiff and the widow asserted that the alienation was for purposes binding on the reversioners, there can be no substantial dispute as to the legality of the act of the widow as binding on the reversioners so as to make the legality of her act a point substantially in issue and a fair subject of compromise. As pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Khunni Lal v. Gobind Krishna Narain (13), the true test to apply to a transaction which is challenged by reversioners as an alienation not binding on them is whether the alienee derives title from the holder of the limited interest or life-tenant. If the claim is based on an alienation by the widow or on a contract by her, the onus must be on the alienee to show that circumstances existed which entitled her to transfer her limited estate. I agree with the view taken in Bhogaraju v. Adapalli Seshayya (4) and Srinivasa Aiyar v. Thiruvengada Maistry (3), that a decree passed against the holder of a woman's estate on compromise between her and her creditor would be binding on the reversioners only in cases where the contract of compromise itself entered into by her would bind them. Muthukumarasamy Odayar v. Subramania Iyer (1) and Kadakkara Nadan v. Nadakkannu Nadan (2), referred to by the learned Referring Judges, were not cases of a contract entered into by a widow alienating property and a compromise by her. Muthukumarasamy Olayar v. Subramania Iyer (1) was a case where the last male holder purchased two items of property in a Court sale. They were claimed by the fourth defendant by virtue of private sale to him. A suit filed by the fourth defendant was dismissed in the First Court and in the District Court. A compromise was entered into by the widow when the case was in the High Court. Kadakkara Nadan v. Nadakkannu Nadan (2) was a suit by a daughter to question an alienation made by her mother and the suit was compromised. There are no doubt observations in these cases which suggest that the compromise would be binding, irrespective of whether the suit was simply on a personal claim against the widow in respect of the estate or on a cause of action which is not a mere personal cause of action against the widow; and if the learned Judges intended to decide that the compromise was binding in all cases, I would respectfully dissent from them.

My answer to the reference is that the burden of proof lies on the alienees in the present case.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 11, Expl. Plaintiffs were occupancy tenants of certain land of which N. was the proprietor. N. sold the proprietary rights to the plaintiffs and died some time after the alienation. Defendant who succeeded N. brought a suit to impugn the sale on the ground that it had been effected without consideration and necessity and was awarded a decree for possession of the land. In execution of that decree defendant obtained actual possession of the land and turned the plaintiffs out. The latter objected that they were entitled to retain possession of the land as occupancy tenants, but their objection was disallowed. Upon this they sued for restoration of their occupancy rights:

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs, Dharm Singh, Mastan Singh and Gatu Singh, sons of Sobha, were occupancy tenants of certain land in Ambala District, of which Rani Narain Kaur was the owner. She sold her proprietary rights to them and died sometime after the alienation. On her death, Rani Saraj Kaur, her step-mother, succeeded to her estate and she brought a suit against the vendees to impugn the sale, which, she said, was without consideration and necessity. She succeeded in getting the sale set aside and was awarded a decree for possession of the land. In the execution of that decree she was given actual possession of the land in dispute. The plaintiffs urged that she was entitled only to proprietary possession and that, even if the alienation in their favour was invalid, they were still entitled to remain in possession of the land as occupancy tenants, but their objections were disallowed and they were turned out of the land. Then they brought the present suit for restoration of their occupancy rights. Rani Saraj Kaur pleaded that the plaintiffs were not occupancy tenants and also that the suit did not lie. The Court of first instance found, on the strength of entries in the Revenue Records, that the plaintiffs were occupancy tenants but dismissed the suit on the ground that the question in dispute being one "between a decree-holder and the judgment-debtors no fresh suit lies," that is to say, section 47, Civil Procedure Code, barred the suit. The plaintiffs appealed against this decision and their appeal was accepted by the District Judge, who held that the Rani was entitled only to possession as a proprietor and had no right to deprive the plaintiffs of their occupancy rights. He observed that the plaintiffs were being sued in the previous case in the capacity of vendees proprietors, and the question of their occupancy rights was not in any way concerned in those proceedings. He gave them a decree for restoration of occupancy rights by actual possession of the land in dispute. Against this decree Rani Saraj Kaur has come up to this Court in second appeal and her case has been argued before us by Mr. Kanwar Narain.

This appeal was referred to a Division Bench on two points, (1) That the suit was barred by section 11, Explanation IV, of the Civil Procedure Code, because it was incumbent on the present plaintiffs as defendants in the previous suit to plead that even if their title as vendees of the land was found to be defective they were entitled to retain possession of it as occupancy tenants; and (2) that when Rani Narain Kaur sold the land to the plaintiffs their rights of occupancy merged in the proprietary rights and it is open to question whether those rights were revived or not upon the setting aside of the sale. This latter point has not been argued before us and the learned Counsel has contented himself with pressing the first point only. He referred, in passing, to section 50 of the Punjab Tenancy Act and the Full Bench ruling of the Punjab Chief Court, reported as Akbar Hussain v. Karm Dad (1) and urged that the Civil Courts had no jurisdiction to try this case because the plaintiffs were dispossessed tenants suing their landlord to recover possession as tenants, but we do not think section 50 can help him as it applies to a tenant dispossessed and "otherwise than in execution of a decree," which is certainly not the case here. He also referred to section 47, Civil Procedure Code, as barring this suit but, as pointed out by Mr. Justice Scott-Smith in his note referring this appeal to a Division Bench, the rulings cited by the lower Appellate Court are good authority for holding that section 47, Civil Procedure Code is not applicable to the case before us.

As regards section 11, Explanation IV, Civil Procedure Code, it is contended that as the present plaintiffs failed to set up the plea of occupancy rights when the suit for possession was brought against them the decision in the previous case is res judicata. This argument seems plausible at first sight but the main obstacle in the way of Explanation IV operating as a bar to the present suit is that one of the necessary conditions for the application of section 11 itself is not fulfilled, i.e., the plaintiffs are not "litigating under the same title." At the time of the previous suit the present plaintiffs were sued as vendees and the sole question in dispute was the validity of the sale. There was no reference at all to their status as occupancy tenants. They are now suing in the capacity last mentioned, and clearly they are litigating under a different title.

(1) 48 Ind. Cas. 8; 90 P. R. 1918 (F. B.).

SASHIL CHANDRA DAS V. SAKHAMAL BANSIDHAR.

We hold, therefore, that the suit is not barred by section 11, Explanation IV, Civil Procedure Code. The plaintiffs have been rightly given a decree for restoration to possession of the land in dispute as occupancy tenants. We uphold the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss this appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.

Piggott, J.—These are connected applications to file two awards, purporting to be made on November 12th, 1920 at the close of proceedings taken under the Indian Arbitration Act in connection with a trade dispute between two firms. It is one of a number of connected applications which would, in the ordinary course of things, have been filed in the Court of the District Judge of Cawnpore; but were transferred to this Court with the consent of the parties to be disposed of in the exercise of its original jurisdiction, because of the importance to the commercial community of some of the questions involved.

The firm in whose favour the awards have been made, that of Sushil Chandra Das & Co., which may conveniently be spoken of as the plaintiff firm, are importers of piece goods from Manchester. The defendant firm, that of Sukha Mal-Bansi Dhar, deals in the said goods but does not import on its own account. On August 24th, 1918 the defendant firm placed in the hands of the plaintiff firm two indents drawn up on a form published by the Delhi Piece Goods Association; one indent was for one hundred bales of red shirtings, the other for twenty five bales of white Linens. On September 2nd, 1918 the plaintiff firm wrote intimating their acceptance of the former order, and on September 4th, 1918 they similarly accepted the latter. It is admitted that the conclusion of the Armistice on November 11th, 1918 was followed by a heavy fall in the price of piece goods on the Indian market. On November 24th, 1918 the defendant firm wrote to the firm begging the latter to arrange with their supplier at home to expunge these orders from their books, and offering to pay "nominal damages" in return for this favour. Farther correspondence followed; and on January

SABHIL CHANDRA DAS V. SAKHAMAL BANSIDHAR.

20th, 1919 the defendant firm wrote repudiating liability on the ground that there had never been any completed contract of sale between the parties. The plaintiff firm claimed to have the dispute referred to arbitration under the terms of clause 15 of the conditions endorsed on the printed form of tender which the defendant firm had used. The latter took up the position that, inasmuch as there had never been any completed contract between the parties, it necessarily followed that they were bound by no agreement to refer anything to arbitration. One attempt at obtaining a decision through a single arbitrator failed, the District Judge holding that the conditions necessary to entitle the one arbitrator nominated by the plaintiff firm to proceed to the delivery of an award had not been fulfilled: this order was upheld by this Court in a judgment dated August 9th, 1920. A supplementary award, which the same arbitrator had delivered while the proceedings relating to the filing of his first award were pending, was finally withdrawn by the plaintiff firm from the Court of the District Judge, on the very proper view that it had become ineffective owing to the decision affirmed by this Court's order of August 9th 1920. The plaintiff firm, however, has proceeded upon certain principles laid down in the order above referred to: it has assumed that the submission to arbitration is effective and subsisting, and has accordingly made another attempt to carry it into effect. On August 20th, 1920 they sent the other side notice that they desired to submit the entire dispute to arbitration and again nominated Mr. J. C. Roberts, President or Chairman of the Committee of the Delhi Piece-Goods Association, as their arbitrator. The defendant firm, under protest and without prejudice to their contention that they were not bound to go to arbitration at all, nominated Mr. A. C. Khosla. The two arbitrators held a single meeting, at Delhi, on September 27th, 1920. Mr. Khosla suggested the adjournment of the proceedings to a later date on the strength of a telegram which he had received, to the effect that the party nominating him was not ready with its evidence. Mr. Roberts took a very strong view that the defendant firm was merely trying to evade any effective arbitration, or in any case to spin out the proceedings until the expiration of a period of three months from the date of this Court's order of August 9th, 1920 should enable them to withdraw a considerable sum of money which they had deposited in the District Judge's Court: he definitely refused to adjourn and the arbitrators separated without having decided anything. A memorandum of their proceedings on that date was drawn up and signed by both of them. There has been a conflict of evidence between Mr. Roberts and Mr. Khosla as to whether or not they ever got so far as discussing the merits of the dispute, or the appointment of an umpire to adjudicate on the same upon their failure to agree: they certainly did differ on the question whether they should or should not proceed at once to pronounce a decision upon the materials available, and they did separate without appointing an umpire. Mr. Roberts proceeded at once to draw up a paper which has been loosely described as his "award"; it is of course a statement of his opinion on the dispute drawn up for the consideration of the umpire. On October 1st, 1920, Mr. Khosla similarly drew up a statement of his own. The plaintiff firm applied to the Committee of the Delhi Piece-Goods Association to appoint an umpire. Notice of the application was sent to the opposite party; and on October 30th, 1920 Mr. Gnr Prasad Kapur wrote to them to say that he had been appointed umpire and had fixed November 12th 1920 for deciding the matter. On that date he delivered the two awards sought to be filed; they adopt in its entirety the opinion formed by Mr. Roberts and award the plaintiff firm an ascertained sum by way of damages for the breach of contract of which the defendant firm is held guilty.

The objections taken to the filing of the award may now be stated and disposed of seriatim.

(i) It is contended that there was never any completed contract between the parties, and consequently no binding agreement to submit disputes arising out of the contract to arbitration. This argument is based upon the wording of the two letters of September 2nd and September 4th, 1918 by which the plaintiff firm intimated their acceptance of the two indents received from the defendant firm. In each case the letter begins with the words:—"We have the pleasure to accept your indent": then follow particulars which are a mere repetition of the conditions specified in the indent under reply, and finally comes the phrase upon which the dispute has hinged:—"the above-mentioned acceptance is subject to revision and confirmation by mail if required". For the plaintiff firm Mr. Sushil Chandra Das himself has gone into the witness box and given evidence as to the ordinary course of business. He was a somewhat confused witness, and over ready to make sweeping assertions which subsequently required qualification; but I have no doubt he was trying to speak the truth to the best of his ability. He repudiated the suggestion, which his own Counsel had put forward, to the effect that the indents signed by the defendant firm must be regarded as completing and recording a contract, inasmuch as they were acceptances of offers orally made on behalf of the plaintiff firm. Nevertheless, I am satisfied that there had been negotiations between the parties and a provisional agreement arrived at before the signatures of the defendant firm were put to the two indents. The mere fact that the written entries on the indent forms, apart from the printed matter, are in the handwriting of the manager or agent of the importing firm is strong corroboration of the evidence of Sushil Chandra Das on the point. The indents are in effect promises by the defendant firm to take delivery of certain goods and to pay for them at certain rates, subject to certain specified conditions, and subject also to the plaintiff firm's intimating within the prescribed period (twelve days in the case of indent No. 898 and five days in the case of indent No. 899) that they had ascertained by cable from their Manchester correspondents that the latter could supply the goods to enable the plaintiff firm to perform its part of the contract according to its terms. The reply of the plaintiff firm in each case is to the effect that the necessary cable has been sent and reply received, and that the bargain is concluded, subject only to this reservation, that the terms may have to be revised or the bargain confirmed on arrival of the English mail containing the reply of the Manchester correspondents. Such "revision and confirmation" is to remain open until the arrival of the mail, "if required". In their context these words can only be understood as meaning, "if circumstances should arise making such revision or confirmation necessary". The circumstances contemplated by both parties are clearly stated in the sixteenth clause of the printed form of indent, a clause which, by virtue of the signature of the defendant firm, became part of the contract between the parties. This clause stipulates that:—"It is distinctly understood between the sellers and the buyers in India that offers if accepted by telegram are subject to revision and confirmation by mail only if any mistake has been made in the telegram." The following statements made by Sushil Chandra Das in his deposition seem to me obviously true in fact and a correct statement of the nature of the contract entered into, as it was understood by both parties:—

"In this transaction there was no mistake in the cables to England between me and my English correspondents. When the mail is received from England and shows that there has been no mistake in the cables, there is nothing for me to confirm to the purchasing firm. The acceptance by cable binds me to everything, to all the terms stated in the indent, except in the event of a telegraphic error in transmission."

That is to say, there was a complete and binding contract between the parties, subject only to the possible discovery that an event had occurred which was not within the control of either party, an error by the telegraph department in the transmission of the cables sent by the plaintiff firm to its home correspondent, or received by the former from the latter. This event did not occur and the discovery was never made.

I am not impressed with the argument that this Court has already come to a decision upon the question now in issue in another litigation, namely in First Appeal No. 418 of 1917, decided on December 2nd 1920. In that case the reservation in the letter of acceptance did not contain the qualifying words "if necessary", and the Court had not before it the evidence available to us as to the regular course of business.

In the present case I have no doubt the parties were absolutely ad idem when the plaintiff firm wrote and the defendant firm received the letters of September 2nd and September 4th 1918, that there was a completed contract, and that under this contract the defendant firm is under an obligation to submit this dispute to arbitration in the manner provided by the printed conditions on the indent form.

(ii) Another point taken is that the awards sought to be filed are null and void because the umpire who delivered them had not been properly appointed in accordance with the terms of the submission. The contention is that the Committee of the Delhi Piece Goods Association had no jurisdiction to appoint an umpire until the two arbitrators nominated by the parties had not only failed to agree as to the merits of the dispute but had also differed as to the choice of an umpire. There has been some conflict of evidence between Mr. Roberts and Mr. Khosla as to what passed between them on September 27th 1920; but I am satisfied that enough had occurred to give the Committee of the Delhi Piece-Goods Association, under the rules accepted by the parties, jurisdiction to appoint an umpire. The arbitrators had differed in such conclusive fashion as to put it beyond doubt that they were not going to deliver a joint award. The refusal of Mr. Roberts to adjourn the arbitration proceedings was equivalent, under the circumstances, to a refusal to meet Mr. Khosla again; and the arbitrators had separated without nominating an umpire.

(iii) I find no force in the contention that there could be no arbitration upon this agreement, because the submission therein contained had somehow "spent itself" in Mr. Roberts's abortive award dealt with in this Court's decision of August 8th 1920, or because his supplementary award was lying unadjudicated upon, in the Court of the District Judge when the present arbitration proceedings began. This Court pronounced a clear opinion against the former contention in its order (there were two distinct orders) of August 9th 1920; I think the orders then passed are binding on the parties, but even if they are not I remain of the same opinion. The parties are under a binding agreement to refer this dispute to arbitration in accordance with the terms of the agreement itself; the obligation continues until it has been carried out.

(iv) Another point taken has been pressed upon us from two different points of view. In the printed form of indent upon which the defendant firm endorsed their order there is a special clause (3) dealing with the rights of the importing firm in the event of the purchasers (the firm signing the indent) failing to take up the seller's invoice as a draft to be accepted on presentation and paid at maturity. The importers are authorised to sell the goods by public auction, after due notice, and to claim for the difference between the selling price and the contract price. It was put to us that this clause contains the stipulated penalty under the contract for any failure on the part of the buyers in India to accept delivery, and that it operates as a condition precedent to the arbitration clause (15), so that no reference to arbitration could take place until the plaintiff firm had given due notice and had actually sold the goods by public auction. From another point of view we were asked to hold that it amounted to "misconduct" on the part of the umpire to assess the damages payable by the defendant firm upon a different basis and without compelling the importers to prove at least an actual re-sale of the goods whether by public auction or otherwise. I am quite satisfied that the provisions of clause (3) of the indent form are not a condition precedent to the operation of clause (15). The latter opens with the words: "Any claim or dispute arising in connection with this contract, including claims or disputes in connection with non delivery," and these words are, in my opinion, decisive. It also seems to me that the provisions of clause (3) do no more than authorise the importers to take certain action in a certain event, without thereby shutting them out from any other remedy lawfully open to them. Finally, I regard the question as one for the determination of the arbitrators (or umpire), whose decision is "final and binding on both parties"; the umpire was within his jurisdiction in interpreting the terms of the contract and in deciding that the plaintiff firm could support a claim for damages apart from the special provisions of clause (3).

(v) There was some further argument addressed to us against the proceedings of Mr. Roberts and of the umpire with a view to founding a charge of "misconduct" against the latter. I think it unnecessary to say more than that nothing approaching a case of "misconduct" was, in my opinion, made out.

SASHIL CHANDRA DAS V. FARHAMAL BANSIL HAE.

For these reasons I would overrule all the objections of the defendant firm and order the two awards in question to be filed so that they may become operative as decrees of Court, the said defendant firm to pay all costs, including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

WALSH, J.—I agree in holding that the respondents, Sukhamal Bansidhar, submitted in writing to arbitration, and that no case is made out for refusing to file the award.

The main question turns upon the interpretation of the two alleged letters of acceptance written by Sushil Chandra Das, dated the 2nd and 4th September respectively. In terms these acceptances are conditional. But the condition contains a latent ambiguity in the words "if required". Required by whom, or what? The parole evidence as to the previous course of business satisfies me that the words meant, and were understood and intended by both parties to mean, "if required by some telegraphic mistake between England and India for which neither of the contracting parties was responsible". The elliptical form of words adopted had frequently been used and acted upon in previous contracts between the same parties. In other words, it meant "subject to the operation of clause 16 of the terms of your offer." It is a dangerous mode of acceptance. It is in fact tautologous. The operation of clause 16 could not be excluded if an absolute acceptance had been given, unless its exclusion had been expressly stipulated for. The condition is, therefore, what is generally known as a condition subsequent. The case seems to me to be covered by section 33 of the Indian Contract Act. The "uncertain future event" was the discovery of some telegraphic error. The happening of that event became impossible when the mail confirmed the original terms as communicated by telegram, and the contract thereupon became enforceable. This case is clearly distinguishable upon the facts from the case, First Appeal No. 438 of 1917, decided by a Bench of this Court where the words "if required" did not occur so that the condition was in general terms, and a question in fact arose as to a change of colour in the goods to be supplied under the indent.

I do not agree with the contention urged before us by the applicants that the decision of the question whether there has been completed contract so as to bind the parties to submission in writing rests with the arbitrators. Questions of fact and law upon which the jurisdiction of the arbitrators depends are for the Courts. If Bai Nath Kalooram and Alibhoy Mahomed, In the matter of an arbitration between (1) decided otherwise, I disagree with the decision.

On the other hand, I think that, once the contract is proved, the interpretation of its terms, such as clause 3 of this contract, is a question for the arbitrators alone.

There seems to me to have been jurisdiction to appoint the umpire in the case, though I strongly disapprove of the conduct of Mr. Roberts, who, as an arbitrator and a partisan, who had formed strong view, should not have consented to preside over the meeting which appointed the umpire. His position as President of the Delhi Piece-Goods Association makes it undesirable that he should act as arbitrator at all in disputes where he may be called upon to intervene also in a quasi-judicial capacity as the presiding official of the Association which appoints the umpire. If I were convinced that the umpire had allowed himself to be influenced in arriving at his decision by anything done by Mr. Roberts other than that may be legitimately done by an arbitrator in laying his view of the controversy before an umpire, I should hold that there had been misconduct, but I recognize that the position was rendered a difficult one by the conduct of the respondents themselves and of their arbitrator. They are clearly bound by the arbitration clause, and they did their best to wreck the proceedings.

JUDGMENT.

SPENCER, J.—This suit (Original Suit No. 7 of 1917) was brought under section 14 of Act XX of 1863, Religious Endowments Act, for (1) a declaration that the properties in the schedules to the plaint belong to the great mosjid at Guntur (2) the removal of the defendants from the trusteeship of the mosjid and for appointing a new trustee in their place and (3) a direction that the defendants should account for the income of the trust property for twelve years and other appropriate reliefs.

The District Judge found that this mosque was founded by orders of the Sultan of Hyderabad, that Haji Abdul Razack and his heirs were appointed muttiwallis or trustees with the duties of Peish Imam and Khateeb attached and that they were to enjoy the lands and do the religious services from generation to generation.

He held further that so long as the defendants and their heirs performed the duties of that office, they had a right to enjoy the produce of the lands and need not account for it. He came to the conclusion that the only breach of trust committed by the defendants was that they allowed dwelling houses to be constructed in the mosque compound and for this he ordered that rent should be levied at the rate prevailing in the Municipality, in order to prevent a title being acquired by the occupiers of the houses adverse to the trust. The Judge found that the only act of malfeasance was that they divided up the lands attached to the offices among themselves and he directed that the lands should be restored to the combined offices of muttawalli, Peish Imam and Khateeb. Mr. Narasimhachariar for the appellants argued that the grant in this case was a grant to the mosque, that the inam was a decad yam inam, that the whole income of the lands should be spent on purposes connected with the worship and that the defendants were bound to account for the manner in which they spent it.

The principal evidence produced on the plaintiff's side consisted of certain Inam Registers which are Exhibit C, D, K-3 and K-4. On the defendants' side, certain parwanas or grant-deeds were produced and have been marked as Exhibits I to IV. It appears from Exhibit D that at the time of the Inam Settlement certain dum-bilas were produced which are not now forthcoming and that the parwanas now exhibited were not produced at that time. Mr. Narasimhachariar argued that Exhibits I to IV, even if conceded to be genuine, are not shown to relate to the suit property. He argued that there was no evidence that Pattipad village mentioned in Exhibit I corresponded to Mallayapalem in the Inam Register (Exhibit C). In Exhibit D the grantor is stated in column 11 to be Vasireddi Venkatadrirayudu. The original grantee is given in column 13 as Khaji Rahitullakhan and the present owner is entered as Muziyar Davied Beg. Now, we have ascertained from the District Manual of Kistna District that Vasireddi Venkatadrirayudu ruled between 1775 and 1816 and that in 1710 the Subedar of the Deccan bestowed Kondavidu Sircar on the Vasireddi family. Rahitullakhan, the original grantee's name, must be a mistake for Rahitullah's mosque and Davied Beg in column 16 of Exhibit D was (as it appears from K. 3) the grandson of Abdul Razack in whose name the grant appears in Exhibit 1. In Exhibit K (3), a statement given at the time of the inam inquiry in Fasli 1269, Abdul Razack is mentioned as Sannatdar. In the inam fair register of Malleyapalem village (Exhibit O) the grantor is stated to be Bapul Jung of Hyderabad in Fasli 1185. This is evidently a mistake for Basulat Jung of Hyderabad, who is the grantor mentioned in Exhibits II, III and IV. At the back of Exhibit III there is a plan of the compound enclosing the mosque which shows the position of the buildings and this corresponds to the plans filed by the parties in the case. On the whole, we are of opinion that from the name of the grantor Basulat Jung, the name of the grantee Abdul Razack, the date which is 1155 Hijri, the extent which is 10 kuchels both in Exhibits O, and in IVa and the plan at the back of Exhibit O, there can be no doubt that Exhibits 1 to IV as well as Exhibits O, D, K-3 and K-4, relate to the suit mosque. It was not disputed at the trial that the defendants are the heirs of the original grantee Abdul Razack. The result is that the District Judge's conclusion that the grant was made to the defendants' family for the upkeep of the mosque and its buildings and for the performance of the services was correct. Exhibit K-4 contains a statement in the "Remarks" column that altogether there was an inam of 500 acres for the performance of services of this mosque, and that it is in the possession of Davied Beg.

Being an inam for the performance of religious services, it is not necessary that the service holder should strictly account for his disposal of the produce of the lands attached to the charitable object. The lands are granted for his maintenance and the maintenance of his heirs subject to the condition of his keeping up the mosque and performing services regularly. This is the rule followed by Government (see Board's Standing Order 52, rule 111, which declares that inams granted for religious objects, such as, for the support of temples and mosques, are as a rule continued to the present holders, and their successors, and are not subject to further interference, as long as the buildings or institutions are maintained in an efficient state and the services continued to be performed according to the conditions of the grant).

We see no objection to the lands being temporarily divided up among the holders of the office or joint trustees as the descendants of the original trustee become, if the division is for better convenience in the performance of their duties. As Bhasbham Iyengar, J., observes, in the case of a Hindu temple, in Ramanathan Chetty v. Marugappa Chetty (1), the emoluments of an office are subject to partition like any other family property though the office is joint and the co-trustees all form one collective trustee.

As regards the buildings in the mosque compound they are apparently for the habitation of those who perform service in the mosque. It is not shown that they interfere with the performance of the worship.

The District Judge's order that the occupants should pay rent cannot be supported. If the trustees are not liable to account for the income, they should not be directed to pay rent to themselves. The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed.

In the objection memorandum the first defendant has raised the objection that he is not liable to pay the costs of the plaintiffs when he succeeded in the suit. No doubt, he brought the suit on himself by his application to the municipal authorities in which he alleged that the lands and buildings were the exclusive property of the mosque and that he had no personal rights whatever in them. He resorted to this declaration in order to escape payment of the municipal tax. He, therefore, deserved to have to pay his own costs in the suit. But having been successful, it was not just to make him pay the costs of the plaintiffs also when the suit substantially failed. The lower Court's decree in respect of costs will be modified by directing that each party will pay their own costs throughout.

(1) 27 M. 192 at p. 199; 18 M. L. J. 341.

GUNPAT RAO V. RAJ KUMAR SINGH.

The connected Appeal No. 202 of 1920, which is by defendants Nos. 3 and 4 in which they persisted in their appeal memorandum in maintaining that the defendants had acquired full rights of ownership by adverse possession in respect of the suit lands and in maintaining that the Judge was wrong in holding that the grants were made for the performance of services at the mosque, though it must be admitted that the defendant's Vakil abandoned this position at the hearing of the appeal, must be dismissed with the exception only that the lower Court's decree will be modified by omitting the direction as to the levy of rent by first defendant from the other defendants for the use of the buildings occupied by them as dwelling houses. Each side to bear their own costs.

A declaration will be added to the decrees to the effect that the mosque is a public mosque and that the emoluments belong to the office-holders for the time being subject to the due performance of their duties in the mosque.

RAJ KUMAR SINGH—RESPONDENT IN APPEAL NO. 73.

Remand—Power of High Court to remand on point covered by existing issue.

Where an issue is raised in the Court of first instance on a particular point and the parties have adduced evidence upon the same, and there is a distinct finding of both the Trial Court and the first Appellate Court upon that point, it is not open to the High Court to remand the case for a re-hearing upon the same point. [p. 496, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad.

Mr. S. O. Miller, for the Appellant.
Mr. N. N. Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—The question for decision in these appeals is whether the learned Judge of this Court in second appeal was justified in remanding the case to the Trial Court for the hearing and determination of an issue which he considered had not been properly raised or tried in the first instance. The facts of the case shortly are: that the defendant No. 4, Musammât Sareba Kuar, in the years 1908 and 1910 obtained a mortgage interest under a rehan deed of certain property which constitutes part of the property in suit. She was recorded in the Record of Rights as being usufructuary mortgagee and Tulsi Singh, her husband's brother's son, was recorded as being an under-raiyyat of the property. In the year 1911 a further holding was purchased in the name of Sareba Kuar and she was recorded as holding the raiyyati interest in that property with Tulsi Singh as under-raiyyat. In 1916 Sareba Kuar transferred both these properties, that is, her mortgage interest and her raiyyati holding to the plaintiff. Subsequently the plaintiff, being under the impression that Tulsi Singh was the under-raiyyat, sued him for rent. In that suit

GUNPAT RAO v. RAJ KUMAR SINGH.

Tulsi Singh contended that he was not an under-raiyat of the property at all, that in fact he was a co-sharer with the other members of the family and that the property had only been purchased in the name of Sareba Kuar as benamidar for the family. The rent suit which was brought in 1917 was decided in favour of Tulsi Singh and against the present plaintiff, and in so far as that decision acts as res judicata in finding that Tulsi Singh was not an under-raiyat the decision is not disputed in the present case.

The present suits were instituted in May 1918 claiming recovery of possession of the holding and of the rehan property. In the plaint the plaintiff sets up a case that the property in suit in fact belonged to Sareba Kuar and was purchased by her as her own property but as an alternative case he pleaded that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, who were Raj Kumar Singh, the brother-in-law of Sareba Kuar, and Tulsi Singh, his son, had given the plaintiff to understand by their words, deeds and acts that the Musammat was the real rehandar in the one case and tenant in the other and that it was upon the strength of these proceedings and evidence that the plaintiff purchased the rehan property and the other property from Musammat Sareba Kuar.

When the case came for trial various issues were raised for determination which are not material for present purposes, but Issue No. 4 was whether Sareba Kuar was owner of the disputed property or a farzidar of the other defendants. The case all along made by the defendants was that Sareba Kuar was really their farzidar and that the property never belonged to her from start to finish. Issue No. 6, which is the important issue to be considered in the appeal, was to this effect:— "Whether the deed of transfer by Sareba Kuar in favour of the plaintiff is valid and binding on the other defendants." The case put forward at the trial on behalf of the plaintiff, which arose upon that portion of the pleadings which I have referred to and upon the sixth issue which I have just set out, was that under section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act even if the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were the real owners of the property in suit they had in fact in their representations and their acts induced the plaintiff to believe that Sareba Kuar was the real owner of the property and they had thereby impliedly consented that she, who was undoubtedly the ostensible owner, should transfer the property to the plaintiff. Her name was entered in the Record of Rights as the owner and she in fact was allowed to keep possession of the title deeds and these facts were known to the plaintiff but in order to show that he had complied with the provisions of section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act he called evidence to show that he had taken reasonable care to ascertain that the transferor had power to make the transfer. That evidence consisted of that of a patwari of the village, and his evidence was to the effect that he had made enquiries and he had informed the plaintiff as to the nature of the enquiries he had made. In considering the Issue No. 6 the only question which the learned Munsif dealt with was this question of whether the provisions of section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act had been complied with in this case and having considered the evidence put forward on behalf of the plaintiff, i.e., that of the patwari he was not satisfied that the plaintiff had taken proper care to ascertain whether Sareba Kuar was really in possession of the property or not, and, therefore, having found that the property in fact belonged to the other defendants Nos. 1 and 2, he dismissed the plaintiff's suit. It is important to bear in mind that that was the only question which was discussed in deciding the sixth issue.

The matter then went on appeal to the District Judge and the learned District Judge took a different view on the facts from that arrived at by the Munsif. He pointed out that the patwari Lalji Lal stated that he had made enquiries on behalf of the purchaser and that he had learnt that Sareba Kuar was the real rehandar and that witness was not in fact cross-examined by the defendants. He was the patwari of the village and after the transfer was completed he was engaged as a servant of the plaintiff. The Munsif had considered that his evidence was not trustworthy because he was not at the time he was alleged to have made the enquiries a servant of the plaintiff but only became so afterwards. The learned District Judge did not consider that this was sufficient ground for rejecting his evidence and he thought that the village patwari was a very likely man to have been employed to make enquiries of this sort and accepting his evidence, as he did, the learned District Judge came to the conclusion that the case under section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act had been made out. I may mention that apart from this question of enquiries there were many other circumstances in the case which led the Court to come to the conclusion that Saraba Kuar had been holding it as the ostensible owner.

From that decision the defendants appealed to the learned Judge of this Court. The learned Judge came to the conclusion that, as there had been no direct issue raised as to whether section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act applied or not, he doubted whether the attention of the parties had been properly drawn to it or whether they had called the evidence upon that point which they would have done if the issue had been more distinctly raised, and, therefore, he remanded the case back to the Trial Court to re-hear the issue No. 6 with special reference to the question arising under section 41, and gave the parties leave to adduce further evidence. He further ordered that the District Judge on receiving the decision upon this issue of the Munsif should give his opinion upon it and remit it to the High Court. The only question which has been argued in appeal before us to-day is whether or not upon the facts, which I have stated, the learned Judge was justified in remanding the case. That must depend, in the first instance, upon whether the plea arising under section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act was sufficiently raised in the pleadings; and, secondly, whether it was sufficiently raised by the issues settled before the trial. In my opinion there can be no doubt that in the paragraph of the plaint, which I have referred to, this issue, although perhaps not very scientifically put, was clearly raised, viz., that it was with the consent express or implied of the defendants that Saraba Kuar was the ostensible owner of the property and that, in these circumstances, they cannot complain if she had transferred the property to a bona fide purchaser. Again, when the case came for trial, as I have pointed out, although the sixth issue did not in terms mention section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act, it could hardly have had reference to any other question than that which I have just referred to and which alone is dealt with by the learned Munsif in determining the issue. The issue no doubt was a little wider than was necessary merely to include a point arising under section 41 but the issue, as framed, clearly admitted of the question being decided in the case and I can see myself no other reason at all why this issue should have been raised except for the fact that it was foreshadowed in the pleadings and the parties had notice of it. In these circumstances it seems to me that the matter having been raised and determined by the first Appellate Court it was not within the competence of this Court in second appeal to remand the case for a re-hearing upon this very issue. Had the issue not been determined then obviously it would have been within the competency of this Court to remand the case for that purpose. But where you have an issue raised which is quite sufficient for the purpose, and you have evidence upon that issue and you have a distinct finding both by the Trial Court and the first Appellate Court I do not think, with great respect to the learned Judge, that it is any longer open to him to refer the case back for re-hearing upon that very point. In my opinion these appeals should be allowed, the decrees appealed from should be set aside and the decrees of the learned District Judge on first appeal should be restored. The appellant is entitled to his costs throughout.

MULLICK, J.—I agree.

PATNA HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 535 OF 1920.

November 29, 1920.

Present:—Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad.

SARAJUL HAQUE—

PETITIONER

vs.

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 407, Expl. (2)— Derelict animal—Possession—Misappropriation—Duty of finder of property.

A person who takes possession of a derelict animal of which no owner can be discovered, is not guilty of any offence, and cannot be convicted of an offence under section 403 of the Penal Code.

A person, finding a property of which, from the nature of it, there must be an owner, must take reasonable care of it and endeavour to find out the owner; but he is not bound to adopt extraordinary means for the discovery; nor is he bound to be out of pocket in discovering the owner by means of advertisement.

Criminal revision against an order of the Deputy Magistrate, Muzafferpur, dated the 21st August 1920, affirming in appeal the conviction and sentence of the accused by the Honorary Magistrate, Muzafferpur.

Mr. S. P. Varma, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner, Saraj-ul-Haque, has been convicted and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 60 under section 403 of the Indian Penal Code by the Honorary Magistrate of Muzafferpur. On appeal the Deputy Magistrate has upheld the conviction and sentence.

The property misappropriated is a cow. The cow was "wandering here and there for the last three or four years." On the 3rd Magh last the accused took the cow to Aklu Pashi, P. W. No. 3, and gave it to him on what is called Pusia, telling him that he had purchased the cow for Rs. 10. The cow gave birth to a calf on the following day. A fortnight after the Chowkidar (P. W. No. 2), finding the cow in the possession of Aklu enquired of him as to how he was in possession of the same. Aklu told him that he got the cow from the accused Saraj-ul-Haque. The Chowkidar enquired from the accused and he told him that he had purchased the cow from one Musammal Jhallo. Jhallo, however, denied having sold the cow and the Chowkidar, therefore, reported the matter to the President of the Beat. The accused produced a receipt purporting to have been given by Jhallo to him relating the purchase of the from her.

The Courts below rejected the defence and held that it was not proved that the accused purchased the cow from Jhallo. They held, however, that the cow was an unclaimed property and was roaming about. That the accused took possession of it and made it over to Aklu and after she had given birth to a calf sold it to one Choolbai for Rs. 22, "out of which Rs. 11 was paid to him with promise to pay the balance a little while after."

The question is whether, upon the facts found, by the Courts below the charge of criminal misappropriation has been brought home to the accused. The cow in question was roaming about in the village for the last three or four years and the ownership was not at all traced to any body. Mere taking of such a property will not be any offence, but the person taking possession of it would be guilty if he appropriated it "to his own use when he knows or has the means to discover the owner, or before he has used reasonable means to discover and give notice to the owner and has kept the property a reasonable time to enable the owner to claim it" (vide Explanation (2), section 403, of the Indian Penal Code). It depends upon the circumstance of each case whether the conditions laid down in that Explanation have been fulfilled or not.

The Courts below are of opinion that it was the duty of the accused, being the Dafadar, to impound the cattle or to inform the Police so that the cattle might be sold and the sale proceeds deposited in the custody of the authorities. No doubt a person, finding a property of which, from the nature of it, there must be an owner, must take reasonable care of it and endeavour to find out the owner; but he is not bound to adopt extraordinary means for the discovery nor is he bound to be out of pocket in discovering the owner by means of advertisement. In the present case the cattle was wandering in the village openly for a considerably long time. The Chowkidar himself swears that he used to see the cattle ownerless for the last three or four years. Thus every body in the locality apparently knew that the cattle in question was wandering in the village. There was, therefore, no particular obligation in the present case on the part of the Dafadar to inform the Police. The accused took charge of the cattle at a time when she was about to give birth to a calf, made it over to Aklu and just on the day following she actually did give birth to a calf. I do think that the accused really believed that there was no owner of the cow or that it had become derelict. He was, in the circumstances of the case, perfectly right in treating it as being the property of nobody. Consequently, there could not be possibly any intention of dishonestly misappropriating, for he never had intended to cause wrongful loss to anybody, since the ownership of the cow was not traced for a long time. In arriving at the aforesaid conclusion, I have considered all the authorities, both English and Indian, on the subject and the valuable note under the section in Gout's Indian Penal Code, Volume II.

I, therefore, hold that, on the facts found by the Courts below, no charge of criminal misappropriation can be laid against the accused. I accordingly set aside the conviction and sentence and acquit the accused. The fine, if paid, must be refunded.

W. C. A.

Conviction set aside.

A person who cuts and takes away crops sown by another, is guilty of theft. The fact that the crops in question stood upon fields in the cultivatory possession of the person removing them and were sown there without any right is of no consequence.

Criminal revision against an order of the Magistrate, First Class, Meerut, dated the 30th March 1921.

Mr. Raza Ali, for the Applicants.

Mr. K. B. Dang, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The charge against the applicants was that they had committed theft by cutting and taking away the crop sown by Musammat Nannhon. The Trial Court found distinctly that the crop in question had been sown by Musammat Nannhon and cut by the accused without any right. They were thus guilty of theft which may have been a technical theft. They were convicted accordingly. In appeal the point was raised that the crop in question stood upon fields which were in the cultivatory possession of the applicants themselves. The Magistrate who heard the appeal directed an enquiry upon that point. He had no right to direct an enquiry. If he liked he could have taken further evidence. There was not the slightest necessity to direct an enquiry as it was proved that the crop in question had been sown by the complainant. The Patwari and Janki Prasad prove this. It is not of the least consequence whether the complainant has or has not good title to the cultivation of the fields in question. It is sufficient if she sowed the crop. Now there is good evidence that she sowed the crop and that the applicants cut the crop. I see no reason to disbelieve this evidence. The convictions are, therefore, good. The sentences are not excessive. I dismiss this application.

OPPOSITE PARTY.Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 202, 203, 204—Complaint—Preliminary enquiry by Police declaring complaint to be false—Magistrate directing regular trial and sending for charge sheet—Order ultra vires—Civil matter—Criminal Courts, jurisdiction of.

Where a Magistrate directs an inquiry by the Police under section 202 of the Criminal Procedure Code, into a complaint, and the Police submit a report that the case is false; that the matter in dispute between the parties is one for the Civil Courts to determine, and that a Civil suit between the parties relating to that matter is pending, the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to direct the submission of a charge sheet, merely because in his opinion it is desirable to ascertain the truth.

Criminal revision against the order of the Sub-Divisional Officer, Gaya, dated the 4th October 1920.

Messrs. S. P. Varma and S. S. Bose, for the Petitioners;

Mr. G. C. Pal, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The Rule must be made absolute. Mr. Pal, appearing on behalf of the opposite party, concedes that the order of the Magistrate dated the 4th October 1920 directing charge sheet to be sent up cannot be supported. The Magistrate himself was not satisfied with the complaint and was of opinion that "it involves a civil dispute." He accordingly directed the Police to make preliminary enquiry.

The Police made a thorough enquiry into the matter and concluded its report in the following words:—"Under the circumstances noted above the accused fully proved his statement and under the circumstances noted above all these facts and circumstances and documentary evidence, etc., clearly show that the complainant himself wanted to realise the said amount twice and attempted to deceive the accused party. I, therefore, submit final report false under section 420-417, Indian Penal Code, purely a civil dispute matter for which Suit No. 56 of 1920 is pending in Court. The complainant, in my opinion, seems to be liable for the prosecution under this section."

The Magistrate passed the following order:—"Police report seen. The matter should, I think, be thrashed out in regular trial. Let charge sheet be sent up." The basis of the Magistrate's order is, therefore, the Police report, but the report does not justify the order.

Again, the enquiry by and the report of the Police was under section 202 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. No order for submitting charge sheet could be made by the Magistrate. The Magistrate could only pass an order under section 203 or 204 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The order of the Magistrate is, therefore, ultra vires.

The Magistrate apparently passed the order, because, in his opinion, as stated in his explanation, it was desirable that the matter should have been thrashed out in a regular trial. The Police reported the case to be false and was of opinion that the complainant was guilty of bringing a false case. I do not think that the accused should be put to any harassment simply because it may be desirable to find out the truth. Besides, the subject matter of the complaint under sections 417 and 420, Indian Penal Code, is already covered by the issue in the Civil Suit No. 56 of 1920 pending in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Gaya between the parties. That issue is—"Did the plaintiff pay the entire consideration, or was half of it paid by Ram Charitar?"

The matter in dispute being of civil nature, the Criminal Court has no jurisdiction over the case and the order of the Magistrate dated the 4th October is accordingly set aside and the proceeding pending in consequence thereof against the petitioner is set aside.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 144 (4), (5), 435, 439—Revision after expiry of two months—Order prohibiting doing of certain act till decision by Civil Court—Injunction—Jurisdiction—"Alter," meaning of.

A High Court will not decline to revise an order, passed under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, after the expiry of two months from the date of the order. It will examine the order to see whether it was passed with or without jurisdiction, and, if in its opinion it is a wrong order, it will express its views about it. [p. 501, col. 2.]

An order under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, which is indefinite as to time and which prohibits a party from doing a certain act until the question in dispute is settled by a Civil Court, is in effect a perpetual injunction, and is, therefore, without jurisdiction. [p. 501, col. 2.]

The word "alter" in sub-section (4) of section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, does not mean substituting the name of one party for that of the other. [p. 502, col. 1.]

Ganpat Singh v. Emperor, 47 Ind. Cas. 76; 3 P. L. J. 287; 4 P. L. W. 357; 19 Cr. L. J. 880, referred to.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of the District Magistrate, Ramnad, dated 10th April 1921 setting aside the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Ramnad, dated 19th March 1921.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. T. Rangachariar (with him Mr. K. S. Ramabhadra Iyer), for the Petitioners.—The order under revision was passed without jurisdiction. There is no time limit fixed for the order. The order virtually amounts to a perpetual injunction on the Nadar community who are restrained from taking the car in procession till the dispute between the parties is settled by the Civil Court.

Besides, the order of the District Magistrate which was passed on appeal from the Sub-Divisional Magistrate's order clearly enlarges and amplifies on the latter. The word "alter" in section 144 (4) cannot mean substitution of the name of one party for those of another.

Though two months have elapsed since the order was passed, the High Court can interfere. Ramanadhan Chetti v. Murugappa Chetti (1) and Bhairu Gope v. Emperor (2).

Mr. F. S. Vaz, for the Respondents.—The order is not in force now as two months have expired. It is unnecessary now for the High Court to examine the propriety or correctness of the order. Govinda Chetti v. Perumal Chetti (3) and Emperor v. Vinayak Narayan Arts (4).

The District Magistrate's order does not enlarge the order of the Divisional Magistrate. It is virtually a new order by the District Magistrate which he had jurisdiction to pass to prevent a breach of the peace.

Mr. M. H. Hakim, for the Public Prosecutor, on behalf of the Crown.

ORDER.—This is a petition to revise the order of the District Magistrate, Ramnad, dated the 10th April 1921. It appears that, in the village of Aruppukottai there is a Nadar temple, Mariamman Koil, round which the Nadars claim the right of dragging their temple car in procession once a year. There is a rival faction in the village composed of Muhammadans who apparently resent the dragging of the car round the western and northern sides of the temple on the ground that the land on those sides belongs to them.

The first proceeding in connection with the present petition occurred on the 19th March 1921 when the Sub-Divisional Magistrate made an order under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code by which he directed that the car be peacefully taken round the temple through the western and northern streets of the temple without infringing the rights of the Musalmans on the street to the north, and prohibited certain Musalmans from interfering with it during the festival. On appeal to the District Magistrate, he passed an interim order on the 23rd March 1921, on representation from the leading Nadars, to postpone the dragging of the ear but rescinded the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate and prohibited the Nadar community from taking the ear in procession round the west and (north) front of the temple. On the 10th April 1921 the final order to which this revision petition is directed was passed. In it the learned District Magistrate holds that the Nadars have not established their right to drag the ear over the disputed land and that, until the question is settled by the Civil Court, their claim to exercise that right should not be upheld. He, however, proceeds and prohibited under section 144 the counter-petitioners, or any of the Nadar community or any one on their behalf from taking the ear in procession round the west and front of the temple. Mr. Rangashariar for the petitioners, the Nadars, has urged several objections to this order on the ground that it is made without jurisdiction, and the first objection is that, although under section 144 (5) no order can remain in force for longer than two months, the learned District Magistrate has not only failed to insert such a provision in his order but had virtually issued the injunction restraining the Nadars till their claim is settled by a Civil Court. The preliminary objection for me to decide is whether I ought to go into this and other objections to jurisdiction on the ground urged by Mr. Vaz, the learned Counsel for the respondent, namely, that the order being only enforceable under the Act for two months and those two months having long ago expired there is no reason why this Court should investigate the legality or otherwise of the order in question. I confess I have been strongly impressed with this argument, in support of which several cases have been quoted. Govinda Ochetti v. Perumal Ochetti (3), Emperor v. Vinayak Narayan Arte (4). There is no doubt that there have been cases where a criminal revision petition has been entertained although the period of two months had long since expired. As for instance in Ramanadhan Ochetti v. Murugappa Ochetti (1), where the order was given on the 22nd September 1899 and the judgment in revision delivered on the 10th April 1900, Nothing seems to have been said in that case as to expiry of the time for which the order could remain in force. So also in Bhairi Gopi v. Emperor (2), though in Govinda Ochetti v. Perumal Ochetti (3), as the two months had expired, the learned Judge declined to revise the order. If I am of opinion that the order is wrong although it may have expired, it seems to me I should not be deterred from expressing my views about it, in case it is sought to use it in any way in the litigation which is already pending on behalf of one side or the other, in so far as it purports to settle, even only for the time being, the respective claims or rights of the parties. I, therefore, though with some hesitation, decide that the order must be examined to see whether it was passed with or without jurisdiction in spite of the fact that it has expired.

As already stated, several points were taken against the validity of the order by Mr. Rangashariar. I think it may be only necessary to deal with two or three of them. I have already quoted the terms of the order and from the words quoted it is clear that the order is indefinite as to time. There was a similar order in Ramanadhan Ochetti v. Murugappa Ochetti (1), where the order was, firstly, not to interfere with the management of the Koil and, secondly, not to take any part until a certain person was duly evicted from the Koil management by due course of law. This latter direction was held to contravene the provisions of sub-section 5 of section 144 and it was held that to that extent the order was made without jurisdiction. In Meyyaru Ammal, In re (5), Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar observed: "of course, if the Magistracy tries to use section 144 as a means of granting a perpetual injunction the High Court has the power to interfere." That seems to me what the learned District Magistrate has tried to do here. There is also, in my opinion, another and equally obvious defect in the learned Magistrate's order. Section 144 (4) permits any Magistrate to rescind or alter any order made under this section by himself or any Magistrate subordinate to him. Here, as pointed out above, the learned District Magistrate has not confined himself to rescinding the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate but has prohibited the counter-petitioners or any of the Nadar community from taking the car in procession. Mr. Rangachariar, relying on a case of the Patna High Court reported as Ganpat Singh v. Emperor, (6), contends that the word 'alter' cannot mean substituting the names of one party for those of the other. Mr. Vaz, for the respondent, has ingeniously contended that the order passed by the learned District Magistrate, in so far as it restrains the Nadars, is not an order in appeal at all under section 144 (4) but it is a totally new order which the District Magistrate took upon himself to pass as he feared a breach of the peace. It will be observed that the final order of the District Magistrate refers to the preliminary order dated the 23rd March and the preliminary order is clearly one passed on an appeal from the Sub-Divisional Magistrate's order—see the heading on the top of the paper. It, therefore, seems to me that I cannot, on the state of the record, say that the final order of the District Magistrate was not passed on appeal from the Sub-Divisional Magistrate and I, therefore, hold that it is not a new order, but, under the circumstances I have detailed, one which the learned District Magistrate had no jurisdiction to pass.

Mr. Rangachariar also relied on the fact that there was an existing order under section 147 passed on the 20th April 1915 by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate at that time directing the Mussulmans not to spread their looms on one of the pieces of land in dispute and holding that the land in question was a public road. Mr. Rangachariar's contention is that this order under section 147 is illegal because it deprives him of any benefit he may have under the order passed under section 147 which is in force until it is displaced by something else. I do not think it necessary to decide as to this contention in view of the opinion I entertain on the two other points detailed above.

Under the circumstances I must hold that the order of the learned District Magistrate was passed without jurisdiction and I must allow the criminal revision petition. Under the circumstances I do so without costs.

JUDGMENT.

COUTTS, J.—The appellants, Dasrath Singh, Suraj Singh (son of Santokhi Singh), Suraj Singh (son of Dular Singh) and Iswar Singh have been convicted under section 379 of the Indian Penal Code and have been sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment each; the other appellant, Sant Prokash Singh, has been sentenced to the same term of imprisonment under section 379-114, Indian Penal Code. The trial was by Jury and the contention of the learned Counsel for the appellants is that there has been misdirection in the charge to the Jury.

DASRATH SINGH V. EMPEROR.

The facts of the case as alleged by the prosecution are, shortly, that for some time there has been a dispute between Kishun Lal and his nephew Gajadhar Prasad regarding possession of two villages which adjoin each other. The tenants are chiefly Goalas and they have taken the side of Gajadhar Prasad and have been paying rent to him and his brothers. Kishun Lal attempted to get rent without success and eventually he took the aid of Bachhu Singh, one of the proprietors of an adjoining village Pipra. Village Pipra is inhabited by Babhans and tenants of Bachhu Singh. In order to coerce the tenants of Barka and Ohotki Kunhri, Bachhu Singh's gomashia the appellant Sant Prakash Singh with about 20 men went on the morning of the 5th of July last to Barka Kunhri. Sant Prakash rode with a sword in his hand and the rest of the mob followed him, armed with swords or lathis. When they got to Barka Kunhri they looted the houses of Bhuan Goala, Tanak Goala and Bansi Goala and beat them. They then went to Ohhotki Kunhri and did the same thing at the houses of Gangoo Goala, Abhiram Goala and Dila Goala.

Two men Sital Singh and Narayan Singh Kurmi went to Fatehpore Thana and gave information to the Sub-Inspector of Police of an occurrence which had taken place at Barka Kunhri. This was not the occurrence with which we are at present concerned, but the Sub-Inspector went to the village and when he got there he found Bhuan Goala and others injured; so he took their statements and sent them to hospital. He then enquired into the case. On the 13th July he went to the hospital and took the statement of Bhuan Goala and treated it as the first information in the case. He then continued the investigation which eventually led to the sending up and conviction of the present appellants.

The case was tried by the Assistant Sessions Judge of Gaya and it has been tried by him with great care. The charge to the Jury is also an exceedingly fair one; but it is contended by the learned Counsel for the appellants that the learned Assistant Sessions Judge has committed an error in law with regard to the first information and that in connection with this first information he has misdirected the Jury. Now what happened is this. The Sub-Inspector on the 5th of July took the statement of Bhuan Goala. He did not, however, treat this as the first information, but on the 13th of July he resorted Bhuan's statement again and this statement he did treat as the first information. This was a mistake on the part of the Sub-Inspector but if the mistake had stopped there it would have been of little consequence. Unfortunately, however, possibly because he did not know of the statement of the 5th of July the learned Sessions Judge allowed the statement of the 13th of July to be proved as the first information and he did not have the statement resorted by the Sub-Inspector on the 5th of July (which was really the first information) proved at all. In argument, however, this statement was evidently referred to and apparently it was contended that the statement of the 13th of July was not the first information. The learned Assistant Sessions Judge realized the correctness of this contention and he told the Jury that the statement of the 5th of July was the first information and that the statement of the 13th of July was not. Unfortunately, however, he told the Jury what the purport of the statement made on the 5th of July was, although the statement had not been proved and was not on the record; and, furthermore, he told the Jury that the statement of the 13th of July merely amplified the statement of the 5th of July and that its importance was not more than a statement made in the ordinary course to a Police Officer. The contention of the learned Counsel for the appellants is that the learned Assistant Sessions Judge had no right to place the statement of the 5th of July before the Jury and that he should have informed the Jury that the statement of the 13th of July was not evidence at all and that, except in so far as its contents may have been brought out in evidence for purposes of corroboration or contradiction, they should discard it entirely from their minds. These contentions are, in my opinion, uncontrovertible, and, under the circumstances, the only course is to set aside the convictions and sentences and to remand the case for re-trial. I may say that I do this with considerable reluctance because the learned Assistant Sessions Judge's charge is a good one and very fair to the accused persons; but the facts remain that he has placed before the Jury a statement which is not on the record and he has not told them that they should exclude from consideration a statement which is not evidence in the case. I would, therefore set aside the convictions and sentences and direct that the case be retried. There will be no order as to bail.

Case referred by the District Judge, Jhang at Sargodha with his letter No. 1007 G, dated the 26th October 1921.

Lala Jai Lal, B. B., Assistant Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.

Maulvi Ghulam Mohy-ud Din, for Khwaja Fakhar-ud-Din, Pleader.

ORDER.—On the 8th January 1921 Khwaja Fakhar-ud-Din, a Pleader of Ohiniot, handed a letter, Exhibit 2, which he had written, to Sardar Gian Singh, Munsif of Ohiniot, who, in consequence of the objectionable nature of the contents, forwarded the letter to the District Judge with a view to action being taken against the Pleader under section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act. The District Judge, after framing a charge and taking evidence in accordance with the provisions of that section, has found that Khwaja Fakhar-ud-Din has been guilty of unprofessional conduct or has afforded reasonable cause for disciplinary action to be taken against him. He has accordingly reported the matter to this Court and has suspended the Pleader from practice pending this Court's orders.

The letter is clearly a most improper one and its tenor is correctly described in the charge drawn up by the District Judge, which is as follows:—

"That you on or about the 8th January 1921 addressed and delivered to the Munsif at Ohiniot a letter of which the whole tone and style are in general improper, and more particularly that in the said letter you impute feelings of racial antipathy against you on the part of the Munsif as a Judicial Officer and charge him with allowing such feelings to influence him in passing contrary orders against you in cases in which you appear; and that this act of yours and the expressions used by you thereby amount to professional misconduct or afford any other reasonable cause as specified in clauses (b) and (f) of section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act."

Section 14 has been mentioned in the charge by mistake for section 13. We do not think that clause (b) of section 13 applies as the letter cannot be said to have been written by Khwaja Fakhar-ud-Din in the discharge of his professional duty. But the case certainly falls within the purview of clause (f) of that section; and Mr. Jai Lal, who has appeared on behalf of the Crown, has referred us in this connection to Ohanda Singh, In the matter of (1), District Judge of Kistna v.

Hanumanulu (2), Amrita Lal, In the matter of (3) and Advocate, In the matter of An (4).

Mr. Ghulam Mohy-ud-Din, who has appeared on behalf of Khwaja Fakhr ud-Din, does not justify the writing of the letter but admits that it was an improper one, and he states that his client expresses unreserved regret for having written it and throws himself on the mercy of the Court. It is to be observed, however, that in the proceedings before the District Judge no such unqualified expression of regret was made, and in fact Khwaja Fakhr ud-Din attempted to justify the remarks which he had made in his letter to the Munsif. In a letter which he wrote to the District Judge on the 5th April he said only that if in the opinion of the District Judge his letter to the Munsif had affected the latter in his official capacity he was sorry and asked for pardon. The District Judge replied that, if Khwaja Fakhr ud-Din apologised to the Munsif in Court and withdrew a complaint (of defamation) which he had brought against the Munsif, the incident would be regarded as closed. Khwaja Fakhr ud-Din, however, did not apologise to the Munsif, and the District Judge accordingly took proceedings under section 14 of the Act.

In these circumstances although the case is not one in which a severe punishment is called for, we do not consider that the apology now offered justifies us in overlooking the matter. We suspend Khwaja Fakhr ud-Din from practice for a period of three months commencing from the date of the District Judge's order of suspension, namely, the 25th October 1921.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 255 OF 1921.

Present:—Mr. Justice Lindray.

JIWAN—APPLICANT

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 213, 537, application of—Property, stolen, recovered from accused separately—Joint trial—Illegality.

Where stolen property is recovered from the possession of several persons at different times, there should be a separate trial under section 411 of the Penal Code, of each of such persons. The joint trial of such persons is illegal, and the illegality is not curable by the application of section 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Agra, dated the 11th March 1921.

FACTS of the case will appear from the following excerpt from the judgment of the Sessions Judge:

Jiwan, Chatter and Badle have been convicted of dishonestly retaining stolen property, and appeal against their convictions and sentences.

The first objection taken is that the joint trial of the accused was illegal.

I find that the case was sent up as one of burglary, but that after hearing the prosecution evidence the Magistrate framed a charge under section 411 only. The facts as found by the Magistrate are that a burglary was committed at the house of Sitla Charan, and that articles of property stolen on that occasion were recovered from the possession of the accused separately about two months later. Undoubtedly, as there was not joint possession of the property, there ought, under the law, to be separate trials of the accused. I find, however, that the only proceeding of the Magistrate after framing the charge was to give judgment, as the accused did not want to examine any witnesses, either prosecution or defence.

It appears to me that there was no legal obligation upon the Magistrate to hear the prosecution evidence afresh as against each accused separately, after he had decided that the evidence was insufficient to prove that they had actually committed the burglary, but from the point of framing the charge it was necessary that the proceeding should be divided, and that the remaining proceeding, if any, should be conducted separately as against the three accused persons. I am unable to say whether the Magistrate would have conducted separate proceedings if there had been any to conduct but it certainly is not possible to say that he would not have done so. There is no legal objection to his writing a single judgment to cover the case of three persons who have been tried. I, therefore, find that there is no valid legal objection to the procedure of the Magistrate.

Mr. S. C. Mukerji, for the Applicant.

Mr. B. Malcomson, the Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision on behalf of one Jiwan who has been convicted in the Court of the Magistrate on a charge under section 411. It appears that two other persons were tried along with Jiwan, one of whom was acquitted, the other being convicted. The latter has not made any application to this Court.

Jiwan's conviction was upheld by the learned Sessions Judge in spite of the plea taken before him that the trial was illegal. There can be no doubt as to the illegality of the trial and I cannot agree with the Judge who seems to have taken the view that an illegality of this kind can be cured by the application of section 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code. I must give effect, therefore, to this application and set aside all the proceedings in the Court below.

The result is that the accused will be released.

Government appeal against an order of acquittal by the Sessions Judge, Darbhanga.

The Government Advocate, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. N. Sahay, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Ross, J.—This is an appeal under section 417, Criminal Procedure Code, against the acquittal of ten persons who were tried by the learned Sessions Judge of Darbhanga with the aid of two Assessors on charges under sections 326, 147, 148 and 326-149, Indian Penal Code, in respect of certain grievous injuries inflicted on one Nawab Khan on the evening of 29th March last. The learned Government Advocate asks for a re-trial of the case on the ground that two statements made by Nawab Khan, (1) to Mr. Guise (P. W. No. 1) two hours after the occurrence, and (2) to B. Indermani Singh, Deputy Magistrate, (P. W. No. 32), two days later, were wrongly admitted in evidence. These statements in themselves were inadmissible. Their contents ought to have been stated by the witnesses, and the failure to get this done was a technical error on the part of the Public Prosecutor. The documents were exhibited by the prosecution, and the prosecution is not entitled to take advantage of this technical error in order to have a re-trial; nor is this what the learned Government Advocate seeks to do.

He contends that on the evidence in this case there ought to have been a conviction but he considers that he cannot ask for a conviction in this Court because the first of the statements, on which he relies, is not legal evidence as the record stands. To deal with this contention it is necessary to consider the whole case. The first statement of Nawab Khan is merely corroborative evidence, and if it seemed that the evidence in Court was a true account of the circumstances in which Nawab Khan was wounded, I do not think that the mere fact that an inadmissible piece of corroborative evidence was on the record through a technical error: should stand in the way of conviction here. There is, therefore, no necessity for a re-trial in any event. But in dealing with the evidence we must give the accused any benefit they may derive from the statements of Nawab Khan as if they had been properly admitted as they are an important element in the case.

The case for the prosecution is that on the evening of 29th March Nawab Khan, a Tokedar of Benipur Factory, was returning from Benipur Hat to his village Antore along with Phulwa Chowkidar and other persons. Near a Gashhi and Banswari of Jagannath Hajari he was attacked by a number of men some of whom were armed with axes and one with a sickle and the others with lathies. He was struck on the leg with an axe and was then assaulted generally, and finally, one Somna cut off his nose and right ear. Twenty-four injuries were found on his person of which five were severe. Phulwa Chowkidar names eleven persons as having been in the party with Nawab Khan of whom six have been examined in Court. Nawab Khan names thirteen, adding four, namely, Baldeo Chowdhury, Gopi Jha, Asarafi Chowdhury and Ramkishun Jha, to those named by Phulwari and omitting two, namely, Chuni and Mithu Tati. In his dying declaration, however, he had said that he did not know the names of the persons who were with him except Phulwari. Of these persons six have not been examined at all, namely, Gopalji Jha, Baikunt Jha, Baldeo Missir, Bagru Jha, Rupan Dusadh, Mithu Tati, and Asarafi Chowdhury on this point. Of these persons not examined in Court the Sub-Inspector of Police examined on the 30th March, three Gopalji Jha, Baldeo Missir and Bagru Jha, and none of them named any of the assailants. The Sub-Inspector says that he sent for the other witnesses but they did not come. Of the witnesses examined in Court Phulwa gave what has been called the first information on the 29th, seven were examined on the 3rd April and one on the 1st April. These witnesses are all tenants and labourers of the Benipur Factory and their residence is Anatur. The explanation of their delay in coming forward that is now offered is that they were afraid of Ganowra Dusadh, one of the accused who is a bad character; but only two of the witnesses give this reason. One is Buchan Jha who says in his evidence that he stated before the Police that he was afraid of Ganowra as people said that he was a desperate character but he adds that this he heard three or four days after the assault. The other is Baldeo Chowdhury who says that he was hiding through fear of Ganowra, but he admits that he had only heard of the bad livelihood case against Ganowra and that Ganowra had never beaten him. The delay in the production of this evidence seems to me a grave reason for doubting the truthfulness of the witnesses. Further, it appears from Mr. Guise's evidence that several persons who came to the factory that night with Nawab Khan said that they had been with him and of these Mr. Guise picked out Phulwa. It does not appear who the others were, and if the witnesses are believed they were not among them because they say they did not go to the factory. As to the details of the occurrence, Phulwa says that Nawab Khan was struck on the leg from behind, but the Assistant Surgeon says that the injury on the leg could not have been caused from the back. Nawab Khan's own account of the affair is not consistent as the learned Sessions Judge has shown. Moreover there are serious discrepancies between his earlier and later statements. In the statement made to Mr. Guise he named only the Dusadhs as his assailants. In his dying declaration he omitted two of the names that he had previously given and substituted the names of two Babhans. Moreover in the earlier statement he said that Somna cut off his nose and ears while Kunjwa and Kail hit him with an axe while in the later statement it was Somna who struck him with the axe, and Kunjwa who cut off his nose and ear.

The learned Government Advocate felt the importance of these discrepancies and admitted that there could not be a conviction under section 326. The occasion alleged for this attack is said to have been that some cattle of Ganowra's had been impounded by the orders of Nawab Khan on the previous day. This seems to me an altogether inadequate reason for a savage attack of this peculiar nature.

A further unexplained element in the case is the presence of blood of a ruminant animal along with human blood on the alleged place of occurrence. No explanation of this is offered. The learned Government Advocate lays stress on the fact that a portion of the nose of Nawab Khan was found on the place of occurrence but this circumstance does not appear to me to be conclusive.

The Sessions Judge and the Assessors heard the witnesses and did not believe them. In view of the state of the evidence I am not prepared to say that in doing so they acted perversely or that it is established beyond reasonable doubt that the occurrence took place in the manner alleged by the prosecution. I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—I have carefully gone through the evidence in the case and considered the able argument of the learned Government Advocate. His chief argument was that the learned Sessions Judge ought not to have brushed aside the earliest statement of Nawab Khan made before Mr. Guise soon after the occurrence by reason of its having been somewhat contradictory as compared with the statement made by Nawab Khan two days later to Mr. Inderdani, Deputy Magistrate, as dying declaration. If this were the only defect in the case of the prosecution, namely, the two contradictory statements as regards some of the details of the occurrence made by Nawab Khan, perhaps it would have been a plausible argument. I, however, think that the prosecution case, as disclosed in the evidence of Nawab Khan and the witnesses in Court, is beset with unsurmountable probabilities and does not seem to disclose the entire occurrence. Take for instance the statement of Nawab

Khan himself in Court. He says: "I started from the Hat as the sun was about to set. Soon after sunset I reached Balha near Jagannath Hazari's Gachi and Banswari. About 12 or 13 men came out of the Gachi. I was going to my lodging at Antora. Of the 12 or 13 men Kunja and Koila had axes and Somna had a pagari sickle and the others had lathis. I also recognised Fouzdar, Lalji Gharbharra, Nathunia and Bilwa amongst them. The mob came to the road and chased me from the east. I fled towards the west. I was proceeding to the east; after I had fled three or four Luggas Kunja struck me with an axe on my left leg, I fell down. Then 15 or 18 men came from the south, I did not recognise any of them. This was because I fell down. I saw the men but did not recognise them. Both the mobs jointly assaulted me. As I was assaulted with lathis and Tangis I began to struggle and did not notice who beat me or on which part of the body. I did not recognise any of the men who assaulted me as I became senseless. Some of the mob said that I was dead. Then Somna got on my chest, cut off my nose and right ear."

In his statement before the Committing Magistrate he says: "Seeing the rioters I turned towards west and took to flight. I was first proceeding towards east. These people chased me Kunjwa overtaking me struck me with the axe he had with him, at the left leg. I fell down unconscious. After I fell down Koila and Kunjwa struck me with axes at the head."

It is thus clear from his statement that after receiving the first blow on the body from Kunjwa or some one else among the rioters on his left leg he fell down unconscious and thereafter the assailants struck him. After he fell down receiving the first blow on the left leg, the Doctor's evidence shows that he received no less than 23 injuries on different parts of his body both in front and behind. Some of those injuries must have been caused while the man was in a standing posture. A bold attempt was then made at one stage of the case to show that after he fell down he raised himself up again, and this is obviously with a view to explain the injuries on the different parts of his body most of which could not have

HARI BUX RAM V. OHHEDI PANDE.

Sub-Registrar found that Ohhedi Pande had made false statements and had thus committed an offence under section 82, clause (a) of the Registration Act and, therefore, submitted the papers and a report, dated the 20th July 1921, for the sanction of the District Registrar under section 83 of the Act. The District Registrar called on Ohhedi Pande to show cause against the prosecution under section 82 (a) for falsely denying execution of the sale deed and the mortgage deed. When cause was shown the District Registrar examined witnesses and made a full inquiry and then proceeded to enquire into the whole case; and he came to a finding that the documents in question ought to be cancelled and that they could not be registered. He, therefore, upset the order of the Special Sub-Registrar directing registration and at the same time refused to sanction the prosecution of Ohhedi Pande under section 82 of the Registration Act. It is against this order of the District Registrar that this application has been made.

The grounds taken are that as the Special Sub-Registrar had co-ordinate powers with the District Registrar the District Registrar had no jurisdiction to upset the order of the Special Sub-Registrar, directing registration, or to refuse to confirm the sanction granted by the Special Sub-Registrar for the prosecution of Ohhedi Pande.

Now, it is quite clear that the District Registrar was acting as a Revenue Court and there can be no doubt that this Court has no jurisdiction to interfere with orders passed by the Revenue Authorities in their revenue administration or by the Revenue Courts. The order passed by the District Registrar may have been without jurisdiction but the remedy for the petitioner was either to approach the Board of Revenue to get the order set aside as being without jurisdiction, or, if necessary, to file a suit in the Civil Court. With that part of the application this Court has nothing to do.

It is next contended that the District Registrar in refusing to accord sanction for the prosecution of Ohhedi Pande under section 82 (a) was acting as a Court in a criminal matter and, therefore, this Court has jurisdiction to interfere. I do not think that it is really necessary to enter into the question of the power of this Court to interfere with this order as to sanction. The facts are that the District Registrar has, as District Registrar, given judgment after full inquiry and has found that the sanction should not be accorded. He has given good reasons in that judgment and until that judgment is upset by a proper authority, either by the Board of Revenue or by a decree of a Civil Court, that judgment is a good judgment. That being so, and this Court being unable to go into the reasons for which that finding was come to, I cannot see that I can now interfere with that part of the order which refused to accord sanction. The matter might be looked at also in another way. If this order were upset by this Court at the present juncture while the judgment of the District Registrar still holds good so far as the revenue side of the matter is concerned, there must necessarily be some confusion. The result of upsetting the District Registrar's order as to sanction would be to restore the order of the Special Sub-Registrar granting sanction to prosecute Ohhedi Pande, and, therefore, we would at the same time have an order of the Sub-Registrar directing the prosecution and a revenue order of the District Registrar to the effect that the case is not one in which registration should be allowed owing to faith being put in the statements made by Ohhedi Pande. Under the circumstances, even if this Court had jurisdiction to interfere with the order as to sanction, I think that this is a case in which this Court would refuse to interfere. The application is, therefore, rejected.

The order passed in the above case will also govern Civil Revision No. 86 of 1922.

view taken in that decision. I do not find that there is anything in my view contrary to the view expressed by Lindsay, J., in the case of Jiwan v. Emperor (2), for there the actual thief not being charged in the case, there was nothing to connect the three persons. Here it is the fact that Anwar, the actual thief, was charged with the receivers, which justifies the several acts being considered parts of one transaction. On the merits Anwar was clearly proved to have been loitering just before the theft of the bicycles. When the owners returned the bicycles had disappeared, and Anwar had disappeared. Portions of the stolen bicycles were found in the shop in which he is employed. This being the case I do not see my way to interfere on the merits. I, therefore, dismiss this application.

A deed of mortgage and a sale-deed were presented to a Sub-Registrar for registration, the alleged executant of the deeds denied that he had executed them, and registration was refused; an application was then made to the District Registrar under section 73 of the Registration Act who ordered an inquiry to be made by the Special Sub-Registrar, and this officer found that the documents had been duly executed by the alleged executant and directed registration thereof; he also found that the executant had made false statements and applied to the District Registrar for sanction to prosecute him under section 82 a of the Registration Act the District Registrar, after a full inquiry, reversed the order of the Special Sub-Registrar directing registration, and refused to sanction the prosecution of the executant. On revision to the High Court:

Held, that the High Court had no jurisdiction to interfere as the District Registrar had acted as a Revenue Court, and that the proper remedy was to obtain a reversal of the order of the District Registrar by the Board of Revenue, or by a decree of a Civil Court. [p. 512, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—The facts which are necessary for a decision of this case are as follows:—

On the 6th of December 1920 the petitioner applied to the Sub-Registrar of Bettiah for compulsory registration of a mortgage and a sale-deed which he alleged had been executed by one Chhedi Pande. Chhedi Pande before the Sub-Registrar on the 16th December denied execution of those documents and, therefore, the Sub-Registrar refused to register them. The petitioner then filed an application under section 73 of the Registration Act before the District Registrar of Motihari. The District Registrar made over the matter for enquiry to the Special Sub-Registrar who had amalgamated powers under sub-section (2) of section 7 of the Registration Act and had, therefore, power to make the inquiry just as if he were the District Registrar. The Special Sub-Registrar examined witnesses on both sides and found on the 15th of July 1921 that the documents in question had been duly executed by Chhedi Pande and, therefore, ordered those documents to be registered. The deeds were actually registered on the 22nd July 1921. The Special Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92—Pro-note purporting to be executed after settlement of accounts—Evidence to prove that accounts were not taken.

Where it is stated in the body of a pro-note that the sum mentioned in it has been arrived at after taking accounts between the parties and that it is payable on demand, the executant of the note cannot give evidence to prove that, as a matter of fact, the document was not executed after the settlement of accounts.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Meerut, dated the 27th November 1920.

Mr. L. M. Banerji, for the Appellants.

Dr. S. N. Sen and Mr. Kamoda Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In our opinion there is no merit in this appeal. The suit was brought by a firm of commission agents doing business at Hapur against another firm carrying on business in grain in the Meerut city. This firm is said to consist of three persons, Narain Das, Sri Ram and Ram Nath, who were impleaded as defendants. It is stated that the defendant firm is carried on in the name of Narain Das and Sri Ram.

The case for the plaintiff firm was that, on the 4th of August 1917, a promissory note was passed in their favour by the defendant firm for a sum of Rs. 4,071-4-0. It was alleged that this amount, which carried interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum was to be payable on demand. The plaintiff alleged the demand made and the refusal of the defendant firm to pay. Hence the suit.

The main defense which was set up by the defendant firm is contained in paragraph 8 of the written statement. While it was not denied that the promissory note, upon which the suit was based, was executed, it was alleged, that, as a matter of fact, the note had not been executed after a settlement of account had been arrived at between the parties. It was said that certain dealings were going on between the parties relating to grain and that in view of certain circumstances some loss was apprehended at the time. The allegation was that this note for Rs. 4,071-4 was passed to the plaintiff as a sort of security to him and it was further alleged that the agreement between the parties was that the account between them was to be settled at a later date and that money is to be paid or received in accordance with that later settlement. Various other pleas were set out with which we are really not concerned here.

The main complaint which is made here in second appeal is that both the Courts below refused the application of the defendant firm to have an inspection of the accounts; in other words, that the Courts below refused to allow the accounts between the parties to be re-opened. So far as this plea is concerned, it appears to us to have no force whatever. The suit is based upon a promissory note and the language of this document is of importance in deciding the matter which is now before us. It is stated in the body of this document that accounts had been taken between the parties and that a sum of Rs. 4,071-4 was found owing to the plaintiff firm. It was distinctly stated in the promissory note that this sum together with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum would be payable to the plaintiff firm on demand.

The defense which was set out in the written statement was, in our opinion, a defense which could not be allowed to be raised. The defendants were in substance trying to put forward a case at variance with the terms of the written contract between the parties. As we have pointed out, the promissory note contains an unconditional promise to pay; there is nothing in the note to indicate that this undertaking to pay was subject to the further condition that accounts were at some subsequent period to be re-opened between the parties and that payment was not to be demanded or could not be enforced until this further settlement of accounts had taken place. To allow the defendants to give evidence of this kind would be to violate the provisions of section 92 of the Evidence Act. It is quite true that in certain cases which are specified in the proviso to this section evidence may be given against the terms of the written document. Proviso 1, for example, lays down, that any fact may be proved which would invalidate a document, facts such as fraud, intimidation, illegality, etc. There is, however, in the written statement of the defendant firm no allegation whatever of fraud. The only case which is disclosed in the written statement is the case that the written document of contract does not contain the real contract between the parties. In this view of the case all the argument about re-opening of accounts seem to us to be out of place, and so far as the cases to which we have been referred are concerned, and which are set out in the judgment of the Court of first instance, they do not appear to us to have any material bearing on the question with which we are dealing. In our opinion the defendants in this case were not entitled to put forward the plea that they had a right to call for a re-examination of the accounts and to demand a fresh settlement.

The only other point with which we have to deal is the liability of the firm in respect of this note which admittedly was written by the first defendant Narain Das. There can be no doubt that the three defendants are brothers; that they are members of a joint family; that they carry on business at Meerut in one shop, and it was admitted that Narain Das, who signed this promissory note, was the managing member of the family. These being the facts, we have no doubt whatever that the defendant firm was liable on the note.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

School Master and pupil—Corporal punishment on pupil, right of, extent of—School discipline, breach of—Two smacks, infliction of, not causing injury, whether actionable—Madras Educational Rules, r. 9 A

A School Master is the delegate of the parent and may for the purpose of correction inflict moderate and reasonable corporal punishment on a pupil. [p. 516, col. 1.]

Reg. v. Hopley, (1860) 2 F. & F. 202, Fitzgerald v. Northcote, 1165 4 F. & F. 658; 142 R. R. 703, Hull v. Governors of Haileybury College, (1887) 4 T. L. R. 623, followed.

The Court, however, should not fail to insist on a close scrutiny of the severity of the chastisement inflicted and its justification. [p. 516, col. 2.]

Rule 59 A of the Madras Educational Rules, 1918, or the similar rule in the Rules of 1901, which refer to cases of moral delinquency and flagrant insubordination should not be construed to prohibit or regulate the petty corrections without which the ordinary discipline of a School cannot be maintained and which, if they are to be effective, must be given immediately. [p. 516, col. 2.]

Where a School Master smacks a pupil on the cheek for making a noise and the smacks cause no injury requiring medical aid or disable the pupil from going home at once, the punishment is such as a parent might expect his child to receive, and is not in excess of the master's legitimate powers of chastisement. [p. 516, col. 2.]

Per Venkatasubba Rao, J.—If the punishment be administered for the gratification of passion or of rage, or if it be immoderate and excessive in its nature or degree or if it be protracted beyond the child's powers of endurance or with an instrument unfitted for the purpose and calculated to produce danger to life or limb, in all such cases the punishment is excessive, the violence is unlawful. [p. 518, col. 2.]

Reg. v. Hopley, (1860) 2 F. & F. 202, followed.

A School Master cannot escape liability merely on the ground that chastisement administered to a pupil has not left any marks of violence or injury on the pupil's body. The question whether the punishment inflicted is moderate and reasonable is one of fact and Courts in this country will certainly discountenance resort by a School Master to barbarous and inhuman forms of correction. [p. 520, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—Personal matters and allegations of ulterior motive have entered unduly into the pleadings in, and conduct of, this case in the lower Court. But the facts and the considerations, with which we are concerned for the purpose of this appeal, can be stated with very little reference to them. The defendant, Principal of what at the date in question was the Victoria College, but is now a Government College, at Palghat, appeals against a decree awarding to plaintiff, a pupil in the High School attached thereto, Rs. 150 as damages for an assault. At the trial two questions were raised on which very little has been said here. For it is not seriously disputed that defendant had on the occasion in question the powers ordinarily exercised by the Headmaster of the School, to inflict corporal punishment or that he is not proved to have done more than he himself admits, given plaintiff "two smacks" with his hand on his cheek. We are asked to hold either that in the circumstances of the case the infliction of this chastisement was within defendant's powers and he is not liable for damages at all or that, if he is so liable, the damages awarded are excessive and also that the award to the plaintiff of half the costs of the suit is unsustainable. The memo. so far as it has been pressed by plaintiff is against the award of damages as inadequate and will be dealt with the appeal.

The circumstances as alleged by plaintiff are that on 15th March 1918, the last day of the current term at the end of the last working period, the students including plaintiff in Form IV demonstrated their satisfaction by clapping their hands in a manner, which we believe to be usual in Indian Schools and which, according to the evidence, was usual at Palghat. The demonstration, however, in the opinion of defendant, who was in the corridor went beyond what was permissible and on going to the class-room he found plaintiff in his place near the door with two other boys shaking a reversible desk, which already, according to the evidence, was in rickety condition. The other two boys ran away, but plaintiff went on shaking the desk, and defendant then inflicted the "two smacks", already referred to, saying "what do you mean? clear out." The account, which we are asked on plaintiff's behalf to accept, is that this violence was used unreasonably to check a mere display of school-boy high spirits, which was sanctioned by custom; and that, if defendant, as he says, before taking action, called to the class "stop that", plaintiff could not and did not hear him. On the last point as on others of detail, clear evidence, on which a distinct conclusion can be reached, is not and is not likely to be forthcoming, since events followed each other quickly and some at least of the witnesses were excited. But there is, on the other hand, clear support for what defendant's account generally entails, that the line between mere exuberance and rowdiness was transgressed and that a substantial breach of discipline was in question.

Defendant, a teacher of twenty-three years' experience, who has reached the head of his profession and to whom nothing resembling malice is now imputed, deposes that there was a tremendous noise due not only to clapping of hands, but also to drumming on the desks, hooting, whistling and shrieking; and the addition of these gave the whole thing the appearance of rowdiness. He was so impressed by this as the climax of other similar incidents that he issued a circular, Exhibit B, to his staff on the subject that afternoon. He is clear that plaintiff was deliberately attempting to damage the desk he was sitting at by shaking it, and the necessity for his at once stopping an act of thoughtless mischief to school property is easily intelligible. For his evidence corroborated by that of the Headmaster, I. O. W., who saw the desk shortly after, is that one screw belonging to it at least was wanting and one was without a nut; and such shaking would presumably loosen its parts still further. Two to five defendant's witnesses, other masters in classes adjacent to plaintiff's speak to an exceptional uproar there, the former referring to shouting, shrieking and whistling. Plaintiff is, as his statements regarding other occurrences show, an untrustworthy witness. The evidence of six and seven plaintiff's witnesses, his classmates is not of value, if only because one of them is closely connected with the prime mover against defendant in the disputes, which have recently occurred over the management of the College, and the other is plaintiff's relative. The other persons referred to in the plaint as having been present, were not named or called. Third witness for plaintiff is the Master, who was taking the class at the time. He says that the noise, consisting in slapping was not exceptional. But he left the room, apparently while it was in progress, and was, he admits, reprimanded by defendant for allowing it; he was on probation and his services were terminated by defendant; in the circumstances no weight can be given to his statements. The evidence standing thus, the conclusion must be that defendant's case is substantially correct and that there was a breach of discipline, which deserved and which it was his duty to repress by punishment. If any answer is needed to the contention which found favour with the lower Court, that plaintiff should not have been made to suffer for a disturbance, to which he is not proved to have actually contributed, there is the fact spoken to by defendant alone, but which there is no good reason for doubting, that he was shaking the desk and was, therefore, joining in the rowdy demonstration which was going on.

There is, so far as we have been shown, no Indian authority as to the amount or nature of physical force which a School Master in inflicting punishment is entitled to use. But there is, subject to one reservation to be referred to later, no dispute that the general rule laid down by the English Courts Reg. v. Hopley (1), Fitzgerald v Northcote (2) and other more recent cases including Hutt v. Governors of Haileybury College (3) must be applied, that the Master as the delegate of the parent may for the purpose of correction inflict moderate and reasonable corporal punishment. Care may, no doubt, be necessary in the application of this general principle in this country, in which this delegated authority must be exercised by persons so dissimilar in status as a pial School Master and the defendant; and Courts will, no doubt, not fail to insist on a close scrutiny of the severity of the chastisement inflicted and its justification. But in the present case there is no difficulty. For the "two smacks" which alone have been established were probably the minimum, which a boy, like plaintiff, aged fourteen would have felt. They caused no injury requiring medical attention or even which made plaintiff cry out or disabled him from going home at once. The references by his father, 5th witness for plaintiff, to his illness for three days after the occurrence and his subsequent attack of fever and small-pox are grotesque. The real reason why importance was attached to what happened is no doubt that given by 9th witness for plaintiff, that "it was a case of Brahmin being beaten by a Thiyya and it would have been different, if the man who beat was a Brahmin." It is impossible to find, with reference to general principle, and we understand that, if general principle alone had been in question, the lower Court would not have found that defendant exceeded his powers.

Reliance, however, has been placed by plaintiff and the lower Court has based its decision mainly on Rule 59 of the Madras Educational Rules, 1918, or the similar rule in the Rules of 1901, which was actually in force at the date in question. These rules embody notifications approved by Government and are, it is not disputed, binding on institutions, such as the Palghat College which receives Government aid. Rule 59A provides that corporal punishment shall not be inflicted except in a case of a moral delinquency or flagrant insubordination and shall be limited to six cuts on the hand, to be administered only in accordance with a specified procedure, with the details of which we are not concerned. This rule resembled closely the Regulation considered in Mansell v. Griffin (4) although the question there was not only of the character of the punishment authorized but also and principally of the right of an Assistant Mistress to inflict it instead of the Head-Master in the Regulation. On that point, in the words of Phillimore, J., if the Regulations were "known to the parents, this would, no doubt, give rise to a strong argument to show that the parent had only delegated to the under-teacher that authority which the rules of the School give." A similar argument was in fact relied on in this case at the trial, but not here; and it was rejected by the lower Court for the sufficient reasons that the Rule was never pleaded, that plaintiff's guardian was not proved to have known of or acted on it and that as it could not at any time have been altered or cancelled by Government, it cannot create between parent or student and the master any direct obligation. The rule was, however, also relied on by the lower Court and is relied on here as evidence of the kind and quantity of corporal punishment, which is sanctioned in such a School by custom and professional opinion and which, therefore, the Court should regard as reasonable.

It may at once be observed that acceptance of this argument will be of no material assistance to plaintiff. For if his complaint is only that he received "two smacks" on his cheek instead of the minimum permitted by the rule, a cut with a cane on his hand, there can, with all respect for the opinion of his learned Vakil to the contrary, be no difficulty in comparing the relative severity of these punishments; and, his sole grievance consisting of the informality of the procedure employed, although the pain inflicted was less, an award of only nominal damages will be entailed. But in fact Rule 59A is not applicable at all, as either prohibiting or regulating the petty corrections, such as that now in question without which the ordinary discipline of a School cannot be maintained and which must be given immediately, if they are to be effective, this appearing from the references in it to moral delinquency and flagrant insubordination and the specific instances given of the former. In Mansell v. Griffin (4) although (as already stated) the question was primarily of the person who had authority to punish, the similar Regulation then in question was read as not exhaustive of the occasions on which corporal punishment could be employed or the methods of its employment, other methods consisting in interference with the liberty of the subject being specified as legitimate in less serious cases and the principle applicable to infliction of blows being referred to as the same. There the findings with reference to the Regulation were, as they would have to be here, if only the rule were in question, that the method of chastisement was improper although the chastisement actually inflicted was moderate and not so hurtful as that authorized, and that the defendant exceeded her authority. Yet it was held that those findings were not inconsistent with a refusal of damages and that notwithstanding the Regulation it was enough for the teacher to be able to say: "The punishment inflicted was moderate and it was such as is usual in the School and such as the parent might expect that the child would receive if it did wrong."

That, and not anything included in the rule, being the test to be applied to the Master's action, it is sufficient for the present purpose that, although actual instances of these petty chastisements must from the nature of the case be few and evidence regarding them difficult to obtain, since neither students nor Masters will be willing to admit that recourse to them was ever necessary, there is clear evidence that such recourse has on occasions taken place at Palghat and is not regarded as improper by persons in plaintiff's social position. Thus it is important that 8th and 9th witnesses for plaintiff, his castemen, admitted having been beaten for petty faults by their teachers without suffering in reputation, the latter, as already stated, distinguishing plaintiff's case with reference to the caste of defendant: and defendant speaks to having given blows on boys' cheeks himself on other occasions and he and I. C. W. to a former Principal of the College having done so. There is accordingly enough to show, what common knowledge would support, that the punishment plaintiff complains of was such as a parent might expect his child to receive. The conclusion must be that defendant was entitled to inflict it and is not liable because he did so.

It is only necessary to add that in any event it would have been impossible to sustain the lower Court's use of its discretion to award to plaintiff half the costs of the suit. For, whilst it recognised that the allegations of fact were greatly exaggerated and that a decree could be given for only Rs. 150 out of Rs. 5,250 claimed, it lost sight of the fact that the claim at the latter figure was inflated to an extent, which neither the desire to obtain a right of appeal on the facts to this Court nor the caste prejudice already referred to could excuse. The reason given for imposing liability for half the costs on defendant, that he failed in one line of defense on Issue IV, although he succeeded on another, is unconvincing; and we cannot subscribe generally or without reference to the conduct of the parties to the principle which the lower Court professes that an award of costs on the amount disallowed should not be given, if the result is "to sweep away" the whole damages decreed.

The appeal is allowed, the suit being dismissed with costs throughout; the memorandum of objections is dismissed with costs.

VENKATASUBBA RAO, J.—This appeal raises three questions:—

(1) What is the extent of the right possessed by a School Master to inflict punishment on his pupil?

(2) Is the punishment actually inflicted by the defendant upon the plaintiff justified?

(3) If the punishment is not justified or has been exercised unreasonably, to what damages is the plaintiff entitled?

According to the law of England the authority of the School Master is, while it exists, the same as that of the parent. It is stated that the parental authority is delegated to the School Master and that the School Master represents the parent for purposes of correction. This proposition is borne out by ample authority. See Reg. v. Hooley (1) Fitzgerald v. Northcote (2), Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. XXVII, page 876, Vol. XII, page 124 and Vol. XVII, page 107.

The power of the English father over his children was never so wide as that of the Roman father. Under the ancient Roman Law the father had the power of life and death over his children. But this doctrine of parental authority was gradually relaxed though it was never under the Roman Law wholly abandoned. The Common Law, however, gives the parent only a moderate degree of authority over his child's person and the parental chastisement must be moderate and must be exercised in a reasonable manner, and if the parent exceeds the bounds of moderation and inflicts cruel and merciless punishment he is liable to be punished. See Schouler's Domestic Relations, 5th Edition, section 244, and Eversley, the Law of Domestic Relations, 3rd Edition, pages 509 and 510.

It follows, therefore, that for the purposes of correction the School Master may inflict a moderate and reasonable corporal punishment. Cockburn, C. J., says in Reg. v. Hooley (1) above referred to, "if it be administered for the gratification of passion or of rage, or if it be immoderate and excessive in its nature or degree or if it be protracted beyond the child's powers of endurance or with an instrument unfitted for the purpose and calculated to produce danger to life or limb, in all such cases the punishment is excessive, the violence is unlawful."

With reference to these principles I shall proceed to examine whether in this case the defendant exceeded the bounds of moderation in inflicting punishment upon the plaintiff. The Subordinate Judge has found that the plaintiff's version of the injury inflicted upon him is grossly exaggerated and that the defendant gave the plaintiff two smacks on his cheek. The defendant's justification is founded upon a breach of the discipline of the School and I am prepared to accept the defendant's account of the incident. According to him on the day in question he heard a loud noise coming from the long Hall of the School and on turning to go over to the long Hall he found the teacher of the Fourth Form A coming towards him. The defendant asked him whether that noise came from his class and rebuked the teacher for having come away without checking the boys. Then he went over to the Fourth Form A class, asked the boys who had gone out into the verandah to go back into their class and the defendant told them that what they did was rowdyism and that they ought not to repeat it. Then he found that there was a light clapping of hands in Form (V) B. He did not mind it. He objected to rowdyism but not to merry-making. Then immediately after there was a tremendous sound from Form IV (B) due to clapping of hands "drumming on the desk", hooting, whistling, shrieking. He paused for about a minute and then went over to the room of IV (B). Plaintiff and two other boys were seen shaking a reversible desk. But the other two boys ran away and the plaintiff looking at him continued the shaking of the desk. This is in effect the evidence of the defendant and he deposes that the plaintiff behaved like a rowdy by shaking the desk and that the defendant apprehended damage to the desk which by the way was already in a damaged condition. The Head-Master was examined as a Court witness and he states that about an hour after this incident the defendant told him that in IV (B) class there was a good deal of rowdiness characterised by shrieking, hooting, whistling and a shaking of the desk and that the plaintiff was seen by the defendant in the act of shaking the desk and raising it up and down and thus creating a great deal of noise, and that the defendant thereupon gave him two smacks on the cheek.

Though the plaintiff did not admit that he shook the desk and stated that he merely clapped his hands, the 7th witness examined on the plaintiff's side, a classmate of the plaintiff, admitted that the boys clapped their hands and "drummed on the desk" and that the plaintiff also along with the rest of the class did both these acts; and the 6th witness for the plaintiff, another classmate of his, also admitted that on that date there was extra noise. The version of the defendant is also borne out by the probabilities of the case. He says that on the 14th March 1918, i.e., the day previous to the occurrence in question, he asked the Head-Master to check the beginnings of the disorder of the kind mentioned above, that the Head-Master in obedience to his order went on the 14th to the classes concerned and spoke to the boys and that on the 15th after the incident he issued a Circular which is filed and marked as Exhibit B in the case. The Circular states that the defendant had been noticing during the two days, the 14th and 15th, "the most perfect rowdiness prevailing in class rooms at the end of certain lessons.....clapping of hands, whistling, shrieking, etc., which no Master who has any idea of discipline would tolerate."

In these circumstances was the defendant justified in giving two smacks on the cheek of the plaintiff? I have carefully examined the evidence and I find that it is nowhere stated that the plaintiff suffered undue pain or any injury on account of this beating. No doubt the plaintiff stated that in addition to the smacking on the cheek the defendant assaulted him brutally and that as a result of the merciless and cruel assault the plaintiff suffered bodily pain. When the defendant filed his written statement, the plaintiff knew that the defendant admitted that he had given only two smacks on the cheek but that he had denied the rest of the assault. It is significant that no attempt was made to elicit from the plaintiff the extent of the suffering he underwent on account of the punishment which the defendant admitted he had inflicted upon the plaintiff. It is also noticeable that the defendant himself was not cross examined as regards the nature of the smacking with a view to establish that it was excessive or violent. The defendant says that he considered it quite a trifling matter and that in the circumstances he felt he was justified in inflicting these two smacks.

I find it, therefore, difficult to hold that the defendant exceeded the bounds of moderation or that the punishment inflicted by him was unreasonable. Mr. Krishnaswamy Iyer, who appeared for the plaintiff, stated that he would not contend that rule 59A of the Madras Educational Rules is binding upon the defendant. Rule 59A runs as follows:—"Corporal punishment shall not be inflicted in Schools except in a case of moral delinquency such as deliberate lying, obscenity of word or act or flagrant insubordination and then it shall be limited to six cuts on hand and be administered only by or under the supervision of the Head-Master. The Head-Master shall record in a register every case in which corporal punishment has been inflicted specifying the name, class and age of the pupil, the date, nature of the offense and the amount of punishment." The learned Vakil admitted that the relations of the plaintiff and the defendant would be governed by the rules of the Common Law and that the defendant as Principal, had power to inflict corporal punishment, and that the only question was whether the punishment inflicted was reasonable and moderate. It is, therefore, not necessary to discuss the binding nature of Madras Educational Rules or the reasonableness of the punishment with reference to the said rules. He, however, argued that the rule 59A is indicative of what is reasonable punishment. I am clearly of the opinion that this contention is untenable. As a matter of fact, the rules are silent as regards the punishment to be inflicted in cases of offences other than the offences dealt with under the rule. Does it follow then that in cases not covered by this rule corporal punishment cannot be inflicted at all? Or if it can be, the Master is always bound to strike the pupil on the hand? If this argument is sound the School Master would not be justified in inflicting any corporal punishment whatsoever, however light it may be, unless the corporal punishment consists of strokes on the hand. It may well be that in the School Master's opinion the caning of the pupil in the hand is too severe a punishment for the offense of which the pupil is guilty; but if the doctrine contended for is correct, the School Master will be bound never to depart from this form of punishment. Cases also may be conceived where caning a pupil by striking him on the hand would not be proper or desirable as where the pupil may be suffering from some disease or infirmity in the hand or for some other similar reason the pupil is unable to stand such punishment. In Manuel v. Griffin (4) Phillimore, J., makes the following observations: "It is, I suppose, false imprisonment to keep a child locked up in a class room or even to order it to stop under penalties in a room for a longer period than the ordinary School time without lawful authority. Could it be said that a teacher who kept a child back during play hours to learn over and say his lesson again or who directed a child to stand up and kept him standing perhaps for an hour, subjecting him thus to fatigue and to the derision of all his classmates or who put upon him a dunce's cap as was frequently done in earlier days in the case of stupid or backward children—could it be that such a teacher would be liable in an action for trespass to the person? The cases I have instanced are not cases of the infliction of blows, but they are cases of interference with the liberty of the subject, and it seems to me that the principle must be the same for all these cases."

I may observe that the School Master cannot escape liability merely on the ground that the chastisement administered to the pupil has not left on the pupil's body any marks of violence or injury. Cases are not uncommon in this country of punishments of extremely grotesque character being inflicted involving danger to life or limb of the pupil or resulting in a state of prostration on the part of the pupil and the Courts will certainly discountenance resort by the School Master to such barbarous and inhuman forms of corrections. The question whether the punishment inflicted is moderate and reasonable is a question of fact but the Courts will consider, in the words of Cockburn, C. J., already referred to, whether the punishment administered was immoderate and excessive in its nature or degree and I may add that if it was immoderate and excessive either in its nature or degree the punishment ceases to be reasonable. Mr. Eversley in 'Law of Domestic Relations' says that the right of the parent of chastisement is jealously watched by the Courts and if the parent exceeds the bounds of moderation and inflicts cruel punishment upon the child he may be severely punished. I may observe that if this is true in the case of a parent it is much more necessary that in the case of a School Master this right should be closely watched by the Courts.

In Fitzgerald v. Northcole (2) cited above, Cockburn, C. J., while stating that, on the one hand, it is for the general benefit of the society and of its youth that the authority of those charged with the care of scholastic establishment should be maintained, observed: "on the other hand, it is of equal importance that it should not be exercised arbitrarily."

I have considered the circumstances that led to the administering of the correction in this case and the evidence relating to the nature and degree of the punishment inflicted and I am of opinion that the punishment was neither immoderate nor unreasonable. The plaintiff had admitted that the Principal bore no ill-will or malice towards him but, on the other hand, had given the plaintiff good advice on previous occasions. To use the words of Cockburn, C. J., again, the punishment was not administered for the gratification of passion or of rage. In these circumstances, I hold that the plaintiff is not entitled to any damages and I agree with the judgment that has been delivered by my learned brother.

In a suit for profits brought by a co-sharer against a lambardar, if no negligence is alleged or proved against the lambardar within the meaning of section 164 (2) of the Agra Tenancy Act, a decree can be given on the actual collection and not on the gross rental [p. 521, col. 2.]

The fact that a large portion of the demand for a certain year remained uncollected does not necessarily lead to the inference that the balance would not be recovered in subsequent years and that the deficit in that particular year was due to the negligence of the Lambardar. JUDGMENT.

RYVES, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by co-sharers against a Lambardar for profits of 1323 Fasli plus arrears of 1321 and 1322 collected in the year 1324. In the plaint there is no allegation whatsoever of negligence against the Lambardar but in the claim at the foot of the plaint the decree sought for is based on the gross rental for 1323 Fasli plus the arrears of 1321 and 1322 collected in the year 1324. The only defence with which we are now concerned is raised in the second paragraph of the written statement and that appears to have been made to meet the claim on the gross rental. It is there stated; "The claim for profits on the basis of gross rental is not correct. It ought to be on the basis of realisation". The Trial Court on these pleadings fixed an issue "should profits be allowed on jama-bandi or collections?". It held that no negligence had been proved against the Lambardar within the meaning of section 164 (2) of the Tenancy Act. It, therefore, decided to give a decree on the actual collection and it found that the plaintiffs' share out of the collection amounted to Rs. 458-12-3 and gave a decree accordingly with interest.

The plaintiffs appealed and there for the first time in the grounds of appeal it was stated that negligence on the part of the defendant-respondent was fully proved from the facts on the record, and that plaintiffs' claim ought to have been decreed with reference to gross rental. We have not been able to understand fully the judgment of the learned District Judge, but we find that he has given the plaintiffs a decree based on gross rental for 1323 and included in it arrears collected in 1323 for the years 1321 and 1322. This he was not entitled to do. The point is completely covered by a ruling of this Bench in Ohhabraji Kuar v. Ganga Singh (1). The plaintiffs can only get a decree for their share on the actual collection unless they can come within section 164 (2), in which case they are entitled to a decree on the gross rental. They are not entitled to a decree on the gross rental of 13.3 plus collections made for arrears of previous years. On the question as to whether the learned Judge was correct in giving a decree based on gross rental, as we have said in the case of Ohhabraji Kuar v. Ganga Singh (1), to which we have already referred, it is a mixed question of law and fact. Assuming that the Court below was entitled to go into the question of negligence, seeing that it had not been raised in the plaint, we have very great doubts as to whether it should have allowed that question to be opened in appeal for the first time. It is true that the issue was fixed in the Trial Court as to whether profits should be allowed on jama-bandi or collections, but that was on the pleadings of the parties and the plaintiffs had not even alleged negligence. Having raised the plea, a decree could only be passed on gross rental if the plaintiffs proved negligence. This the Trial Court held had not been done. The main ground, it seems to us, on which the learned District Judge found that the Lambardar had been guilty of negligence was that whereas the demand for 1323 was Rs. 2,464 odd, the realisations for that year were only Rs. 664-5-3. The learned Judge has omitted to notice that in fact the total collection for that year was much more, namely, Rs. 1,614-10-8. The fact that even a large proportion of the profits of the years of 1323 remained unpaid does not necessarily lead to the inference that the balance would not be recovered in subsequent years, and that the deficit in that particular year was due to the negligence of the Lambardar. Evidence must be given before such an inference can be drawn. In our opinion, therefore, it has not been shown that the Lambardar failed to collect any amount in 1323 owing to his negligence.

(1) 60 Ind. Cas. 643; 43 A. 29; 18 A. L. J. 863; 2 U. P. L. R. (A.) 272.

The result is that we allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and restore that of the First Court with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Messrs. Badr-ul-Din Qureshi, and B. A. Corp., for the Appellants.

Syed Mohsin Shah, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for a declaration to the effect that the deed of compromise executed by defendant No. 1 in case Umar Din v. Mammun on the 5th December 1918 was not binding on the plaintiff. It has been dismissed on a preliminary ground that the plaintiffs have no locus standi to maintain the suit. One of the issues also raised the question whether the plaintiffs had any cause of action on which they could base their claim. In the judgment of the Court below there is an indication that it was inclined to hold against the plaintiff on that issue also, but as the final decision is not based on that point we need not take into consideration the issue raised as to the want of cause of action.

The following pedigree table will make the facts on which the suit is based clear:—

Mauj Din has $2\frac{1}{2}$ squares of land as a tenant of Government. In 1913 he acquired a proprietary right in the land. Out of this he gave $\frac{1}{2}$ square to Umar Din and $\frac{1}{2}$ square to Lahia, his son-in-law. It is stated that Mauj Din adopted Imam Din by a deed of adoption dated the 20th September 1901.

On the 24th July 1916 Mauj Din died. His land was mutated in the name of Imam

MOHAMMAD AHMAD v. ZAHUR AHMAD.

Din on the 28th September 1916. Umar Din brought a suit against Imam Din objecting to the mutation and claimed possession of the land. Musammât Jiwan was also impleaded as a defendant at a later stage. Imam Din, defendant, resisted that suit on the ground that he was entitled to retain possession as the adopted son of Manj Din. On the 5th December 1916 the parties entered into a compromise under which Musammât Jiwan's sons, the present plaintiffs, were given four kilas of land and in lieu of this Umar Din withdrew from the prosecution of the case. Now, the plaintiffs have brought the present suit claiming a declaration that the compromise shall have no effect on their rights to succeed as heirs and reversioners. The suit was resisted by the defendant, Imam Din alias Mamun, and one of the pleas raised was that the plaintiffs had no locus standi to maintain this suit. The Court below has given effect to this plea and has dismissed the suit. Hence this appeal.

The first question to be determined in the case was whether Musammât Jiwan was an heir and was entitled to succeed on the death of Manj Din. That question, however, has been left undetermined. The learned Judge of the Court below has apparently taken it for granted that Musammât Jiwan had a right to succeed, but has held that in order to maintain the suit the plaintiffs were bound to establish that they had the right to control the action of their mother in respect of property inherited by her from her father. It is stated in paragraph 64 of Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law that "except as provided in paragraph 39 or paragraph 62, no female in possession of immovable property acquired from her husband, father, grandfather, son or grandson otherwise than as a free and absolute gift can permanently alienate such property."

If Jiwan was an heir to her father her right in the property left by him was a restricted one, and it is clear that the plaintiffs, who are her sons and heirs, are competent to contest an alienation of the property by her. Cases in which it has been held that the right to control the limited owner's dealings with the property does not follow from the right to succeed as heir are mostly cases in which the person contesting the alienation is a woman, [e.g., Nur-ul-Nissa

v. Gauhar-ul-Nissa (1), Partapi v. Basara Singh (2)] and are quite inapplicable to the case of a son suing to contest an alienation by his mother. The plaintiffs are, therefore, entitled to maintain the suit.

It is contended on behalf of the respondent that Musammât Jiwan, according to the custom governing the parties, was not an heir and that, therefore, the plaintiffs had no right to succeed. The question whether Musammât Jiwan was an heir, as already observed, has not yet been determined.

We accept the appeal and, setting aside the decision of the Court below on the preliminary point stated above, remand the case for a decision on the merits. Costs will abide the result. The Court fees on the memorandum of appeal in this Court shall be refunded.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Res judicata—Compromise decree—Co-defendants—Decree in partition suit.

A compromise decree operates as res judicata unless it is tainted with fraud or was procured by undue influence. [p. 525, col. 1.]

Mohammad Rashmat Ali v. Kaniz Fatma, 27 Ind. Cas. 701; 13 A. L. J. 110, referred to.

A decision as between co-defendants cannot be res judicata unless it was necessary to decide an issue between the co-defendants in order to grant relief to the plaintiff. [p. 525, col. 2.]

In a suit for partition, where the rights of different persons have to be determined, and have been so determined, the decision might operate as res judicata, although the plaintiff in the subsequent suit may have been a defendant in the previous suit.

MOHAMMAD AHMAD v. ZAHUR AHMAD.

But if the plaintiff in the subsequent suit was only one of the several defendants in the previous suit, had no defence to the claim for partition, was not at all concerned with the share which was claimed by the plaintiff in that suit, was made a defendant simply because he was a co-sharer, and the decision in the suit did not affect any question of partition of shares between him and the plaintiff in that suit, a decision between the plaintiff and other defendants in that suit would not have the effect of res judicata as between that defendant and his co-defendants. JUDGMENT.—The question which arises in this appeal is whether the suit of the plaintiff is barred by the rule of res judicata. For the purpose of determining this question it is necessary to state a few facts. One Karimullah died many years ago leaving a widow, Musammât Sabinnissa, a son Nizamuddin and two daughters, Khurshed Jahan and Kaniz Fatma. Disputes arose between the heirs of Karimullah and a suit was brought by Khurshed Jahan, one of the daughters, for her share in the estate of Karimullah. That suit was compromised and a decree was passed on the basis of the compromise in 1868. According to the compromise and the decree, Khurshed Jahan relinquished her claim to the estate left by her father, and as to the property which was found by arbitrators in that case to be the property of her mother, Musammât Sabinnissa, she also relinquished the rights she might acquire in that property upon the death of her mother. This relinquishment was for a consideration. As stated above, the terms of the compromise were embodied in a decree and the decree was passed as between Khurshed Jahan and her sister Kaniz Fatma as also the other heirs of her father. Khurshed Jahan is dead. Nizamuddin executed a sale-deed in favour of three persons, namely, the present plaintiff, Muhammad Ahmad, Muhammad Kasim and Mushtaq Ahmad. Muhammad Kasim having died, his son Hashmat Ali brought a suit in 1912, which was Suit No. 24 of that year, for possession of the property sold to his father by Nizamuddin as also a share of the property which he alleged had been inherited by him from Musammât Khurshed Jahan, who was his wife. In that suit several houses were claimed. The present plaintiff, Muhammad Ahmad, was made a defendant, because he was one of the purchasers under the sale-deed executed by Nizamuddin. The suit was for partition of the share which was claimed by Hashmat Ali and for possession. The case was tried and, in the end, the claim of Hashmat Ali was dismissed in respect of the property purchased from Nizamuddin on the ground that Nizamuddin had previously sold his interest in the property and had, therefore, no rights to convey it to the persons who obtained a sale-deed from him. As regards the property which was claimed by right of inheritance to Khurshed Jahan, the claim was dismissed on the ground that Khurshed Jahan had abandoned her rights in the property and, therefore, none passed to her heirs. Subsequently to the passing of this decree the present suit was instituted by Muhammad Ahmad, and he claimed the share Nizamuddin had sold to him under the sale-deed to which we have referred above, and also a share in the property in dispute which he claimed to have inherited from his mother, Khurshed Jahan. The present suit relates to only one of the houses claimed in the previous suit.

The Court of first instance dismissed the suit on the ground of res judicata. It held that the matter was res judicata by reason of the decision in the suit brought by Hashmat Ali in 1912 and also by reason of the decree which was passed in 1868.

The lower Appellate Court affirmed the decree of the Court of first instance holding that the matter was res judicata in consequence of the decision in the previous suit brought by Hashmat Ali.

This decree of the lower Appellate Court was affirmed by a learned Judge of this Court.

In the appeal before us it is contended that the view of the lower Appellate Court and of the learned Single Judge of this Court that the claim is barred by the rule of res judicata by reason of the decision in the suit of Hashmat Ali, was erroneous and that section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure cannot be held to apply to the present case. For the decision of the question of res judicata we deem it desirable to consider the case from two different aspects. The claim relates to different shares in the house which is the subject-matter of the suit. As regards one share, which is about 1/6th, the claim is based on the sale-deed executed by Nizamuddin. As regards the remainder of the share claimed, the suit of the plaintiff is founded on his right of inheritance as the son of Musammat Khurshed Jahan. As regards the latter claim, that is, the claim based on the right of inheritance to Khurshed Jahan, the Court of first instance, as we have said above, held that by reason of the decision in 1868 the plaintiff had no right and also that the matter was res judicata. We think that this view of the Court of first instance is correct. In the suit which was decided in 1868 a decree was passed against Khurshed Jahan, the effect of which was that Khurshed Jahan was not entitled to any part of the property claimed, whether as heir to her father or as the future heir of her mother. That decree was passed between Khurshed Jahan and Kaniz Fatma and the predecessors-in-title of the other defendants to the present suit. Therefore, unless the decree was tainted with fraud or was procured by undue influence, that decree will be binding on Khurshed Jahan and every person claiming title through her. It was not asserted, nor is it now claimed, that the decree was obtained by fraud or by undue influence. Therefore, the decree is a valid decree which is binding between the parties to the present suit. Furthermore, we have to consider the effect of that decree, and it is urged that the effect of it is that Khurshed Jahan did not lose the right which she might acquire in her mother's property after her death. This question of the right of Khurshed Jahan is concluded by the decision of this Court in the case of Mohammad Hashmat Ali v. Kaniz Fatma (1). In accordance with that ruling Khurshed Jahan had lost all right in the property including the property now in suit, and the plaintiff cannot claim any share in that property as one of the heirs of Khurshed Jahan. This part of the plaintiff's claim has, therefore, been rightly dismissed, though, as we shall show hereafter, the view that the decision in Hashmat Ali's case (1) operates as res judicata is, in our judgment, not correct.

We have now to deal with the remainder of the plaintiff's claim, that is, with that part of the claim which is based on the purchase from Nizamuddin. As to this part of the claim the Courts below have held that inasmuch as Muhammad Ahmad, the present plaintiff, was a party to the suit brought by Hashmat Ali and that suit was dismissed on the ground that Nizamuddin had no title to the property which he sold, the matter has become res judicata. We are unable to agree with this view. The rule of res judicata is laid down in section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Under the provisions of that section an issue which arises in a subsequent suit should not be tried by the Court if the same issue has been tried in a previous suit between the same parties or persons through whom they claim, and this trial has been by a Court competent to try both the suits. Now, in the present suit the matter in issue is whether the plaintiff, Muhammad Ahmad, has acquired by reason of his purchase from Nizamuddin the share which he claims in the house in dispute. In the previous suit this was not the issue before the Court. The issue in that suit was whether Hashmat Ali had acquired the share which he claimed by virtue of the sale-deed executed in his favour by Nizamuddin. The issue, therefore, in the present suit was not identical with the issue which arose in the previous suit and the question of the title of Muhammad Ahmad, the present plaintiff, was never decided in that suit. It is true that he was a defendant to that suit but a decision as between co-defendants cannot be res judicata under the provisions of section 11 unless it was necessary to decide an issue between the co-defendants in order to grant relief to the plaintiff. This has been held in numerous cases to which it is not necessary to refer. As between the present plaintiff and the defendants to this suit, no issue was tried in the previous suit and no issue could be tried for the purpose of determining the question of the title of Hashmat Ali. The present plaintiff does not derive title from Hashmat Ali, and any decision, which was arrived at between the present defendants and Hashmat Ali cannot, therefore, be binding upon the present plaintiff.

(1) 27 Ind. Cas. 701; 13 A. L. J. 110.

JIND KAUR v. INDAR SINGH.

Explanation 4 of section 11 was relied upon in the argument before us but that Explanation does not, in our opinion, afford any help to the respondents. Under that Explanation, a party to a suit, who could and ought to have put forward a claim, or a defence, but does not do so, cannot be allowed to set up the claim or the defence in a subsequent suit. In the suit of Hashmat Ali Muhammad Ahmad was a defendant and he could not put forward his present claim as a defence to the suit of Hashmat Ali. Therefore, in our opinion, Explanation 4 has no application to the present case. It was urged that as the suit of Hashmat Ali was a suit for partition, all parties having an interest in the property were necessary parties to the suit and the title of the defendants, who were co-sharers of the plaintiff, could be determined in that suit. No doubt, in a suit for partition where the rights of different persons interested in the property as co-sharers have to be determined, and have been so determined, the decision might operate as res judicata although the plaintiff in the subsequent suit may have been a defendant in the previous suit. But that was not the case here. In Hashmat Ali's suit no question had to be determined as to the respective rights of Hashmat Ali and Muhammad Ahmad. Muhammad Ahmad had no defence to the claim of Hashmat Ali and he was not at all concerned with the share which was claimed in that suit by Hashmat Ali. The decision in the previous suit did not affect any question of partition of the respective shares of Hashmat Ali and Muhammad Ahmad. In a suit of this nature, in which a co-sharer was made a defendant simply because he had an interest in the property which was claimed, a decision between the plaintiff and other defendants could not be held from any point of view to have the effect of res judicata as between the defendant whose title was not in issue and was never determined in the previous suit. This case very much resembles the case of Komasundara Mudali v. Kulandavelu Pillai (2) which has been cited to us. The ruling in that case fully supports the view which we have expressed above.

The result is that the appeal must be dismissed as regards the share claimed as heir to Musammât Khurshed Jahan. As regards the share claimed by virtue of the purchase from Nizamuddin, the decree of this Court and of the Courts below must be set aside and the case remanded to the Court of first instance with directions to re-admit it under its original number in the register and to dispose of it according to law. In so far as the costs of the litigation relate to the share in regard to which the claim has been dismissed, the plaintiff must bear the costs of the defendants in all Courts proportionately to the portion of the claim dismissed. As regards the remainder of the claim, costs here and hitherto will be costs in the cause.

JIND KAUR v. INDAR SINGH,

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Lahore, dated the 22nd January 1919, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Lahore, dated the 29th October 1918.

Messrs. J. G. Sethi and Dev Raj Sawhney, for the Appellants.

Lala Moti Sagar, B. S., and Sardar Khark Singh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The following pedigree table will help to explain the case:—

On the night of the 6th March 1906 Dyal Singh, his wife and only son were murdered, and for their murder Ram Singh was sentenced to death and Harnam Singh to transportation for life (he is dead), while Sundar Singh was sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment for the offence of concealing evidence of the murder, (he is also dead), Dyal Singh was murdered with the object of securing his property, and after the criminal case had been disposed of by the Chief Court, on the 20th September 1903, mutation of Dyal Singh's lands was entered in the revenue papers on the 17th November 1906 and sanctioned on the 26th June 1907. The Revenue Records show that Kala Singh and

Santa Singh were both present during the mutation proceedings, and that Dyal Singh's lands were mutated as under:—

To Kala Singh	...	$\frac{1}{4}$ th
To Santa Singh	...	$\frac{1}{4}$ h
To Musammat Jind Kaur	...	$\frac{1}{4}$ h; and
To Musammat Ind Kaur	...	$\frac{1}{4}$ ch

Atma Singh had died before Dyal Singh's murder. Indar Singh was expressly excluded on the ground that he was the son of Ram Singh, the murderer of Dyal Singh. Musammat Jind Kaur and Musammat Ind Kaur have ever since been in possession of the lands allotted to them, Santa Singh died without issue and his property was taken by Kala Singh on whose death his widow Musammat Santi succeeded to her husband's estate. On the 3rd January 1918 Indar Singh and Musammat Santi instituted a suit against Musammat Jind Kaur and Ind Kaur claiming possession of the lands held by them belonging to Dyal Singh. It was alleged that the two defendants were not the daughters of Dyal Singh, and that even if they were they had no right to succeed to Dyal Singh's estate in the presence of the plaintiff, Dyal Singh's collaterals, as the land was ancestral and the parties are governed by custom.

The defendants contested the suit on the ground that it was bad for misjoinder of parties and causes of action, and that as Ram Singh, father of Indar Singh, and Kala Singh, husband of Musammat Santi, had murdered Dyal Singh with the sole object of securing his property, the plaintiffs were debarred from making any claim, and that Musammat Santi had no locus standi. The Trial Court held that the property was ancestral and that the defendants were the daughters of Dyal Singh, who had been murdered by Ram Singh and others with the sole object of securing his property but that Kala Singh was not implicated in the crime. The suit was dismissed as it was held that Indar Singh was debarred from claiming the property, he being the son of the murderer of Dyal Singh, and that Musammat Santi could not sue, firstly, because her husband, Kala Singh, had made no claim to succeed, and secondly, that if Musammat Santi were allowed to sue it would be Indar Singh who would ultimately benefit by her success which would result in the stultification of the law which excludes the murderer and his descendants from benefiting by the murder. Their suit having thus been dismissed the plaintiff appealed to the District Judge attacking the findings as to the relationship of the defendants with Dyal Singh and the correctness of the view taken by the Trial Court of the law. The learned District Judge came to no definite finding on the question whether the defendants were the daughters of Dyal Singh but this fact appears to have been accepted as correct. The plaintiffs' suit was decreed, it being held that as Indar Singh had a right to succeed as a reversioner, which right he derived from the common ancestor, Mohan Singh, and not from his father, Ram Singh, he was not excluded by the daughters of Dyal Singh in spite of the fact that he was the son of Dyal Singh's murderer. Quathe case of Musammāt Santi it was held that it stood or fell according to the decision regarding Indar Singh's claim. The learned District Judge appears to have thought that as Kala Singh had made no claim against the daughters of Dyal Singh Musammāt Santi ought not to succeed, but that, as Indar Singh was the only person entitled to dispute her claim, and instead of doing so admitted it, she should be granted a decree. Against this decree Musammāt Jind Kaur and Musammāt Ind Kaur have preferred this second appeal to this Court through Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi and we have heard Mr. Kharak Singh for the respondents.

It has been contended that Indar Singh as a son of the murderer of Dyal Singh cannot be allowed to benefit by the murder committed by his father and is, therefore, debarred from succeeding to the estate of Dyal Singh. This general principle that a son of a murderer cannot be allowed to benefit by the felony committed by his father has been conceded by the learned District Judge, but it has not been given effect to in the present case on the ground that Indar Singh did not derive his title to succeed to the estate of the murdered man from his father but by virtue of his community of descent from Mohan Singh, the common ancestor of himself and the last male owner, namely, Dyal Singh.

In coming to this decision the learned District Judge has apparently departed from the rule laid by a Division Bench of this Court in the case reported as Muhammad Khan v. Sis Bano (1). This decision has not been ignored by the lower Appellate Court which has, however, preferred the principles enunciated in Sadhu Singh v. Secretary of State for India (2). The latter ruling, however, does not appear to have any bearing on the present case. It has to be borne in mind that the succession in this case is to the estate of Dyal Singh, i.e., the murdered man. The decision in Sadhu Singh v. Secretary of State for India (2) related to an entirely different matter. There a certain man had been accused of an attempt to murder and had absconded; proceedings had been taken against him under sections 87 and 89 of the Criminal Procedure Code and his property had been sold by auction, his son sued for a declaration that the sale would not affect his reversionary rights as heir after his father, and the question that was decided by the Full Bench was that all that was sold was the right, title, and interest of the absconder, and that by this sale his son's right of reversion was not taken away. Now, the principle on which Muhammad Khan v. Sis Bano (1), proceeded was that it was against public policy to allow the descendants of a murderer to succeed, not to the murderer's estate but to the estate of the murderer's victim when the said victim had been murdered with the sole object of securing his property. The facts of that case were somewhat similar to those of the present one: a man had been murdered by his paternal uncle with the object of securing his property; the land of the murdered man had been mutated in favour of his sister and the son of the murderer sued for possession on the ground that he was the reversioner; the murderer was still alive and it was conceded at the bar that during his lifetime his son, who was a minor, could not be allowed to take possession, but it was asked that a declaratory decree should be passed to the effect that the said son would be entitled to the property after his father's, the murderer's death. In Shah Khan v. Kalandhar Khan (3), it was held by a Division Bench of the Chief Court that the murderer himself could not succeed to the estate of his victim. There the murderer, who was the plaintiff, had been convicted of the abetment of the murder of his half brother and sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment; the mother of the victim had succeeded to the property; when the convict had served out his sentence he instituted a suit for possession basing his claim on the ground that he was a customary heir. It was held that the plaintiff was disentitled to succeed upon that principle of public policy and justice which demands that no criminal should benefit by the result of his crime, and that it was unnecessary to consider either the Muhammadan or Customary Law on the point. Following this ruling the learned Judges responsible for Muhammad Khan v. Sis Bano (1), held that not only was the murderer excluded from inheritance, but that on the same grounds his descendants were also barred from the succession. It was said that the principle of exclusion applied to all who derived their claim from the criminal and as the plaintiff claimed his inheritance through his father it would be opposed to public policy to allow him to succeed. Reference was made to Kola v. Harnam (4), with approval where it is laid down that in regard to collaterals such heirs take the estate from the soulless owner as his heirs and derive their title to possession of the ancestral estate from him and through him from the common ancestor. It was sought to support the decision of the lower Appellate Court by the contention that the right of a son to succeed collaterally is wholly independent of his father and derived, not from the father but from the common ancestor, and that in the present case Ram Singh being excluded by reason of his being the murderer, the right to succession became vested in Indar Singh. This proposition, however, is entirely opposed to what was held in Muhammad Khan v. Sis Bano (1), for there it was specifically laid down that the fact that the father had committed the crime did not serve to vest the right of succession in the plaintiff. Now, after Dyal Singh's death Ram Singh would have succeeded to his share (whatever that share might have been) but for the fact that as Ram Singh was the murderer he was excluded from the succession. This exclusion, however, did not serve to vest the right of succession in Indar Singh. So long as Ram Singh was alive Indar Singh could not advance any claim and as Ram Singh's exclusion did not vest the right to succession in Indar Singh, Ram Singh's subsequent death (by hanging) did not give Indar Singh any right to succeed. Doubtless Indar Singh does not claim to succeed to his father as his heir, but bases his claim on his relationship to the common ancestor, Mohan Singh. He does, however, claim through Ram Singh inasmuch as it is through Ram Singh that he is related to Mohan Singh and Dyal Singh. This appears to have been the ratio decidendi in Muhammad Khan v. Sis Bano (1) and there seems to be no reason to take a different view. The principle of exclusion merely amounts to this that on the grounds of public policy a person guilty of felony is debarred from inheritance. As was held in Vadanyaga Mudaliar v. Veammal (5), the vesting of the inheritance itself is not intercepted, i.e., the vesting of the succession is not prevented but what was vested in accordance with the law is wrested away on the ground of justice and equity. The murderer's right in such a case is swept away and with it is carried away the right of every one who claims through (and not merely from) him. As Indar Singh derives his right to succeed through, though not from, his father, his right to succeed is taken away by the criminal act of Ram Singh.

JIND KAUR v. INDAR SINGH.

If this were not so the object of this principle of exclusion would be, in many cases, rendered nugatory: an aged father who had a right of reversion to a large estate could murder the holder of that estate and suffer the extreme penalty cheerfully knowing that by his action he had benefited his sons very materially,

QYAMUDDIN KHAN v. RAMYAD SINGH.

Ram Singh was not the source of Indar Singh's right of succession but he was the channel through which this right went to Indar Singh, and when the channel becomes tainted, or blocked, the right to succeed ceases to flow on to the son.

In these circumstances it is not necessary to consider the authorities cited by Mr. Kharak Singh which deal in the main with Hindu Law. As remarked in Shah Khcnam v. Kalandhar Khan (3) the principle is based on public policy and justice, and the Hindu or Customary Law on the point need not be considered. The authorities cited by Mr. Kharak Singh were:

Sori Ram v. Ranhaiya Lal (6), Freemutty Monoharani Debi v. Hirapada Mitter (7), Gongu v. Channerbhagabai (8), Nilmatah Mitra v. Jotindra Nath Mitra (9). Gour's Hindu Code, page 221, and Trevelyan's Hindu Law, pages 357 and 42.

It was also contended that in Sundar v. Salig Ram (10), the view as to collateral succession laid down in Roda v. Harnam (4) had been abrogated. A reference to the authority, however, shows that this is not the case. As has been pointed out above the principles enunciated in Roda v. Harnam (4) were cited with approval in Muhammad Khan v. Sis Bano (1). In Sundar v. Salig Ram (10), the 1895 decision [Roda v. Harnam (4)] is referred to apparently with approval at pages 72 and 73, although at page 74 Rattigen, J., makes certain remarks which would appear to throw some doubt on the subject. It was not held or even explicitly opined that the view taken by the Court in the decision of 1895 case [Roda v. Harnam (4)] was wrong. Muhammad Khan v. Sis Bano (1), appears to be conclusive on the point and should have been followed by the lower Appellate Court. The claim so far as Indar Singh is concerned was, therefore, bad and his suit should have been dismissed. The claim advanced by Kusammal Santi is not on the same footing as that advanced by Indar Singh. She derives her claim from and through her husband who was not guilty of participation in the murder. Her husband, Kala Singh, could have succeeded to all the estate along with Santa Singh. He did not, however, do so but instead stood by and allowed the daughters of Dyal Singh to cust him, and to take possession of the property. Up to the time of his death he never advanced any claim to oust the daughters of Dyal Singh. The Revenue Records show that both Kala Singh and Santa Singh were present during the mutation proceedings. Just as Kala Singh advanced no claim against the daughters of Dyal Singh so did Santa Singh refrain from doing so. Their silence up to their respective deaths appears to indicate that they had acquiesced in the succession of the two daughters, and therefore, Musammal Santi had no right to advance the claim she has made.

The appeal is accepted and the plaintiff's suit dismissed with costs throughout.

QYAMUDDIN KHAN V. RAMYAD SINGH.

In all cases of a batwara partition between co-proprietors, if the lands are merely the bakasht lands of the landlords before the partition, then, in the absence of any special arrangement come to between the landlords themselves at the time of the batwara, none of them has the right to dispute the possession of those into whose takhta the particular lands in question fall. The only exceptions are those which are created by law either under the Bengal Tenancy Act or under some other provision of law whereby a tenancy interest or possibly some other interest in land is acquired. There is no law which provides that merely because a co-sharer has been in possession of bakasht lands, 'belonging to himself and his co-sharers, he is, therefore, entitled after a Collectorate partition to remain in possession of those lands when they are allotted to the takhta of one of his co-sharers. JUDGMENT.

MILLER, O. J.—These are two appeals under the Letters Patent from a decision of Mr. Justice Roze, dated the 27th of October last. There were two cases instituted by two co-sharer landlords claiming in the one case 8 bighas of land and in the other case 2 bighas 5 kathas against the same defendant, who previously had been a co-sharer with the plaintiffs. Both the suits raised exactly the same question for determination; they have been heard together and determined by one judgment.

The plaintiffs and the defendants were co-sharer landlords in Mouzah Silarhi and in April 1918 effected a batwara partition whereby different parcels of the lands in suit fell into the takhtas of the plaintiffs respectively. It appears that before the batwara partition the defendants had been in actual possession of the lands and had been cultivating them and giving a portion of the produce to their co-sharer landlords. After the partition when the plaintiffs sought to get possession they were resisted by the defendants and after certain proceedings under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code the present suits were instituted in October 1918 by the plaintiffs claiming possession of the lands after eviction of the defendants. The case set up by the defendants in their written statement was that the lands in suit were their ancestral kaimi raiyati lands which they acquired before their acquisition of the proprietary interest and, of course, if that case could have been made out, no doubt the defendants would have been entitled to remain in possession as raiya notwithstanding the subsequent partition.

The case made by the plaintiffs was that the lands in question were not the defendants' raiya at all but were the maliks' bakasht lands and that the defendants were in fact in possession before the batwara but were in possession as maliks, and it was not disputed that the distribution of the produce was as stated and as set out in the Record of Rights. A further defence was raised by the defendants to the effect that even if the disputed lands were the maliks' bakasht lands, which they denied, then in that case also they were entitled to remain in possession notwithstanding the partition as there was no law or custom by which the defendants' kasht right in the disputed lands could after the batwara and demarcation of boundaries be extinguished. The Record of Rights described the lands as bakasht of the maliks and in a note in the Survey khatian the manner in which the rent or the produce was distributed was thus stated: "after deducting the raiya half share, from the remainder of the produce is again deducted landlords' share due to the co-sharer in possession and the residue is divided amongst the other maliks according to their shares with an addition of $1\frac{1}{4}$ ears in the maund for cess."

When the case came before the Trial Court the defendants contended that this entry in the Record of Rights was consistent, and consistent only, with a raiya interest in the defendants and they strongly relied upon that entry as supporting their claim which was also evidenced by some oral testimony, and that they had many years ago and before they became proprietors acquired a raiya interest in the land. That contention, however, failed. The learned Munsif came to the conclusion that the defendants had never acquired a raiya interest by purchase or otherwise from any tenant or from any one, and he found that the entry in the Record of Rights was not inconsistent with that which in another part of the record was distinctly stated, namely, that the lands were the bakshi lands of the maliks, and upon the whole of the evidence he arrived at the conclusion of fact upon that issue adverse to the defendants. He further came to the conclusion that as the defendants were neither maliks nor tenants of the pattis in which the disputed lands were situated, they were not entitled to remain in possession. That finding disposed of the point raised as an alternative point by the defendants that having been in possession of lakshi lands they were still after the batwara entitled to remain in possession upon payment of rent to their co-sharers. The case then went on appeal to the Subordinate Judge and he arrived at exactly the same conclusion of fact as that which the Munsif had come to and found that there was absolutely no documentary evidence to prove that the defendants had ever acquired any tenancy right prior to their acquisition of proprietary right in the village and that the oral evidence on their behalf was quite unreliable. Those findings of fact cannot be questioned in second appeal, but when the case came on second appeal to this Court it was contended before the learned Judge that notwithstanding the finding of fact the defendants had, upon the facts found, acquired an interest in the land which was not extinguished by reason of the batwara proceedings. This view of the case appears to have commended itself to the learned Judge because he allowed the appeal and dismissed the suits with costs. He was apparently influenced by the entry in the Record of Rights as to the manner in which the produce had been distributed between the defendants actually occupying the land and their co-sharers. He thought that this fact in itself negatived the suggestion that the lands were part of the zerait lands of all the proprietors held for the purpose of convenience by those particular proprietors, the defendants. If the learned Judge meant by that passage that the plaintiffs were contending that these were zerait lands and, therefore, that no rights of occupancy could be acquired in them, the learned Judge had not appreciated what the real issues in the case were. I think, however, it is only fair to the learned Judge to say that in using the words zerait lands there, he was not using the term in the technical sense in which it is used in the Bengal Tenancy Act. He probably meant to use the expression merely to indicate lands in the direct possession of the maliks such as bakshi lands. However that may be, the conclusion he arrived at was that the plaintiffs even after the batwara could only become entitled to cultivating possession of the disputed lands as a result of partition if the right to cultivate itself was in hotchpot when the partition was made. It seems to me, with great respect to the learned Judge, that in expressing the matter as I have just stated he was somewhat misplacing the onus. Unless the plaintiffs had acquired some right in the lands known to the law, some tenancy right or some right recognised by the law as creating an interest therein other than the proprietary interest, the result of the partition would inevitably be that the co-sharers to whose takhta the land was allotted would get possession of the land, and direct possession, unless there was some tenant already on the land. It was not necessary to prove affirmatively that it was the intention in the batwara proceedings that this land should be given into the direct cultivating possession of the landlords. It must be presumed that the right to cultivate was considered by the landlords at the time of the partition to have been as the learned Judge described it, itself in hotchpot. Apart altogether from any intention, it seems to me that it was in hotchpot and that the onus was upon the defendant to prove by some arrangement or by some agreement between the proprietors when the batwara partition was effected that the right actually to cultivate was not in hotchpot. Two cases, however, have been relied upon by the learned Government Pleader on behalf of the respondents which he says support his contention. The first of those was Second Appeal No. 82 of 1921, [Basudeo Narain v. Radha Kishun (1)], to the judgment in which my learned brother was a party, in which it was decided that a co-sharer who acquires an occupancy holding during the continuance of the joint estate of himself and his co-sharers does not lose his aiyati right by reason of a batwara partition. That decision, however, may be justified under section 22, sub-section (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. This case set up in the present appeal is admittedly not a case coming under section 22, sub-section (2) of that Act. It is not contended that the defendants acquired any occupancy right during the period that they were co-sharers with the plaintiffs. The other case is a decision of similar import. It is Letters Patent Appeal No. 117 of 1920. [Nandkishore Singh v. Mathura Sahu (2)]. That was a decision of Jawala Prasad, Acting Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Das, and that again was a case where the right of the defendant was acquired in the circumstances contemplated in section 22, sub-section (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and it is important to observe that in the course of the judgment after pointing out that one of the contentions was that the lands were the bakasht of the proprietors and as such the plaintiffs had no right to the same if they fell into the *part*s of the defendants in the partition proceedings, it is stated: "This would be so if the land was the bakasht of the proprietors prior to the partition," so that so far from this decision being an authority in favour of the respondents it seems to me an authority to the contrary.

The result of my opinion is that in all cases where you have a batwara partition between co-proprietors if the lands are merely the bakasht lands of the landlords before the partition, then, in the absence of any special arrangement come to between the landlords themselves at the time of the batwara, none of them has the right to dispute the possession of those into whose takht the particular lands in question fall. The only exceptions seem to me to be those which are created by law either under the Bengal Tenancy Act or under some other provision of law whereby a tenancy interest or possibly some other interest in land is acquired. But in the present case there is no law that I am aware of which provides that merely because a co-sharer has been in possession of bakasht lands belonging to himself and his co-sharers, he is, therefore, entitled after a Collectorate partition to remain in possession of those lands when they are allotted to the takht of one his co-sharers.

In my opinion these appeals should be allowed with costs, the decision of the (2), 65 Ind. Cas. 586, 8 P. L. T. 18.

The puisne mortgagee should not be allowed to redeem the prior mortgagee, who, having become owner of the equity of redemption, might file a redemption suit the next day and redeem the puisne mortgagee. JUDGMENT.

RYVES, J.—The essential facts so far as they are necessary for the purposes of this appeal can be stated very shortly. The mortgagor, who is no longer interested, by a mortgage by conditional sale dated the 20th of September 1900 mortgaged his zamin-dari share in four villages to the defendants. Subsequently on the 15th of July 1903 he executed a usufructuary mortgage in favour of the plaintiffs of three small plots of sir land for Rs. 99 15-6, and on the 8th of July 1904 he executed two other usufructuary mortgages in favour of the plaintiffs of some other small plots of sir and khud kasht land for Rs. 71 and Rs. 75 respectively. The aggregate area of these plots was a little over 3 bighas, that is something more than an acre. All these plots of land were situated within the boundary of the village of Ukraewan, one of the four villages mortgaged to the defendants. These three usufructuary mortgages were all unregistered. The terms of all of them were similar. The mortgagees undertook to pay the Government revenue, and the profits were set off against the interest. It was agreed that the mortgages could be redeemed at the end of the month of Jeth in any year on payment of the principal money.

In 1907 the defendants brought a suit for foreclosure of the mortgage of 1900 against the mortgagor and obtained a decree which was made absolute in 1903, and thus they obtained eventually possession of the mortgaged property. The plaintiffs, the puisne mortgagees, were not made parties to that suit. Thereafter the defendants sought to eject the plaintiffs, in the Revenue Court, describing them as their tenants. They pleaded that they were usufructuary mortgagees and, on being referred to the Civil Court obtained a decree from the Civil Court declaring them to be usufructuary mortgagees. This was on the 21st of May 1917. On the 6th of August 1918 the plaintiffs served a notice on the defendants of their intention to sue for redemption of the prior mortgage of 1900. On the 30th of August 1918 the defendants deposited in Court under the provisions of section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act the entire amount due to the plaintiffs on the three subsequent usufructuary mortgages, offering to redeem them. The plaintiffs refused to accept the money and on the 10th of September 1918 filed this suit praying to be allowed to redeem the prior mortgage of 1900 on payment of "the amount which the Court considers genuine and valid" and that "they may be put in possession of the property comprised in the prior mortgage together with the sir land appertaining thereto." The defendants contested the suit on three grounds. The first two need not be considered. The third ground taken was: "to avoid future dispute and to put a stop to the litigation, they (the defendants) had deposited the whole amount due to the puisne mortgagees on their mortgages and asked them to give up possession and that although they had refused this offer, they were still willing to pay them everything due under their mortgages." On these pleadings the Trial Court framed, among other issues, Issue No. 6: "Have defendants got a right to redeem the mortgages in favour of the plaintiffs? Have defendants been ready to pay the mortgage money due to plaintiffs? If so, how does it affect the claim?" On this issue, the only one with which we are concerned, it held: "defendants appear to have deposited the mortgage-money due to the plaintiffs in Court under section 83 of Act IV of 1882, and they claim that they have got a preferential right of redemption. This view though countenanced by the Bombay High Court is opposed to the views of the other High Courts (vide Gour's Transfer of Property Act, page 1180—1V 1st edition of 1915 and the rulings cited on that page). The learned author observes: 'If the Bombay view be correct, the prior mortgagee would steal a march over the subsequent mortgagee by keeping him ignorant of the suit in which he acquires the mortgagor's interest.'" It went on to find that inasmuch as the plaintiffs had not been made parties in the foreclosure suit, the plaintiffs had a preferential right to redeem; and it gave them a decree for redemption on payment, not of the amount claimed by the plaintiffs, namely Rs. 3,222-12-0, but of Rs. 4,429-6-0 which included a sum of Rs. 1,400 which the defendants had to pay in their suit to redeem a still earlier mortgage. The defendants appealed and in paragraph 4 of their memorandum of appeal put their case in the following words:—"Legally the appellants as representatives of the mortgagor and also as prior mortgagees have a right to redeem the mortgages in favour of the plaintiffs. The appellants with a view to do away with future disputes, have already deposited, under section 83 of Act IV of 1882, the mortgage consideration due to the plaintiffs in a competent Court, but they, as a precautionary measure, instituted this suit. Having regard to the entire circumstances the defendants' prayer as to the redemption of the plaintiffs' mortgages was fit to be allowed and in this case a decree for redemption in favour of the defendants should have been prepared. Such a decree is not prejudicial to the plaintiffs, and the one for redemption, passed by the Court is materially injurious to the defendants' right." The learned Judge of the Court below sets out as one of the two points for his decision, as follows, "that the defendants appellants who were once prior mortgagees were now the owners of the equity of redemption and were, therefore, entitled to redeem the plaintiffs' mortgages." Unfortunately, as it seems to me, when he comes to discuss this proposition in his judgment he changes the phraseology of the issue as he had originally expressed it and asked himself, "the second point for decision is whether the subsequent mortgagees have a preferential right of redemption over a prior mortgagee who has obtained a decree for foreclosure," and he then goes on to hold that the plaintiffs, not having been made parties in the former foreclosure suit, cannot in any way be affected by what happened in that suit, and finally, after discussing some rulings, to which I shall refer later, accepted the dictum of Dr. Gour already quoted and dismissed the appeal. The defendants come here in second appeal and their first ground is that the learned District Judge has overlooked the fact that although the subsequent mortgagees are entitled to redeem the prior mortgage, the prior mortgagees who have already acquired the mortgagor's right by foreclosure, can after such redemption claim redemption of the subsequent mortgage.

It seems to me most unfortunate that the Courts below should have asked themselves which of the parties had "the preferential" right to redeem. It seems to me clear beyond any controversy that both had a right of redemption, - I prefer to regard this litigation as being substantially two cross-suits which might well have been consolidated, as indeed they were for all practical purposes, having regard to the pleadings and Issue No. 6 framed by the Trial Court and reiterated in the Appellate Court and tried out in both Courts. I think paragraph 21 of the written statement already quoted may be regarded as substantially a plaint in such a cross suit. I think this litigation really involves two suits, (1) by a puisne mortgagee to redeem a prior mortgagee who had not made him a party in his suit on his own mortgage, and (2) by a person who had become the owner of the mortgaged property, and who had acquired the equity of redemption and, therefore, stands in the shoes of the mortgagor, to redeem an encumbrance. It seems to me that both are, prima facie, entitled to what they claim and the question for the Court under such circumstances when all the parties were before it and all the necessary evidence was on the record was to decide one and for all, having regard to the equities of the parties and to prevent further litigation, what the justice of the case demanded. In this view, what I think we have to look at in this appeal, is not whether the decisions of the Courts below were legally correct but whether we should now do what I think the Courts below should have done. Look at the consequences. If we uphold this decree the plaintiffs pay the decretal amount to the defendants, and the next day the defendants will inevitably file their suit to redeem the plaintiffs and so recover the property. All that the plaintiffs are entitled to is to get back their mortgage money. After all they are merely mortgagees and as such are liable to be redeemed by the owner of the property, that is the mortgagor or whoever represents him. In this case the prior mortgagees, the defendants, having acquired the equity of redemption, stand in the shoes of the mortgagor and are the owners of the property. I should be content to stop here and base my decision on what seems to me to be required by the equities of the case. But, as it has been very ably argued, on behalf of the respondents, that the decisions of the various Courts except the Bombay decision are opposed to my view, I think I should consider those authorities. The Bombay case, namely, Harsanbhai

v. Umaji (1), it is conceded, is an authority in favour of the appellants, but it is argued that the facts there were different; that the decision itself is unreasonable and that it has not been followed by other Courts. In the Bombay case the mortgagor brought a suit to redeem the prior mortgage and got a decree but failed to pay the decretal amount within the time ordered and consequently the mortgage was foreclosed. Then the subsequent mortgagee brought a suit for sale on his mortgage, thereby it is said offering the prior mortgagee the option of redeeming him. Although the facts are different, I do not think the principle of law involved is substantially different. Next, it is said that the decision of the Bombay Court is unreasonable, because if the puisne mortgagees had been made parties in the former suit, as they should have been made, they would have had an undoubted right to redeem the prior mortgage; and it is said the prior mortgagee must not be allowed to take advantage of his own fault by depriving the subsequent mortgagees of their right to redeem the prior mortgage. This, I think puts, Dr. Gour's dictum, already quoted, in other words. Although it has been held that a subsequent mortgagee who should have been made a party to a suit on a prior mortgage but had not been made a party, cannot in any way be affected by the decree in that suit, and cannot be put in a worse position than he would have been in if he had been made a party, on the other hand, it seems to me; he cannot be put in a better position than he would have been in if represented then. If he had been made a party to the former suit, no doubt he could have redeemed the prior mortgage, but he would not thereby have obtained possession of the property. What he now claims is, that, not having been made a party to the former suit, that decree must be considered a nullity, and that he is now entitled on redeeming the prior mortgage to become the owner of the whole property originally mortgaged. This manifestly he cannot do. The result of the former suit undoubtedly was to vest the ownership of the property in the defendants and as such they must have a right to redeem the plaintiffs. The last argument is that the other High Courts have not followed the Bombay decision. It seems to me that this argument is based on the headnote to the Bombay case which is very misleading. According to that it was "Held, reversing the decree, that, H, the prior mortgagee, had a right to redeem superior to that of U, the subsequent mortgagee." Put baldly like that, it is most misleading. The High Court never held anything of the kind. What they did hold was as reported on page 160: "Looking to the substance and not to the form of the suit the plaintiff was clearly seeking relief on the basis of the right of a mortgagee. When the pleadings were complete it appeared that his mortgage was subsequent in date to that which Hassan had taken of the same lands and had foreclosed. The contest thus became one between, on the one hand, a prior mortgagee in possession, who had obtained a decree absolute for foreclosure, and, on the other hand, a subsequent mortgagee who had not been made a party to the redemption suit in which that final decree for foreclosure was made." Later on it is said: "The next and main point for decision is whether, looking to the equities on both sides, Hassan, the prior mortgagee, who had already obtained a final decree for foreclosure against the mortgagors and was in possession, ought to have been given an opportunity to redeem Umaji, the subsequent mortgagee," and they held that under the circumstances of the case he should be allowed to redeem the subsequent mortgagee. It seems to me, therefore, that the note in Dr. Gour's commentary on page 1130 in my opinion is not quite accurate, where he says: "the right of the prior mortgagee to redeem the subsequent mortgagee on his acquiring the mortgagor's equity of redemption whether by foreclosure or sale in a suit to which the subsequent mortgagee was not a party has been categorically affirmed in Bombay while it has been as categorically denied by the Calcutta and other Courts." The learned Vakil for the respondents has not been able to refer us to a single case in which the Bombay case has been dissented from. That case was published as long ago as 1904, and the cases that have been referred to really have held nothing more than what is quite clear, namely, that a subsequent mortgagee who has not been made a party to a foreclosure decree is not affected by it. The Bombay case, however, has been unreservedly approved of and followed in the case of Kedar Nath v. Saiyad Hafiz Ali (2), decided by a Bench consisting of Messrs. O'Hanlon and Griffin, both of whom were subsequently Judges of this Court. It was followed in the case of Charni v. Raj Bahadar (3) by Mr. Justice Karamat Hussain, and it was referred to by Mr. Justice Piggott in the case of Ram Lari v. Raghunath Singh (4). That was a similar case to this one and Mr. Justice Piggott far from dissenting from the Bombay case decided not to follow it, not apparently because he did not approve of it but because there were no materials on the record on which he could give the prior mortgagee a decree and he, therefore, left the parties to obtain such remedies as they might have in a further suit. I do not think it necessary to refer more specifically to any other of the many decisions which have been brought to our notice, except perhaps the case of Kedar Prosanna Lahiri v. Girindra Prosad Sukul (5). There the contest was between the first mortgagee and the second mortgagee who had both brought suits on their mortgages without making the other a party, and on getting a decree had purchased the mortgaged property, and it was there held that each party was entitled to redeem the other, but the preferable right to redeem was with the plaintiff who in that case was the subsequent mortgagee. The point now before us was not argued or decided and no cases were referred to. As I have already said, the decision of the Courts below in this case was legally right, but I do not think it was the proper decision to give, having regard to all the circumstances of the case and the pleadings of the parties. I would, therefore, allow the appeal, and allow the defendants to redeem the plaintiffs' mortgages, on payment to them the sum due on their mortgages in the next month of Jeth. If they fail to do so I would dismiss the appeal.

GOKUL PRASAD, J.—I agree in the order proposed and in the judgment of my learned brother. I have only to state that the result of our dismissing this appeal and suit would be to prolong this litigation. If the plaintiffs are allowed to redeem the prior mortgage in favour of the defendant who has now acquired the equity of redemption the result would be that the defendant prior mortgagee purchaser will bring a suit to redeem the puisne mortgage in favour of the plaintiffs and would get back the property on payment of the amount due under the plaintiffs' mortgages as also the amount which he has received from the plaintiffs in satisfaction of his prior mortgage or, in other words, the defendant would be placed back in the same position in which he would have been if he had been allowed to redeem the plaintiffs. Besides this, the plaintiffs would be in no better position by redeeming the mortgage in favour of the defendant. They would have after redemption their 3 bighas odd free from the mortgage and would only have a charge on the balance of the mortgaged property for the proportionate amount which they would have had to pay over and above the proportionate share due from their 3 bighas. From this aspect, too, the result of conceding to the plaintiffs' argument would be a suit for contribution by the plaintiffs against the owners of the remaining portion of the mortgaged property. So that in any case the plaintiffs would not benefit from the suit. The decree proposed by my learned brother fully meets the justice of the case and gives effect to the equities between the parties and at the same time prevents useless multiplicity of proceedings. I agree in the order proposed.

By the Court.—The order of the Court is that this appeal is allowed, the defendant being given time to the 9th of June 1922 to redeem the plaintiffs' mortgages on payment of the sum due on their mortgages on that date. In case of their failure to do so, this appeal will stand dismissed. Under the circumstances of this particular case we direct that the parties do bear their own costs of this litigation.

Limitation Act (IX of 1899), Sch. I, Art. 182—Execution—Application for transfer of decree to incompetent Court, whether according to law—Step-in-aid of execution—"Applying in accordance with law," meaning of—Practice—Patna High Court, whether bound to follow Calcutta rulings.

An application for the transfer of a decree for execution to another Court is a step-in-aid of execution, but in order to save limitation such an application must also be in accordance with law within the meaning of clause (v) of Article 182, [p. 538, col. 2.]

An application asking the transfer of a decree to a Court not having pecuniary jurisdiction to try the original suit is not an application in accordance with law and, therefore, cannot save limitation. [p. 540, col. 1.]

Per Jwala Prasad, J.—The term "applying in accordance with law" means applying to the Court to do something in execution which by law that Court is competent to do. It does not mean applying to the Court to do something which either to the decree-holder's direct knowledge in fact or from his presumed knowledge of the law, he must have known the Court was incompetent to do. Per Bucknill, J.—An application for transfer is primarily a step which saves limitation. But the transfer in order to be effective must be one which can be properly made by the transferring Court. If that Court is not competent to make the transfer then there is no step in fact taken recognised by law which can save the commencement of the running of the limitation period [p. 542, col. 2.]

The Patna High Court is not bound to follow slavishly the decisions of the Calcutta High Court or of any other High Court. [p. 542, col. 2.]

Appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Gaya.

Messrs. A. K. Ray, and N. P. Sinha, for the Appellants.

Messrs. S. N. Sinha and N. O. Ghosh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—The only question for determination in this appeal is whether the application of the appellants for execution of their decree filed on the 29th May 1920 is barred by limitation or not.

The solution of the question depends upon whether the application of the decree-holders dated the 24th August 1917 whereby the decree in question was transferred to the Court of the First Mansif for execution was a step-in-aid of execution under Article 182, clause (v) of the Limitation Act.

The decree in question was passed by the Subordinate Judge of the Second Court, Gaya, in a suit the value of which was stated to be Rs. 5,000. The suit was, therefore, beyond the jurisdiction of the Mansif to whom the decree was transferred for execution in pursuance of the application of the decree-holder of the 24th August 1917.

Now, it has been concluded by authorities that an application for the transfer of a decree for execution to another Court is a step-in-aid of execution* but in order to save limitation such an application must also be an application in accordance with law within the meaning of clause (v) of Article 182. If the Mansif to whom the decree was sent for execution was competent to execute it then undoubtedly the application of the decree-holder, dated the 24th August 1917, was in accordance with law and can be taken advantage of by the decree-holder in order to save the present application for execution from being barred by limitation. If, on the other hand, the Mansif had no jurisdiction to execute the decree the Subordinate Judge had no power to transfer the decree to him for execution and, therefore, the application of the 24th August 1917 asked for a relief which the Subordinate Judge was not competent to grant. In that view the application of the 24th August 1917 would not be an application in accordance with law and, therefore, would be of no avail to him.

There has been a sharp division of opinion in the several High Courts in India as to whether a Court not having jurisdiction over an original suit can execute a decree obtained in that suit or not. The Madras High Court as early as in the year 1834 held that it is not necessary that the Executing Court should also have been competent to try the original suit, see Narasayya v. Venkatakrishnayya (1). A note of dissent was struck in the Bombay High Court in the year 1887 in the case of Shri Sidheshwar Panit v. Shri Harihar Panit (2). The matter then came to be dealt with by the Calcutta High Court in 1889 in the case of Govul Kristo Chunder v. Aukhil Chunder Chatterjee (3) where a Division Bench of that Court presided over by Piggot and Beverley, JJ. agreed with the view taken by the Bombay High Court and held that the Court executing the decree should also be a Court competent to try the original suit so far as the pecuniary jurisdiction was concerned. Mr. Justice Muttusami Ayyar who was a party to the decision in Narasayya v. Venkatakrishnayya (1), above quoted, adhered to his view in the case of Shanmugai Tillai v. Ramanathan Chetti (4). In the judgment delivered by him he tried to meet all the objections raised by the Bombay and the Calcutta High Courts to the view expressed by him in the case in Narasayya v. Venkatakrishnayya (1).

The aforesaid decisions relate to a period prior to the present Code of Civil Procedure of 1908, but the law on the subject does not appear to have been materially altered by the present Code. The only alteration is in the power of the Court which passes a decree to transfer suo motu a decree for execution to any Court subordinate to it. In the Code of 1882, section 223, the clause on the point empowered the Court which passed the decree to send it of its own motion for execution to any subordinate Court. The corresponding provision in the Code of 1908, section 39, clause (ii) has added the words "of competent jurisdiction" to the words "Subordinate Court" occurring in the former Code: in other words, under the present law it has been expressly made clear that a Court which passes a decree can send it of its own motion for execution to any Subordinate Court "of competent jurisdiction."

Mr. Atul Krishna Ray submits that the present case is governed by clause (i) of section 39, under which on the application of the decree-holder the Court which passed the decree may send it for execution to another Court in the circumstances and for the reasons set forth in clauses (a) to (d) of the section. He contends that those clauses (a) to (d) do not in any way restrict the transfer of a decree for execution to a Court only of competent jurisdiction. He says that on the application of the decree-holder in this case the Court which passed the decree could send it for execution to any Court whether that Court be of competent jurisdiction or not. Plainly speaking his contention is that there is nothing in section 39 to prevent the Subordinate Judge who passed the decree from sending it for execution to the Court of the Munsif not having the pecuniary jurisdiction to try the suit in which the decree was passed. He also refers to section 6 of the Code of Civil Procedure which runs as follows:—

"Save in so far as is otherwise expressly provided, nothing herein contained shall operate to give any Court jurisdiction over suits, the amount or value of the subject-matter of which exceeds the pecuniary limits (if any) of its ordinary jurisdiction."

The words in this section are virtually the same as in the corresponding section of the old Code. Mr. Ray contends that this section applies only to suits and not to execution proceedings. He has also referred to provisions in the Code relating to the transfer of suits from one Court to another set forth in sections 22 to 24 of the Code and says that the Legislature has expressly made it clear that a suit can only be transferred for trial to a Court of competent jurisdiction. He contends that there is no such provision in section 39 of the Code which relates to the transfer of a decree for execution. He, therefore, says that the Legislature evidently meant that a decree should be sent for execution to any Court where it can with facility be executed by reason either of the property of the judgment-debtor being situate within the jurisdiction of a particular Court or of the judgment-debtor residing therein, regardless of whether that Court had jurisdiction to try the original suit or not and irrespective of whatever pecuniary or territorial jurisdiction of that Court may have been. Mr. Ray says that there can be no doubt that a decree may be sent for execution to a Court which may not be competent to try the original suit; for instance, a decree for money obtained in a Court in Patna on a hand-note or a bond against a defendant residing in Patna may be transferred for execution to a Court in the United Provinces by reason of the property of the judgment-debtor being within the jurisdiction of that Court even though that Court was not competent to try the original suit; inasmuch as neither the cause of action arose in the jurisdiction of that Court nor the defendant resided therein. Mr. Purnendu Narain Sinha, on the other hand, contends that though in the circumstances set forth in the illustration given above, the decree may be executed by a Court not being competent to try the suit, yet a Court in the United Provinces executing the decree should have the pecuniary jurisdiction to try the original suit: in other words, he makes a distinction between a pecuniary and territorial jurisdiction. He says that although for the purpose of execution a Court executing a decree may not have the territorial jurisdiction to try the suit, yet it must have the pecuniary jurisdiction to try it in order to be competent to execute the decree. He has also referred to section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure and has contended generally that the Executing Court may have to decide many questions relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, and those questions might involve disputes of a larger value much beyond the pecuniary limit of the Munsif to try and consequently the Court of the Munsif should not be allowed to execute a decree passed by the Court of the Subordinate Judge. He has also referred to the provisions of appeals, namely, that the decisions of the Munsif are appealable to the District Judge whereas the decisions of the Subordinate Judge may be appealable to the High Court directly and, therefore, he contends that in questions decided by the Munsif in the course of the execution of decrees, appeals might lie to the District Judge whereas they ought to be cognisable by the High Court alone. Mr. Ray has practically adopted the reasons given by the Madras Court and Mr. Purnendu Narain Sinha has adopted, on the other hand, the reasons given by the Calcutta High Court. The question came before the said Courts even after the present Code of Civil Procedure came into operation and both the High Courts have stuck to their own views; vide Ghulan Ghouse v. Sunni Lal (5), Shamsunder Saha v. Anath Bandhu Saha (6), and Abdulla Sahib v. Ahmad Hussain Sahib (7).

It is obvious that the point for determination is somewhat difficult and that equally weighty reasons can be advanced in support of both views. The last ruling of the Calcutta High Court was the case in Shamsunder Saha v. Anath Bandhu Saha (6) above quoted.

In a case of this kind we think that we ought to follow the Calcutta ruling unless we are satisfied that that ruling is decidedly wrong. This principle was laid down as early as in May 1916, shortly after the establishment of the Patna High Court, vide the case of Abdul Gani v. Raja Ram (8) and has ever since then been repeated on various occasions; vide Khair Bukhsh v. Bihadur Ali (9) Kaniz Zohra v. Symeisen [Bomdi Sahu] (10); and Sheobaran Mahto v. Bhogeri (11). There can hardly be any question that up to 1916 before the establishment of this Court the Subordinate Courts in Gaya were governed by the decisions of the Calcutta High Court according to which the Munsif of Gaya was not competent to execute the decree passed on the 23rd March 1907 by the Subordinate Judge of Gaya; in other words, as laid down by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in the case reported as Shamsunder Saha v. Anath Bandhu Saha (6)

(quoted above) at page 577*, the order of the Subordinate Judge transferring the decree for execution to the Court of the Munsif was without jurisdiction. Adopting the principle laid down by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in the aforesaid case we are inclined to agree with the view taken in the Calcutta High Court that the Munsif of Gaya had no jurisdiction to execute the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge of that District. There could not be any question of a bona fide mistake on the part of the decree-holder in the present case. Mr. Ray says that the view taken in the Madras High Court in Abdulla Sahib v. Ahmed Hussain Sahib (7) was believed by his client to be the correct view in preference to the view taken in the Calcutta High Court and, therefore, on the 24th August 1917 just after the constitution of this Court the appellant filed his application for transfer of the decree to the Court of the Munsif. But the appellant must be presumed to have known the Calcutta ruling, and therefore, he had no right to put in his application in direct contravention of the authorities in Calcutta. If once it is held that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to execute the decree, then the application of the decree-holder of the 24th August 1917 praying for the transfer of the decree to the Court of the Munsif for execution was not in accordance with law. It was pertinently pointed out in the case of Ohattar v. Newal Singh (12) that the necessary consequence of adopting a contrary view would be to hold that any application, however, absurd a decree-holder might make to a Court, would be sufficient to render his application one in accordance with law. I think the term "applying in accordance with law" means applying to the Court to do something in execution which by law that Court is competent to do. I do not think that it means applying to the Court to do something which either to the decree-holder's direct knowledge in fact or from his presumed knowledge of the law he must have known the Court was incompetent to do.

As observed above, the decree-holder in this case must be presumed to have had knowledge of the law as laid down by the Calcutta High Court that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to execute the decree in question, and that the Subordinate Judge was not competent to transfer the decree for execution and consequently the application in question of the 24th August 1917 was not in accordance with law. We, therefore, agree with the view taken by the Court below that the application of the 24th August 1917 is of no avail to the decree-holder and consequently the present application for execution filed on the 20th March 1920 and registered on the 14th June 1920 is barred by limitation. The view taken by the Calcutta High Court appears to be correct.

Our attention has been drawn to certain cases in which mistakes or defects either in the application for execution or in the order of the Court have been condoned in favour of a decree-holder, for instance, in the case of Bipin Behari Mitter v. Bibi Zokra (13) an application for execution of a decree made under the influence of a bona fide mistake against a dead person was held to be an application in aid of execution. But there the decree was passed on the 1st April 1903 and the application was made on the 1st March 1906, the judgment-debtor had died on the 25th May 1903 but the decree-holder had not come to know of the death until the 26th April 1906, that is, long after the filing of the application for execution, and soon after he came to know of it he made an application praying for the substitution of the names of the legal representatives of the deceased judgment debtor. That case was decided upon its own merits and until the decree-holder had known of the death of the judgment debtor he had to regard the judgment-debtor on the record as the person against whom the execution could proceed. In the case of Keshwa Surendra Sahi v. Mulakrani Kusr (14) the application was made without having applied for the appointment of a guardian ad litem of the minor judgment-debtor. There the application was made in accordance with law inasmuch as there was no defect in the application and the application for the appointment of the guardian could be made at a later stage during the course of the execution. In the case in Kunjabehari Singh v. Tarapada Mitter (15) the decree was sent for execution direct to a Subordinate Court of another District instead of through the District Court of that District. The mistake was of the Court and not of the decree holder. Therefore, it was held that the decree holder could not suffer on account of the mistake of the Court inasmuch as his application for the transfer of the decree was in accordance with law without any defect whatsoever.

In conclusion, we direct that this appeal be dismissed but in the circumstances we make no order as to costs.

BUCKILL, J.—This was an appeal from a decision of the District Judge of Gaya, dated the 18th July 1921, affirming an order of the Subordinate Judge of the same place dated the 15th of November in the previous year. The circumstances under which the appeal came before this Bench are very simple but they raise a question to which the answer is not very easy.

The plaintiff obtained three decrees against the defendants in a suit No. 161 of 1905 which was brought before the Subordinate Judge of Gaya. One of these decrees appears to have been for possession of certain properties, a second for costs and the third for mesne profits. It is admitted that the value of the subject-matter of the suit was outside the jurisdiction of any Munsif of the District. Various attempts seem to have been made by the decree-holders, most of them apparently very half hearted, to execute their decree, but for various apparent and non apparent reasons into which it is not necessary to go here no execution appears to have been really effective and the last execution application made before the Subordinate Judge was dismissed on the 25th July 1916. On the 24th August 1917 the plaintiff applied to the Subordinate Judge and obtained a transfer of the execution of the decrees to the Court of the First Munsif of Gaya. It seems to have been registered there on the 1st September 1917 and was dismissed, I do not know why, on the 20th September of the same year. After that came the present application to the Subordinate Judge for execution filed on the 29th May 1920. Now, the respondents here contend that the last execution proceedings in the Subordinate Judge's Court having been dismissed on the 25th July 1916 and the present application having been filed on the 29th May 1920 the application is barred by the three years' rule of limitation. On the other hand the appellants maintain that the application for transfer which was made by them on the 24th August 1917 was a definite step in the execution proceedings which has kept their rights alive and which prevents the operation against them of the limitation of three years running as from the 25th July 1916. It is common ground that an application for transfer is primarily a step which saves limitation. For that proposition there is ample authority but it is urged that the transfer in order to be effective in that direction must be one which can be properly made, and that if it was not competent for the Subordinate Judge to have made such a transfer order, then there was no step in fact taken recognised by law which would in any way save the commencement of the running of the limitation period nor is this proposition in itself seriously contested. What, however, is the real point is as to whether in this case the Subordinate Judge could legally make the order such as he did, that is, transferring to the Munsif for execution a decree concerning a subject matter greater in value than the Munsif had power to deal with in a suit. The authorities are in direct conflict on this question. The Madras High Court has consistently held that a Munsif has jurisdiction to execute a decree relating to subject matter of greater value than that which he had power to deal with in a suit; the Calcutta High Court has always been of the contrary opinion. I am not prepared to subscribe altogether to the view that this Court must slavishly follow the decisions of the Calcutta High Court or of any other High Court, but after having listened to the arguments in this case very carefully and having read all the cases quoted in these proceedings, I have come to the conclusion that the Calcutta rulings are correct. I therefore agree with my learned colleague that this appeal should be dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 57, 58, 61—Execution of decree—Attachment—Claim proceedings—Execution dismissed—Order in claim proceedings—Title suit—Limitation.

Plaintiffs who had obtained a decree against a certain firm attached certain houses in execution of the decree. Objections to the attachment of one of these houses were filed under Order XXI, rule 58, Civil Procedure Code. Some evidence was taken in support of the objection and proceedings were then adjourned to 1st February 1914 for further evidence. In the meantime the decree was partially satisfied and at the request of the decree-holders the Court dismissed the execution proceedings on 8th February 1914. On 1st February the decree-holders being absent, the Court passed an order accepting the objection and removing the attachment. In April 1914 the plaintiffs again attached the same house in execution of the same decree. The defendants again objected and their objection was allowed on 7th August 1915. On 2nd October 1915 plaintiffs brought a regular suit for a declaration that the house belonged to the judgment-debtor. The lower Courts dismissed the suit as time-barred on the ground that it had been brought more than one year from the order of 1st February 1914:

Held, (1) that the effect of the order of 9th February 1914, dismissing the execution proceedings, was, under Order XXI, rule 57 of the Civil Procedure Code, to remove the attachment; [p 544, col. 1]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Gejranwala, dated the 4th December 1916, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Sialkot, dated the 17th January 1916.

Mr. Ghulam Rishi, for the Appellants.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts, out of which this second appeal arises, are as follows:—

On the 15th of August 1913 plaintiffs-appellants obtained a decree against the firm Muhammad Jamil and Muhammad Yakub. On the 1st of October 1913 in execution proceedings certain houses were attached and three objections were filed under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 58, Civil Procedure Code. In the present case we are only concerned with house No 242 in regard to which an objection was lodged by Qutab Din and Gulab Din, defendants respondents. There was an investigation held into this objection and some evidence having been recorded, the hearing was adjourned to the 13th of February 1914 for further evidence of the decree-holders. Meanwhile certain other houses were sold at auction and the decree-holders received altogether a sum of Rs. 1,500 towards their decree and gave a receipt in part payment on the 7th February 1914. On the 9th February 1914 the Executing Court passed the following order:—"Rs. 1,500 have been paid and a receipt given. The decree having been partially executed let the proceedings be struck off." The words actually used are 'dakhil dast r hove.' The presence of the parties on that date is not noted on the record, but it is probable that the decree-holders were present and said that they did not wish to prosecute the execution further for the time being, as otherwise the Court would hardly have struck the proceedings off before the 13th of February 1914, which was the date actually fixed. On the 13th of February 1914 the decree holders did not appear, but the objector appeared and made an oral application that, as the decree-holders and the judgment-debtor had come to terms and the proceedings had been struck off, his objection should be accepted and the house released from attachment. On this the Court passed an order formally accepting the objection and removing the attachment.

On the 23rd of April 1915 the decree-holders made a fresh application for execution and got the same house again attached. The same objectors made a fresh objection and on the 27th of August 1915 this was allowed. The plaintiffs then brought a regular suit on the 2nd of October 1915, which has been dismissed as barred by time, it being held that they should have sued within one year from the 13th of February 1914, on which date the previous objection was allowed. Before the lower Appellate Court it was argued, apparently for the first time, that the order of the 9th of February 1914 practically removed the attachment, and that, therefore, the order of the 13th of February 1914 should not have been passed, the argument being that no order was passed against the plaintiffs within the meaning of Order XXI, rule 63, Civil Procedure Code. The District Judge, however, was of opinion that if the order of the 9th February removed the attachment the suit was barred by four days more than if the order of the 13th of February 1914 were taken as the final order on the objection. He said in his judgment, page 8 of the paper book: "The expression—filing execution proceedings—is perhaps an unsound and objectionable one, but it is the usual order passed when no immediate action is required and the proceedings are kept alive. It refers in no way to the objection and the fact that on the 13th of February the Court clearly and in so many words removed the attachment shows that in its opinion that attachment subsisted and existed until that date." The plaintiffs have now come up in second appeal to this Court and the same argument as was urged before the lower Appellate Court is again strongly pressed here.

Mr. Ghulam Rasul for the appellants says that what happened on the 9th of February 1914 was that the Court was unable to proceed further with the application for execution by reason of the default of the decree-holders, who did not wish for the time being to continue the execution proceedings, and that its order striking off the proceedings was really an order dismissing the application for execution within the meaning of Order XXI, rule 57, of the Civil Procedure Code, and that upon the dismissal of the application the attachment ceased. Now, we think that there can be no doubt that the Court struck off the proceedings on the 9th of February 1914, because the decree holders did not desire, having realized Rs. 1,000, to proceed further at that time against the judgment-debtor. Under these circumstances the Court could either dismiss the application or adjourn the proceedings to a future date. It certainly did not adjourn the proceedings, to a future date, and, therefore, it was bound under rule 57 to dismiss the application. The case of Dildar Husain v. Sheo Narain (1) is on all fours with the present case. There in execution of a decree the whole of a house was sold by auction instead of a share therein, which alone was saleable in execution of the decree. Various objections were raised and in the end the Court executing the decree passed the following order:—

"The sale is set aside; the application for execution is struck off. The attachment will remain."

It was held that the attachment had come to an end on the decree-holder's application being struck off. It was also said that the word "default" used in Order XXI, rule 57, of the Civil Procedure Code, is not restricted to default of appearance or matters of that description. It means a failure to do what the decree-holder was bound to do, that is, to go on with his application and have the property sold. In the course of his judgment Tindball, J. page 161* of the Report, said: "To my mind it is clear and beyond all doubt that the decree-holder in December 1914 did not wish to proceed further with his then pending application for execution, and it was in fact dismissed by reason of this default in carrying on proceedings. To my mind Order XXI, rule 57, clearly and distinctly applies to the present case. The fact that the Court in dismissing the application that the attachment should continue makes no difference. The law distinctly says that in these circumstances the attachment shall cease." Now, applying these remarks to the present case we have no doubt whatever that the decree-holders on the 9th of February 1914 did not wish to proceed further with the then pending application for execution and it was in fact dismissed by reason of their default in carrying on the proceedings, and Order XXI, rule 57, clearly applies. The result is that the order of the 9th of February 1914 had the effect

Mr. Ghulam Rasul argues that the attachment having ceased on the 9th of February 1914, there was no necessity thereafter for any adjudication on the objection of Qatab Din and Gulab Din, and that the Court's order of the 13th of February 1914 was unnecessary and redundant. He refers to Kashinath Morsheth v. Ramchandra Gopinath (2) wherein it was held that the decision on the plaintiff's first application having no object existing on which to operate, the attachment having then been removed, it could not properly be regarded as res judicata since no one was seriously interested in having it decided in a different way. In the present case also the attachment having been removed on the 9th of February 1914 the application of Qatab Din and Gulab Din had no longer any object existing on which to operate. In other words Qatab Din and Gulab Din's object had been obtained by the removal of the attachment, which took place upon the dismissal of the execution proceedings.

Dr. Nand Lal, on behalf of the respondents, urges that even if the order of the 13th of February 1914 be considered as an erroneous one, still it is an order against the plaintiffs and must be held to be conclusive against them, and that the plaintiffs were bound to bring their suit within one year from that date under Order XXI, rule 63, Civil Procedure Code. He cites Nagendra Lal Chowdhury v. Fani Bhuyan Das (3), Narainhar Chetti v. Vijiapala Nairar (4) and other rulings as authorities for the proposition that an order under Order XXI, rule 63, Civil Procedure Code, is binding, even if it is made after an incomplete investigation or no investigation at all. With these decisions we have no quarrel, but we do not think that they assist Dr. Nand Lal's clients. What we have to do is to consider the effect of the orders of the 9th and 13th February 1914 respectively. In regard to the effect of the latter order Dr. Nand Lal refers to Jiwani v. Nathu Mal (5). In that case N. M. in execution of his decree against F. D. attached a house. Muhammad J.

and L. objected to the attachment, an enquiry was made by the Executing Court, and on 14th of October 1903 in the absence of the decree-holder an ex parte order releasing the house was passed in the following words:—

"Aj digridar hazir nahin hai, misl iyra ba adan pairai dakhil daftar hui hai, lihava jaidad makruka waguzar howe, misil dakhil daftar ho."

It was held that notwithstanding the wording of this order it was an adjudication on the merits under section 280, Civil Procedure Code, 1882, inasmuch as the objector had actually produced his evidence, and the decree holder after several hearings produced none and absented himself on the last hearing. Now, that case is distinguishable from the present one, inasmuch as the enquiry there was complete and there was an adjudication upon the merits. It is possible that the Court in that case might have been justified in dismissing the application for execution for default, but it actually adjudicated upon the objection which was before it, and that adjudication was certainly binding upon the decree holder, who had only one year from the date of the order to bring the suit to establish his right. In the present case there was no adjudication upon the merits at all and the order of the 9th of February 1914 did not contain any reference to the objection then pending. It had, however, as we have already pointed out, the effect of removing the attachment and an adjudication upon the merits of the objection was no longer necessary. We have no difficulty in agreeing with Counsel for the appellants that the order of the 13th of February 1914 was quite unnecessary and, moreover, the proceedings having been dismissed for default on the 9th of February 1914 the Court was functus officio and had no power to pass any further order therein. Its order of the 13th of February 1914 was, therefore, altogether a nullity and time did not begin to run against the decree-holders from that date. We, therefore, hold that the plaintiffs' cause of action arose on the 27th of August 1915, on which date the objection of Gulab Din and Qatab Din was allowed, and that the present suit is within time.

We accept the appeal and setting aside the order of the lower Appellate Court remand the case to the Court of the first instance for decision on the merits. Stamps on this appeal Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 47, 78, 144, 151—Attachment of moneys—Rateable distribution among decree-holders, order for—Order set aside in appeal—Restitution, application for, by the attaching decree-holder, maintainability of—Inherent power of Court to order restitution under s. 151.

Respondent obtained a decree against M. and in execution attached certain moneys belonging to M. The moneys, after realisation, were rateably distributed among various decree-holders of M. The order for rateable distribution was, however, reversed on appeal. Respondent then applied for return of the moneys rateably distributed and this was ordered:

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. V. Krishna Mohan, for the Appellants.—The order for restitution was one without jurisdiction. The lower Courts were not empowered to pass it. The order for rateable distribution was passed on contest between rival decree holders and is not a decree within section 144, Civil Procedure Code. Nor is it an order under section 47, Civil Procedure Code. The judgment-debtor did not object to the rateable distribution.

Mr. P. Venkataramana Rao, for the Respondent.—The order for rateable distribution may be treated as one made under section 47, Civil Procedure Code. See Venkataperumal [Rajah of Karvetnagar] v. Venkata Reddi (1).

In any event the respondent is entitled to relief alternatively under section 73 (2), Civil Procedure Code.

Section 151, Civil Procedure Code, which gives wide discretionary powers to Courts, may be invoked in respondent's favour and the order was obviously in the interests of justice.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent in this case obtained a decree against a judgment-debtor, Mothivala Usman, in Original Suit No. 776 of 1916 on the file of the Ellore District Munsif. In execution he attached certain monies belonging to the judgment-debtor. Various other decree holders, who are appellants now before us, applied for and obtained rateable distribution under section 73 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The money was distributed. On appeal the order for rateable distribution was set aside by the District Court. The respondent then applied for the return of the money which had been paid to the other decree holders and this was ordered by the District Munsif, the order being confirmed on appeal by the Subordinate Judge. The matter now comes up before us on second appeal.

The lower Courts purport to have directed the return of the money under section 144, Civil Procedure Code, though the Subordinate Judge in his judgment also refers to section 151. It is represented on behalf of the appellants that section 144 has no application to the present case on the ground that the order for rateable distribution cannot be treated as a decree within the meaning of section 144, Civil Procedure Code. Referring to the definition of decree in section 2 of the Code, it is clear that the order for rateable distribution can only be so treated if it is to be considered as an order under section 47. In the present case the order was passed on contest between rival decree-holders. No objection to the rateable distribution was raised by the judgment-debtor nor is it suggested that his interests were directly or indirectly affected.

We are referred to Venkaraperumal [Rajah of Karvetnagar] v. Venkata Reddi (1) by respondent's Vakil as showing that an order for rateable distribution may be treated as an order under section 47. But that was a case in which the order was passed on an objection raised by the judgment-debtor to the effect that a particular decree-holder was not entitled to participate because he had no subsisting application for execution pending. The learned Judges are at pains to distinguish between such a case and the case where the contest was between rival decree-holders and to say that such a case as the latter was not governed by section 47, Civil Procedure Code. They refer to Balmer Lawrie & Co. v. Jadu Nath Banerjee (2) as authority to this effect. In our opinion the distinction is sound and the order for rateable distribution in this case cannot be regarded as an order under section 47 or as a decree within the purview of section 144. Viewed, therefore, as an order under section 144, the order under appeal was without jurisdiction and must be set aside.

The learned Vakil for the respondent seeks to support it with reference to the inherent powers of the Court conferred by section 151. The Subordinate Judge merely refers to these inherent powers but does not discuss them; nor does he consider whether their exercise is called for in the circumstances of this case. He further declined to consider the objection raised by the appellants to the effect that the respondent's decree was fraudulently obtained on the ground that this has nothing to do with the question of restitution (clearly meaning under section 144). It may be that the respondent is entitled to relief to be granted under the inherent powers of the Court under section 151, but whether relief should be granted under this section will have to be carefully considered. The lower Court will have to determine whether the exercise of these powers are necessary for the ends of justice, that is to say, whether this is the only legal method by which the respondent can obtain his dues; and the objection raised regarding the alleged fraudulent nature of the respondent's decree will be an objection to be legitimately considered.

In this connection, it has been suggested that section 73, clause (2) would afford respondent an alternative means of redress. This, we may remark, is not so. If the assets were not liable to be rateably distributed, clause (2) of section 73 would have no application. With these remarks we must set aside the orders of the lower Courts and direct that the petition be restored to the file of the District Munsif and disposed of according to law. Costs in this and in the lower Appellate Court will be provided in the order to be ultimately passed.

M. Imam Din, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On 29th July 1902 a decree for 24/6 and 4/2 costs was passed against one Nowab. In the course of the execution proceedings he died and his two minor sons were brought on the record as his representatives. In the 7th application for execution dated 17th December 1907, at which time the balance realisable was Rs. 16 7-0, an application was made that Allah Dad, the uncle of the minors, should be appointed their guardian and that their house should be sold. This was not accompanied by an affidavit. Notice was duly served on 31st December 1907 on Allah Dad but in spite of this he did not appear from first to last. In accordance with the application the house belonging to the minors was attached and was eventually sold. On 27th April 1908 the decree-holder was given permission to bid and he being the only bidder the house was knocked down to him on 6th August 1908 for Rs. 22 out of which, after deducting the decretal money and the costs, Rs. 1 1-9 were deposited in the Treasury and have presumably lapsed as there is nothing to show that the sum was even withdrawn by Allah Dad. This sale was confirmed on 6th October 1908 but before confirmation, the Executing Court sent notice to Allah Dad on 8th August 1908, requesting him to appear on 4th October 1908 and state whether he could not pay off this small decree without allowing the property to be sold. So far from paying any attention to this notice, on 27th May 1910, or some 18 months after the auction, he purchased the house himself from the decree-holder. A suit was instituted on 12th February 1920 by the sons after attaining their majority and a decree was given by the Trial Court. The appeal to the District Judge was accepted, and the suit was dismissed on the finding that, although there was a strong presumption that the guardian had acted in collusion with the decree-holder and although it was clear that he had neglected his duty, section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code and Article 12 of the Limitation Act barred the suit. The only questions to be decided on second appeal are whether section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code applies and, if not, whether the case is governed by Article 12 or Article 141. Counsel for the appellants relies on Chotha Ram v. Karmon Bai (1) and Nusrat Ali v. Sakina Begam (2) while Counsel for the respondents quotes Gulzari Lal v. Madho Ram (3) and Munnu Lal v. Ghulam Abbas (4) and Imam Din v. Furan Chand (5), Gulzari Lal v. Madho Ram (3) has been dissented from in Ehagwoti v. Banwari Lal (6) and in both Munnu Lal v. Ghulam Abbas (4) and Imam Din v. Furan Chand (5) the only point before the Court was whether the non-observance of the rule prescribing that an affidavit shall accompany the application for guardian invalidates the subsequent proceedings where the guardian has acted on behalf of the minors. Here the guardian has not acted as held by the District Judge. He has shown considerable negligence and there can be no doubt that he could have arranged to avoid the auction-sale of the house for the outstanding (amount) of the decree was Rs. 16 7-0 only. Not only did he pay no attention to the notice on 8th July 1903 and failed to appear when specifically invited to do so, but he himself purchased the property 18 months later for very nearly double the price realised at the auction sale. The position being, therefore, that not only was the affidavit not put in but that no body acted for the minors or protected their interest. I think, it is clear that they never became parties and as they never became parties section 47 cannot apply.

The second point is, whether Article 12 or 144 of the Limitation Act governs the case. Counsel for the appellants refers me to Purna Chandra v. Bejoy Chandra (7) and Hira Singh v. Ghulam Qadir (8) and it is very clear that where a suit is instituted by a stranger to the sale proceedings, for this is what these plaintiffs are, inasmuch as they were never validly made parties to the execution proceedings, Article 12 does not apply. The suit is brought not to set aside the sale which is merely voidable, but to have it declared that the sale in question was in its inception null and void against the plaintiffs. The suit, therefore, having been brought within 12 years is within time and on the concurrent findings of both the Courts as to the merits of the case the plaintiff must succeed. I, therefore, accept the appeal and restore the order of the Trial Court. The defendants will pay the plaintiff's costs throughout.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), ss. 16, 28—Insolvent tenant—Rents due after adjudication, whether provable under the Act—Suit for recovery with leave of Insolvency Court, whether maintainable.

Where, after a tenant is adjudged insolvent, his rent falls into arrears, the arrears of rent so due stand on the same footing as a debt or liability incurred after the order of adjudication and do not constitute a debt provable under the Provincial Insolvency Act, because the obligation or liability to pay the arrears did not arise till after the adjudication was made. A suit, therefore, to recover such arrears is maintainable without the leave of the Insolvency Court. [p. 550, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the Additional Judge, Lucknow, dated 30th March 1920, reversing that of the Honorary Deputy Collector, Lucknow, dated 25th September 1919.

Mr. P. C. Gupta, for the Appellant.

Mr. Rajeshwari Prasad, for Respondents Nos. 1, 2 and 4.

JUDGMENT.—The suit which has given rise to this appeal was filed by the plaintiff for the recovery of arrears of rent alleged to have been due by the defendants, Kalka, Chheda, Baldeo and Lal, who are the sons of Bhabhuti. Bhabhuti and Kalka were the original tenants of the land. Both of them were adjudged insolvents on the 3rd February 1913. The present plaintiff was one of the creditors to whom a notice of the application for insolvency had gone. The arrears of rent now claimed were entered by Bhabhuti and Kalka in their application for adjudication. In fact they had not fallen due till then. None of the creditors proved his debts and no Receiver was appointed to take charge of the estate of the said insolvents.

The present suit relates to the arrears of rent of certain land for the period from Kharif 1323 to the end of Rabi 1326 Faslī. The defendant, Kalka, pleaded inter alia that no suit was maintainable against him without the leave of the Insolvency Court. That plea was disallowed by the Court of first instance but accepted by the lower Appellate Court which dismissed the suit.

Section 16 of the Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), then in force, provided that on the making of an order of adjudication the whole of the property of the insolvent other than that exempted from attachment and sale in execution of a decree would vest in the Court or in a Receiver appointed to take charge of the same and that thereafter, except as provided by the Act, no creditor, to whom the insolvent was indebted in respect of any debt provable under the Act, would, during the pendency of the insolvency proceedings, have any remedy against the property or person of the insolvent in respect of the debt or commence any suit or other legal proceeding, except with the leave of the Court and on such terms as the Court might impose. Section 28 provides that, except demands in the nature of unliquidated damages arising otherwise than by reason of a contract or breach of trust, all debts and liabilities, present or future, certain or contingent, to which the debtor is subject when he is adjudged an insolvent or to which he may become subject before his discharge by reason of any obligation incurred before the date of such adjudication, shall be deemed to be debts provable under the Act.

It is admitted that Kalka has not yet obtained his discharge. The question for consideration is, whether the arrears of rent claimed for the period subsequent to the order of adjudication can be deemed to be debts provable under the Act or, in other words, whether the obligation to pay those rents arose before the date of the adjudication or after such date. The obligation to pay rent is distinguishable from the obligation to pay the arrears of rent claimed. The arrears arose after the date of adjudication. The liability to rent was based on the previous contract of tenancy; but the obligation or liability to pay the arrears did not arise till after the adjudication was made. The arrears of rent so due stand on the same footing as a debt or liability incurred after the order of adjudication or the rates or taxes or wages or salaries of servants which become payable thereafter. Section 29 provides that the creditor may prove for a debt existing at the time the adjudication is made not payable till some time afterwards as if it were payable presently. Section 3 specifies cases in which priority is to be given in the distribution of the property of the insolvent and, among other cases, mentions all debts due to the Crown or to any local authority; and all salaries or wages, not exceeding twenty rupees in all, of any clerk, servant or labourer for services rendered to the insolvent during four months before the date of the presentation of the petition.

If the Court or the Receiver takes charge of the tenancy of the insolvent and superintends the cultivation of the land included in that tenancy, the rent due on account of the land would be a charge on the produce of the land and the Receiver will be liable to pay those rents before appropriating the produce and distributing it among the scheduled creditors. If the Court or the Receiver does not take charge of the cultivation and leaves the insolvent to look after the cultivation himself, it might still be open to him to take possession of the crop, provided an arrangement is made for the payment of the rent due in respect of the same and such allowance is given for the support of the insolvent and his family as might be considered necessary. The rents which fall due after the making of the order of adjudication cannot in any event be treated as debts existing on the date of the making of such an order because the liability does not arise till some time afterwards. It is not a liability directly arising from the previous obligation and section 28, therefore, does not apply.

It is further argued that the plaintiff is not competent to commence the suit for such arrears of rent against the insolvent without the leave of the Court which passed the order of insolvency. But the suit does not relate to a debt provable under the Act because the obligation to pay the rent arose subsequently. In Raghubir Singh v. Ram Chandar (1) the question whether a suit would lie for arrears of rent against an insolvent after he had been adjudicated as such was not raised or considered.

The appeal is, therefore allowed and the case remanded to the lower Appellate Court with a direction to re-admit the appeal under its original number and to dispose of it after determining the other points involved therein in the manner required by law. The costs here and hitherto will abide the event.

Section 2 of the Hindu Widows' Re-marriage Act (XV of 1906) includes all persons who being Hindus become widows. [p. 554, col. 2.]

The Hindu Widows' Re-marriage Act applies even to those sects of Hindus, in which widow re-marriage is recognised. The Act validates the marriage of a Hindu widow and still deprives her of her property. [p. 554, col. 1.]

Even in the case of those classes of Hindus amongst whom widow re-marriage is recognised, a widow would lose her rights to her husband's property, unless it is established affirmatively, that by custom the recognition of re-marriage carries with it the right to retain the deceased husband's estate. [p. 553, col. 2.]

Har Saran Das v. Nandi, 11 A. 320; A. W. N. (1889) 77; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 638; Gajadhar v. Kaunsilla, 1 Ind. Cas. 761; 31 A. 161; 6 A. L. J. 107 and Mula v. Partab, 6 Ind. Cas. 116; 32 A. 489; 7 A. L. J. 417, not followed.

A Hindu widow's right to succession is based on the ground that she is half of the body of her deceased husband and that she is capable of conferring spiritual benefits on him. When she re-marries she ceases to be half of the body of her late husband or to be able to confer spiritual benefits on him and she becomes the wife and half of the body of her new husband. The reason, therefore, for her keeping the estate of her deceased husband disappears. [p. 552, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Darbhanga.

Mr. Hosin Jan, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Suril Modhab Mullick and Naresh Chandra Sinha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

COURTS, J.—This was a suit for declaration of title to and confirmation of possession of an eight-anna share in Tazzi Nos. 1300, 515 and 1519 and a two anna-share in Tazzi No. 1803 in Matz, Uethua.

The facts are not disputed and are shortly as follows: The defendant No. 1, Musammatt Suraj Jote Kuer, was the wife of Ramdhari Prasad, son of the plaintiff, Musammatt Attar Kumari. After the death of Ramdhari Prasad, the defendant No. 1 left her husband's house and went to live in the house of defendant No. 2, Muhammad Yasin, a Muhammadan whose mistress she became. Subsequently, she was converted to Muhammadanism and was married to Muhammad Yasin. She, however, still retained the estate of her deceased husband and this suit by her mother-in-law was instituted to recover the estate on the ground that having re-married she had lost all her rights in her deceased husband's property. During the lifetime of her husband both he and defendant No. 1 were Dayanandis, that is to say, followers of Pandit Dayanand Saraswati, founder of the Arya Samaj, and the questions which have arisen in this case are whether a Dayanandi is a Hindu, if so, whether a Hindu widow belonging to this sect forfeits her rights to her husband's property on re-marriage, and whether a Hindu widow after conversion and subsequent re-marriage forfeits her rights to her husband's property. It has been decided by both the Courts below that a Dayanandi is a Hindu and that, in accordance with the Hindu Law, the widow of a Dayanandi after conversion and re-marriage loses her rights to her husband's property. The suit has accordingly been decreed and against this decision defendant No. 1 has appealed.

The questions that arise in this second appeal are the questions I have indicated above and I shall first deal with the question of whether a Hindu widow after conversion and subsequent re-marriage forfeits her rights to her husband's property.

So far as this Court is concerned, the matter is one of first impression but the question has arisen directly in the High Courts of Calcutta, Madras, Bombay and Allahabad. The decisions in Calcutta, Madras and Bombay are unanimously to the effect that in such a case a Hindu widow loses her property, whereas the Allahabad High Court has taken a directly contrary view and it is contended by the learned Vakils for the appellant that it is the Allahabad view which is correct and the view which we ought to follow. The argument of the learned Vakils for the appellant is based on the interpretation which has been placed on section 2 of the Hindu Widows' Re-marriage Act, (Act XV of 1856) by the Allahabad High Court. The Hindu Widows' Re-marriage Act, it is argued, deals with the case of Hindu widows who had up to that time been held to be incapable of contracting a valid marriage; by that enactment such marriages were legalised and the issue of such marriages was legitimized, but the old Hindu rule of law was retained that on re-marriage the widow lost her rights to her deceased husband's property, for section 2 of the Act enacts that "all rights and interests which any widow may have in her deceased husband's property by way of maintenance shall upon her re marriage cease and it shall be determined as if she had then died." It is contended that "widow" in this section can only mean "Hindu widow" so that if a Hindu widow changes her religion and becomes a Muhammadan she is no longer a Hindu widow and if she re marries section 2 of the Act does not apply and she does not lose her husband's estate. This is the view which, as I have already said, has been adopted consistently in the Allahabad High Court and I need only refer to the last case on the point Abdul Aziz Khan v. Nirma (1) which followed the previous decision of that Court. I may mention in this connection, however, that at least one of the learned Judges who was a party to that decision in another case, expressed a doubt as to the correctness of this view but did not dissent because of the long course of decisions in that Court. The Calcutta High Court has taken an entirely different view which has been expressed in the judgment of the majority in the Full Bench case of Matungini Gupta v. Ram Bultun Roy (2). In that case, on an interpretation of section 2 of the Act, four of the learned Judges who decided that case held that it includes all widows who are within the scope of the Act, that is to say, all persons who being Hindus become widows, and they say that it must follow from this that if any such widow marries she is deprived of the estate which she inherited from her Hindu husband. Prinsler, J., recorded a dissenting judgment being unable to adopt this interpretation of the section and his view was the same as that which has been adopted in Allahabad. In Madras and in Bombay, so far as the interpretation of the Act is concerned, there has been a difference of opinion amongst the learned Judges. The wording of the section is curious and it certainly lends itself to the interpretation which has been put upon it by the Allahabad High Court and by the learned Judges who have adopted the same view, but the reasoning of the majority of the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court appears to me to be correct and, in my opinion, section 2 of the Act includes all persons who being Hindus become widows and that any such widow if she re-marries loses the estate which she inherited from her deceased Hindu husband. On the interpretation of the Statute alone, therefore, in my opinion, a Hindu widow who becomes a Muhammadan and re marries, loses her right to her husband's property. But even if this interpretation be wrong it is not sufficient to say that if the Act does not apply a Hindu widow who changes her religion and re-marries retains her deceased husband's estate. In such circumstances we are relegated in coming to a decision to the general rule of Hindu Law and in regard to this I think there can be no doubt.

A widow's right to succession is based on the ground that she is half of the body of her deceased husband and that she is capable of conferring spiritual benefits on him. When she re marries she ceases to be half of the body of her late husband or to be able to confer spiritual benefits on him and she becomes the wife and half of the body of her new husband. The reason, therefore, for her keeping the estate of her deceased husband disappears. Formerly, by changing her religion a widow lost her estate but since Act XXI of 1850 this is not so. Although, however, she does not lose her estate by a change of religion, it seems clear that she must lose it by re marriage when the whole reason for holding the estate disappears. Moreover, ordinarily, both under the Hindu Law and by the enactment, a Hindu widow on re-marriage loses her estate. If, however, the contention of the learned Vakil for the appellants were correct, by doing another act which is repugnant to Hindu ideas, namely, by becoming a Muhammadan, she would save her estate. It is difficult to conceive that this could be a correct view of the Hindu Law.

Looked at from another point of view, the contention is equally difficult to accept. The estate which a Hindu widow has, she has from her deceased husband and it is distinctly limited in character, one limitation being that she loses it if she re-marries. She cannot get a larger estate than she got from her husband, yet it is suggested that by changing her religion she does in fact enlarge her estate inasmuch as she can continue to hold it on re-marriage. I am unable to accept this contention and in support of the view I have taken I would refer to the decisions of Wilson, J., and Banerji, J., in the Full Bench decision in the case of Matungini Gupta v. Ram Rutton Roy (2). This view has been accepted in the later cases of the Calcutta High Court. The question has never been considered from the point of view of the general Hindu Law in the Allahabad High Court, but the view I have expressed has been generally accepted in Madras and Bombay. In all the Courts then in which the matter has been considered from the standpoint of the general rule of Hindu Law it has been held that a Hindu widow after conversion and subsequent re-marriage forfeits her rights to her husband's property and this is, in my opinion, the correct view of the law.

It is next contended that, even if this be so, if a Hindu widow belongs to a sect such as the Arya Samaj in which widow re-marriage is allowed she does not forfeit her rights to her husband's property on re-marriage. It is, in the first place, urged that this cannot be so because it would be anomalous for any sect to approve of widow re-marriage and at the same time to deprive the widow who re-marries of her estate. The fact of an apparent anomaly, however, will not establish the correctness of the contention put forward and I may remark that this is exactly the position created by the Hindu Widows' Re-marriage Act. The marriage of Hindu widow has been validated but she is still deprived of her property. It is next urged that the Hindu Widows' Re-marriage Act does not apply to sects of Hindus in which widow re-marriage is recognised and that consequently section 2 of the Act does not apply. I am not prepared to accept this proposition, but even accepting it, the question remains: "What rule does apply" and here again we are thrown back on the general rule of Hindu Law which I have discussed above. It may be that certain classes of Hindus recognise widow re-marriage either by custom or as a tenet of their sect, but even where this is so it would be necessary to establish affirmatively that this recognition carries with it the right to retain the deceased husband's estate, for to do so is against both the general rule of the Hindu Law and against the provisions of the Statute. I doubt whether in the case of any class amongst whom widow re-marriage is recognised it has been established that this carries with it the right to retain the deceased husband's estate but certainly in this case it has not been proved. In support of the contention of the learned Vakil for the appellant we have been referred to the rulings in the cases of Har Saran Das v. Nandi (3), Gajadhar v. Kaunsilla (4) and Mula v. Partab (5). There is no doubt that in the Allahabad High Court the view contended for by the learned Vakil for the appellants has been generally accepted, but in none of these cases has the general principle of Hindu Law been considered. It has merely been said that because section 2 of the Act does not apply, therefore, where widow re-marriage is recognised, the widow does not lose her husband's property, but with due respect to the learned Judges who decided these cases this does not dispose of the matter. If the Act does not apply we must fall back on the general rule of the Hindu Law, and this is that a widow loses her property on re-marriage. This is the view which has been taken in the other High Courts and I would refer to the decisions in the cases of Murugayi v. Viramapali (6), which has been followed in a series of cases ending with the case of Vitta Tayaramma v. Chatakondur Sivayya (7), Mohammad Umar v. Man Koor (8), Rasul Jehan Begum v. Ram Surum Singh (9), Gourj Okurn Patni v. Sita Patni (10), and Nitya Madhav Das v. Srinath Chandra Chuckerbutty (11).

SHEO LAIQ SINGH v. AUSAN SINGH.

The last contention is that a Dayanandī is not a Hindu. It is somewhat difficult to define the term Hindu and there are several castes and sects who, although non-conformists, are still classed as Hindus. I can find no decision on the question of whether Dayanandīs are Hindus. The sect which approaches most nearly to the Dayanandīs, however, are the Brahmos, and in the case of Bhagwan Koer v. Boss (12) in which their Lordships of the Privy Council discussed this question of whether Brahmos are Hindus or not they have said: "The learned Judges of the Chief Court examined the literature bearing upon the Brahmo society; they had before them much important evidence with reference to the Brahmos and the relation of their principles and their organisation to the Hindu system; and they came to the conclusion that a Sikh or Hindu by becoming a Brahmo did not necessarily cease to belong to the community in which he was born." We may, therefore, now take it as settled law that Brahmos are Hindus. Their creed is directed against caste and idolatry and the object of the founder, Raja Rammohan Roy, was to found a pure monotheistic religion. The sect of Dayanandīs was founded by Pandit Dayanand Saraswati and it is now known as the Arya Samaj and it too is directed against caste and idolatry but they follow the Vedas; and as Dr. Gour in his Hindu Code has said: "If the Brahmos are Hindus the Arya Samajists are more so because though professing to be monotheists they believe in the supremacy of the Vedas" (Gour's Hindu Code, 1919, page 182, paragraph 30)). In my opinion there can be no doubt that the Dayanandīs are Hindus. This being so the defendant No. 1 in this case was a Hindu, she continued to be a Hindu up till the time she adopted the Muhammadan religion and for the reasons I have given she has forfeited her right to her husband's estate on her re-marriage.

The suit has, therefore, been rightly decreed in both the Courts below and I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

When a Pleader accepts a brief, it is his duty to attend to his client's interest throughout the proceedings in the case unless his appointment be determined with the leave of the Court by a writing signed by him or his client and filed in Court.

In an appeal filed by a Pleader, a notice of the date fixed for hearing was served on him. On that notice, the Pleader made the following entry, "The appellant should be informed. He has his papers with him and has not left his address with me." On the date of hearing no body put in an appearance:

Held, rejecting the appeal, that the appellant must be deemed to have had notice of the date fixed for hearing.

Appeal from a decree of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, Unao, dated the 27th July 1921, modifying a decree of the Mansi, Parwa, dated the 28th January 1921.

JUDGMENT.—No one appears in support of this appeal. The appeal was filed by Mr. Makhan Lal Misra, a Pleader of this Court, and notice of the date fixed for hearing was served on him. On that notice he has written as follows:—"The appellant should be informed. He has his papers with him and has not left his address with me." This is an extraordinary statement to be made by a Pleader. When a Pleader accepts a brief it is his duty to attend to his client's interest throughout the proceedings in the case unless his appointment be determined with the leave of the Court by a writing signed by him or his client and filed in Court. Rule 5 of Order III of the First Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code provides that any process served on the Pleader of any party shall be presumed to be duly communicated and made known to the party whom the Pleader represents and, unless the Court otherwise directs, shall be as effectual for all purposes as if the same had been given to or served on the party in person. Custom—Proof—Gift—Re-marriage of widow in, donee's line—Collaterals of donor, rights of.

Custom must be proved by evidence and Courts cannot deduce the existence of one custom from that of another. It is not the function of a Court to say what a custom ought to be, its duty is confined to enforcing such customs as are shown to exist. [p. 556, col. 1.]

The existence of a custom enabling the descendants of a donor to deprive the widow of the last male holder of the donee's family of her life-estate on her re-marriage cannot be presumed by analogy. A person relying upon such a custom must prove it. [p. 556, col. 2.]

The heirs of a donor may succeed eventually to an estate gifted by their predecessor, but their position is not necessarily the same as that of the heirs to an estate which has descended by succession from a common ancestor. The latter are members of the family of the deceased male holder, the former may not be. [p. 556, cols. 1 & 2.]

The re-marriage of a widow means something more to the members of the family than to strangers. Such a marriage might seem to the late husband's family equivalent to misconduct while by a donor's descendants it might only be regarded as an excuse for getting possession of the land. [p. 556, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 20th October 1917, affirming that of the Munsif, First Class, Garh Shankar, District Hoshiarpur, dated the 16th March 1916.

Lala Fakir Ohand, for the Appellants.

Mr. N. O. Pandit, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The following pedigree table is necessary for the understanding of this appeal:—

The land in suit was gifted by Jaura either to Musammât Bholi or to her son Jamiat. It is contended that the statement in the lower Appellate Court's judgment that Jamiat was the donee is incorrect, but the point is not material for our present purpose. Jamiat in any case held the land and on his death it went to Wazira, his adopted son, and after Wazira's death to his widow Musammât Bhagwani. The plaintiffs sued for possession on the ground that Musammât Bhagwani by re-marriage had forfeited her rights in the estate, and that they as descendants of Jamiat, the donor, were entitled to succeed to it on the extinction of the line of the donee. No claim has been made by the plaintiffs on the ground of their relationship to Jamiat.

The First Court dismissed the suit and after a remand the order was upheld on appeal by the District Judge. The plaintiffs have preferred a second appeal with a certificate on the question of custom, whether, if the widow of the last owner in the line of a donee remarries, the land reverts to the donor's line in the presence of daughters of the original donee.

Jamiat apparently had left daughters but Musammât Bhagwani was the only defendant and she did not in her plea contest the suit on the ground that these daughters were in existence. She denied that the property belonged to Jaura and denied her own re-marriage or unchastity. The question whether the line of the donee was altogether extinct, was put in issue by the learned District Judge, for the first time, when he ordered the remand.

Before considering the effect, if any, of the existence of these daughters it is necessary to determine the question whether the re-marriage of Musammât Bhagwani would entail reversion of the estate to the family of the original donor if there were no other representative of the descendants of the donee. The gift by Jaura has been held to be a fact, and the learned District Judge has also held that the tie between Musammât Bhagwani and a man named Maya, with whom she is held proved to be living, amounts to a marriage.

Counsel for the appellants has been unable to point to a single instance of the widow of the last descendant of a donee losing her estate to the descendants of the donor by re-marriage. He has asked us, however, to hold that this is the custom by inference from the following general rules of the Customary Law:—

- (1) when an owner of land dies without issue his widow succeeds to his estate;
- (2) this custom, at any rate in the case of Hindu tribes, is derived from the widow's right to maintenance from the estate;
- (3) the widow holds a life-estate with strictly limited powers of alienation in the presence of near agnate heirs of her deceased husband;
- (4) on her re-marriage she loses her life-estate in favour of those agnate heirs;
- (5) on the extinction of the line of descendants of a donee the land gifted reverts to the male descendants of the original donor.

It is also argued that the descendants of the donor would have the same right to contest alienations by a widow of gifted property as would be possessed in regard to other property by her husband's agnates, if there were any, and that, therefore, the rule of reversion on re-marriage must be taken to be the same.

Custom, however, must be proved by evidence and Courts cannot deduce the existence of one custom from that of another. It is not the function of a Court to say what a custom ought to be, its duty is confined to enforcing such custom as are shown to exist. The heirs of a donor may succeed eventually to an estate gifted by their predecessor, but their position is not necessarily the same as that of the heirs to an estate which has descended by succession from a common ancestor. The latter are members of the family of the deceased male holder, the former may not be. The re-marriage of a widow means something more to the members of the family than to strangers. Such a marriage might seem to the late husband's family equivalent to misconduct while by a donor's descendants it might only be regarded as an excuse for getting possession of the land. In any case, we are not prepared to say without positive proof that there is a custom applicable to the parties now before us enabling the descendants of a donor to deprive the widow of the last male holder of the donee's family of her life-estate when she re-marries.

It is, therefore, unnecessary to consider other points which might arise, such as the position of Jamiat's daughters and the agnates of Wazira, Musammât Bhagwani's first husband, who himself was an adopted son of or donee from Jamiat.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Odh Estates Act (I of 1869), s. 2—Will, requirements of—Family agreement embodying testamentary instructions—Family agreement, binding nature of—Construction of document—Document to be interpreted as a whole—Interpretation to be consistent.

MUHAMMAD YAQUB KHAN v. MUHAMMAD SHAHID ALI KHAN.

A Will as defined by section 2 of the Oudh Estates Act is a legal declaration of his intentions by a testator with respect to his estate which he desires to be carried into effect after his death. It has to be in writing and registered in the manner required by law. It need not be in any particular form. It must contain a declaration by the testator of his intention regarding the devolution of his estate after his death. [p. 559, col. 1]

In all cases the primary duty of a Court is to ascertain the true intention of the testator from an examination of the entire Will. The Court is in fact entitled to put itself into the testator's chair and say what, having regard to the language used in the different clauses when read together, his intention was. [p. 559, col. 2.]

If a consistent interpretation can be placed on all the clauses of a document it should be adopted in preference to any other which might lead to inconsistent results. [p. 559, col. 2.]

A family settlement is binding on the parties thereto because the object of such settlement is the reconciliation of existing differences and the avoidance of future disputes. [p. 561, col. 1.]

Three brothers K., M. and A. entered into a family agreement which recorded that they would have no power to make a gift or Will of their properties in favour of any person other than their children and wives of equal status, (aulad wa azwaj najib-ut-tarfain), that after they died their najib-ut-tarfain children and widows would be their heirs and representatives and that children and widows as were not najib-ut-tarfain would be entitled only to maintenance. But that if any of them died without najib-ut-tarfain issue, then their issue who were not najib-ut-tarfain would inherit. This agreement was duly signed and registered. A. died childless and the question was whether the above agreement constituted a Will on the part of A. whether it was binding on all the brothers and if so what interest in A.'s property was taken by his najib-ut-tarfain widow:

Held, (1) that the agreement constituted a valid Will on the part of A. as it satisfied all the requirements of a Will under section 2 of the Oudh Estates Act to which the parties were subject; [p. 560, col. 1.]

(3) that under the Will of A. his widow succeeded to his property absolutely with full power to bequeath it to any person she liked. [p. 559, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Rae Bareilly, dated the 8th March 1921.

Mr. Niamat Ullah, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. Wasim, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this case relates to a 6-pies share of an estate comprising a 4-annas share out of 17 villages, forming the Pahreman estate. The estate is entered at No. 197 of List I and No. 67 of List III appended to Act I of 1869. Karam Ali Khan held a 4-annas share in the said estate. He had three brothers, Ahad Ali Khan, Muzaffar Ali Khan and Raza Ali Khan. Raza Ali Khan died leaving a widow, Musammât Umrao Bibi. There were apparently some disputes between Karam Ali Khan and his brothers about the estate. On the 25th February 1884 Karam Ali Khan, Ahad Ali Khan and Muzaffar Ali Khan executed an agreement under which it was arranged that the 4-annas share held by Karam Ali Khan in the estate should be divided into 5 equal parts of 9 pies 12 kirants each, one part going to each of the three brothers, one part to their mother, Musammât Munni Bibi, who was then alive, for her life with reversion on her death in favour of her sons and the fifth part to Musammât Umrao Bibi, the widow of Raza Ali Khan, with a power to devise the same in writing in favour of any one of the three surviving brothers of her husband whom she might choose. Out of the 9 pies 12 kirants allotted to Ahad Ali Khan, 3 pies 4 kirants were given to his wife, Musammât Hashmat Bibi, for her life with reversion to Ahad Ali Khan and his personal heirs (waris zati). Musammât Munni Bibi died in 1890 and in accordance with the agreement her share was equally divided among her three surviving sons. Ahad Ali Khan thus became the owner of a 9 pies 12 kirants share and Karam Ali Khan and Muzaffar Ali Khan became the owners of a 12-pies 16 kirants share each. Muzaffar Ali Khan died in 1895 and his share devolved on his two surviving brothers, Karam Ali Khan and Ahad Ali Khan. The share of Ahad Ali Khan thus amounted to 16 pies.

MUHAMMAD YAQUB KHAN v. MUHAMMAD SHAHID ALI KHAN.

Ahad Ali Khan sold his entire share in 5 villages. He also gave his share in a sixth village to his wife, Musammât Bandi Jan. He had thus a 16-pies share left in 11 villages. He died on the 4th April 1911 leaving two widows, Musammât Hashmat Bibi and Musammât Bandi Jan, surviving him. Musammât Hashmat Bibi was an ahle biradri wife. Musammât Bandi Jan is said to have been a prostitute whom he had married. On his death mutation of names was effected in respect of the said 16-pies share in favour of his two widows in equal shares. Musammât Hashmat Bibi subsequently transferred her original 3 pies 4-hirants share in 17 villages along with her two pies out of the 8-pies share in 11 villages to her sister's son, Mustafa Khan, keeping only a 6-pies share in the 11 villages to herself.

Musammât Hashmat Bibi died on the 25th October 1919. On her death the defendant-appellant, her brother's son, who was her heir under the Muhammadan Law, obtained possession of the said 6-pies share and got mutation of names effected in his favour. The plaintiff respondent is the son of a daughter of Karam Ali Khan. He bases his claim to that share on a Will executed by Karam Ali Khan on the 12th September 1918. His contention is that Karam Ali Khan succeeded to the entire property left by Ahad Ali Khan under section 22 of Act I of 1869 in preference to Musammât Hashmat Bibi, his widow. The defendant-appellant, however, contends that by virtue of clause 11 of the agreement of the 25th February 1884 Musammât Hashmat Bibi became entitled to the entire property left by Ahad Ali Khan on his death and that Karam Ali Khan was excluded from inheritance and had in any event no title to the property in question.

The learned Subordinate Judge found that clause 11 of the agreement of the 25th February 1884 operated as a testamentary disposition by Ahad Ali Khan of his share in favour of his wife, Musammât Hashmat Bibi, but notwithstanding that finding he decreed the claim on the ground that by virtue of that disposition she was not entitled to anything more than a life interest and that Karam Ali Khan had a vested interest therein, which devolved on his death on the plaintiff-respondent. The defendant appeals.

The first question for consideration is whether clause 11 of the agreement of the 25th February 1884 operated as a testamentary disposition by Ahad Ali Khan in favour of his wife, Musammât Hashmat Bibi, giving her an absolute estate in the property left by him at the time of his death. It appears that after the agreement of the 25th February 1884 an attempt was made by Karam Ali Khan to resile from it, but a suit was filed by Ahad Ali Khan for recovery of possession of the property awarded to him, which was decreed on the 18th August 1884 (Exhibit A-1). In that suit it was held that the agreement was binding and enforceable. Paragraph 2 of the agreement described the manner in which the 4-annas share of the estate was to be divided and mentioned the limited rights which Musammât Muoni Bibi, the mother of the executants, and Musammât Umrao Bibi, the widow of Razi Ali Khan, and Musammât Hashmat Bibi, the wife of Ahad Ali Khan, were to possess in the shares respectively allotted to them. Paragraph 5 stated that Karam Ali Khan and his brothers, who were parties to the agreement, would have no power to make a gift or Will in favour of any person other than their children and widows of equal status (aulad wa azwaaj najib ut tarfain) but they would not be debarred from alienating their personal shares by sale or mortgage in case of necessity. Paragraph 10 described the manner in which the lambardari of the 4-annas share of the estate was to devolve. Paragraph 11 stated that after them their najib-ut-tarfain children and wives (aulad wa azwaaj) shall be their heirs and representatives in respect of their shares and such of their children and wives, as were not najib-ut-tarfain would only be entitled to maintenance as against the najib-ut-tarfain ones, and that if any co-sharer was devoid of najib-ut-tarfain issues then those who were not najib-ut-tarfain would be entitled to get his share. The decision of the appeal turns on the construction to be placed on the last clause in the light afforded by the language used in that clause and the other parts of the agreement.

It is not disputed that Ahad Ali Khan was the next younger brother of Karam Ali Khan and that in respect of the share assigned to him by the agreement he was governed by section 22 of Act I of 1869. If there was no testamentary disposition by Ahad Ali Khan and no family arrangement binding on Karam Ali Khan excluding him from inheritance in the presence of Musammât Hashmat Bibi, the widow of the former, Karam Ali Khan would have been entitled to the share left by Ahad Ali Khan at the time of his death under section 22, clause (6), read with section 14 of the Act. A Will is defined by section 2 of that Act as a legal declaration of his intentions by a testator with respect to his estate, which he desires to be carried into effect after his death. It has to be in writing and registered in the manner required by law. It need not be in any particular form. It must contain a declaration by the testator of his intention regarding the devolution of his estate after his death. The declaration made in paragraph 11 of the agreement says:—"After us our najib-ut-tarfain children and wives shall be our heirs, and representatives in respect of our shares and such of our children and wives as be not najib-ut-tarfain shall be entitled to maintenance only as against najib-ut-tarfain ones." It gives preference to najib-ut-tarfain children and ahle-biradri wives over non-najib-ut-tarfain issues and non-ahle-biradri wives. At the same time it declares that the former shall in the first instance be the heirs and representatives of the executants after their deaths in respect of their shares in the estate. The declaration of the intention is there; The time when it is to take effect is also mentioned. The persons in favour of whom the declaration is made are also specified by a description of the class to which they are to belong. The manner in which the distribution is to be made between the wives and children, so taking under the Will, is not stated, but that difficulty does not here arise, because it is admitted that Ahad Ali Khan left no children najib-ut-tarfain or otherwise, surviving him but had only two wives, Musammât Hashmat Bibi and Musammât Bandi Jan, who survived him. The former was an ahle-biradri wife, the latter was not. The devise must, therefore, take effect in favour of Musammât Hashmat Bibi and she became consequently entitled to the property comprised in the agreement, which her husband left at his death.

It is argued on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent that clause 5 of the agreement gives no power to the executants to make a gift or Will in favour of any but the children and wives of equal status and that if clause

11 be treated as a testamentary disposition by them in favour of children and wives of equal status and in their absence in favour of the children, born of non-najib-ut-tarfain wives, an inconsistency would be created which the executants could never have contemplated. But the agreement must be read as a whole; and if a consistent interpretation can be placed on all the clauses, it should be adopted in preference to any other which might lead to inconsistent results. Clause 5 evidently refers to circumstances where there are children and wives of equal status and also of an inferior status. It debars the executants from making a gift or Will in those circumstances in favour of any but the children and wives of equal status, for the same intention runs in clause 11 also, where preference is given to najib-ut-tarfain children and wives over non-najib-ut-tarfain ones but the latter are not absolutely excluded. In all cases the primary duty of a Court is to ascertain the true intention of the testator from an examination of the entire Will. The Court is in fact entitled to put itself into the testator's chair and say whether, having regard to the language used in the different clauses when read together, his intention was to debar non-najib-ut-tarfain absolutely from receiving the benefit of a gift or Will or only relatively when najib-ut-tarfain children were also in existence. There was a non-ahle-biradri wife here in existence, whom Musammât Hashmat Bibi allowed to remain in possession of an 8-pies share, but by virtue of clause 11 Musammât Hashmat Bibi had become entitled to the entire estate as the sole ahle-biradri wife of Ahad Ali Khan and it was open to her to forego any portion of it in favour of Musammât Bandi Jan. A special provision had been made for the maintenance of Musammât Hashmat Bibi during the lifetime of Ahad Ali Khan by the grant of a 3 pies 4 kirants share to her for her life, because Ahad Ali Khan had married a prostitute who was living with him. Where it was intended by the agreement to give the females, including the mother of the executants and the widow of Raza Ali Khan, a limited interest, the agreement specifically said so. Where it was intended to place no such restriction no limitation was mentioned. The devise in favour of Musammât Hashmat Bibi was absolute and clause 11 cannot be read as prescribing a line of inheritance varying the ordinary rule of succession.

In Hurpershad v. Sheo Dyal (1) a declaration made by a taluqdar in regard to the devolution of his estate after his death in reply to certain enquiries addressed to him by the Government was held to amount to a testamentary disposition which he intended to be carried into effect after his death. In Hasdar Ali v. Tasaddur Rasul Khan (2) a written statement made by a taluqdar in reply to enquiries made by the Government regarding his successor was treated as a Will within the meaning of section 2 of Act I of 1869. In Balraj Kuar v. Mahadeo Pal Singh (3) a document signed by a person containing relevant particulars relating to the history of his estate and a declaration as to who was to be his successor in pursuance of an advertisement appearing in a paper, announcing the intention of the advertiser to prepare a compilation, showing the family history of the Taluqdars of Oudh, was treated for the purposes of Hindu Law as a testamentary declaration by him of his intention with respect to his property, which he desired to be carried into effect after his death. In Kalian Singh v. Sanwal Singh (4) and Mathura Das v. Bhikhan Mal (5) testamentary statements in official papers were similarly held to operate as Wills.

Musammam Hashmat Bibi had relied on the agreement of the 25th February 1884 in the mutation proceedings which were instituted after the death of Ahad Ali Khan. She subsequently filed a suit for dower in which she allowed a reduction on account of the $\frac{1}{4}$ th share to which she was entitled under the Muhammadan Law, but, in view of the fact that Karam Ali Khan was denying her title to the estate, her desire to sue for the recovery of her dower which was in any case secured before her claim became barred by limitation can easily be understood. She was in possession of the estate of her husband jointly with Musammam Bandi Jan; but the possibility of Karam Ali Khan seeking to dislodge her from her possession had not ceased, when the suit for dower was filed. She only wanted to strengthen her hands by having a second string to her bow and it cannot be legitimately said that by allowing a reduction from the dower to the extent of the share of the estate to which she would have been entitled under the Muhammadan Law she surrendered her rights under the agreement or testamentary disposition of the 25th February 1884.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiff respondent does not contest that if clause 11 of the agreement operates as a testamentary disposition in her favour she would be entitled to an absolute estate. He also does not contest that on that interpretation Karam Ali Khan would not be entitled to any vested interest in the share left by Ahad Ali Khan. The defendant-appellant is the rightful heir of Musammam Hashmat Bibi, and the plaintiff respondent, who claims through Karam Ali Khan, has no right to oust him from his possession.

The next question for consideration is whether the plaintiff-respondent was excluded from inheritance in the presence of Musammam Hashmat Bibi by the agreement of family settlement, aforesaid, and if so, had he any right to bring the suit. The effect of clause 11 of the agreement was that the share of each of the executors was to devolve on his death on his wives and children, who were nayib ut-tarfain, to the exclusion of others, and that each of them agreed to the exclusion of himself, if the other left persons of the class mentioned in clause 11 in existence at the time of his death. In other words, Karam Ali Khan agreed to forgo his right under section 22 of Act I of 1869 as the brother of Ahad Ali Khan to succeed to his share, if Ahad Ali Khan left a widow, and it is not open to him or to the plaintiff-respondent, who claims through him, to go behind that agreement in order to claim a right which was surrendered at that time. and Gandharp Singh v. Nirmal Singh (7) a family settlement is binding on the parties thereto because the object of such settlement is the reconciliation of existing differences and the avoidance of future disputes. It has already been pointed out that the agreement was held to be binding and enforceable in the previous suit to which Karam Ali Khan and Ahad Ali Khan were parties. If Karam Ali Khan then agreed to his exclusion in the presence of the widow of Ahad Ali Khan he had no right which he could have conveyed to the plaintiff-respondent.

It is unnecessary to consider whether Musammat Hasmat Bibi was also entitled to a lien for her dower.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the claim of the plaintiff-respondent dismissed with costs throughout.

APPEAL FROM THE CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

Present:—Lord Buckmaster,

GOPAL LAL SETT—APPELLANT

versus

PURNA CHANDRA BASAK AND OTHERS—

RESPONDENTS

Hindu Will—Construction—Provision for worship of family idols—No gift to idols—Shebaitship—Destitution of property—Res judicata.

The Will of a Hindu testatrix was addressed to her grandson and directed that out of the income of certain specific property, he should perform the worship of the family idols and that the balance of the income should be divided between the representatives of the three branches of her own family. There was no provision for the worship of the idols after the death of the grandson. On the death of the grandson, administration proceedings were taken and it was decided that out of the produce of the houses belonging to the estate of the testatrix, the worship of the idols should be performed and that the surplus should be paid equally to the three branches of the family. This was adopted in a decree of 1888 to which the respondents' branch was a party:

Held, 1) that there was no gift of the whole property to the idols: [p. 543, col. 1.]

(2) that no heritable shebaitship was established; [p. 563, col. 1.]

(3) that the representatives of the three beneficiaries under the Will were entitled to the residue absolutely and in equal shares: [p. 563, col. 1.]

(4) that the gift being a private trust section 92 of Civil Procedure Code did not apply and, therefore, the establishment of a scheme for its administration was inappropriate; and [p. 564, col. 1.]

(5) that the order in the administration suit was binding on all the parties and operated as res judicata. [p. 564, col. 1; p. 595, col. 1.]

Pearce v. Marriott, (1883) 22 Ch. D. 182 at p. 191; 48 L. T. 170; 52 L. J. Ch. 221; 31 W. R. 68, followed.

Consolidated appeals from a decree of the Calcutta High Court in its Ordinary Civil Jurisdiction, the suit having been heard by a Special Division Bench of two Judges to avoid the necessity of an appeal to the Appellate Jurisdiction of the Court.

FACTS.—One Gobinda Chandra Basak, a Hindu governed by the Bengal School of Hindu Law, died in 1810. He had two wives, Kanakmoni and Bhaggobati and had children by both. Bhaggobati alone survived her husband. She executed a Will which is the subject-matter of the present litigation and died in 1841. The Will was addressed to her grandson, Uday Chand. The respondents represent the branch of the children of Gobinda Chandra by Kanakmoni.

The provisions of the Will and the history relating to the conduct of the parties are fully set out in the judgment of Judicial Committee.

The present suit was brought by the first respondent for the construction of the Will and for a declaration that he was entitled to the shebaitship of the family idols.

The Division Bench of the High Court which tried the suit held that the respondents were not heirs of Bhaggobati and had no right to the shebaitship; that no heritable right of shebaitship was conferred upon Uday Chand by the Will; that the succession to the shebaitship opened on the death of Uday Chand; that the appellant Gopal Lal Sett and his brother were not entitled to succeed to the shebaitship and the properties. They directed that certain accounts should be taken, and that a scheme should be submitted for the approval of the Court by the persons declared to be sheb-its for carrying out the religious trusts of the Will.

Sir George Lowndes, K. O., Messrs. Barker and Dube for the Respondents representing the descendants of Kanakmoni.

Mr. Farikh for Khotia, a minor respondent, through his guardian ad litem.

JUDGMENT.

LORD BUCKMASTER.—The history of the litigation of which these appeals form part, extending over a period of sixty-five years, has been carefully and minutely examined in the judgment of the learned Judge of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, from which these appeals have been brought. Their Lordships, therefore, do not propose to attempt a repetition of the facts, except so far only as may be necessary to explain the reasons for the opinion they have formed.

Several questions of interest and of importance have indeed been raised and argued upon these appeals, but the true construction of the Will of the testatrix, Bhaggobati Dasi, lies at the threshold of the dispute, and, on the view taken by their Lordships of the true meaning of this document, these larger questions do not arise.

The testatrix, who died on the 29th May 1841, was the second wife, and at her death had been for thirty years the widow of one Gobind Chand Basak, a Hindu governed by the Bengal School of Hindu Law. By him she had had three sons and two daughters. The eldest of these sons was Pran Krishna Basak, who predeceased his mother and left two children, Monmohini Dasi and Uday Chand Basak. The second son, Joy Krishna, was found to be a person of unsound mind in 1838, but he was not a congenital lunatic. The third son, Raj Krishna, died in 1821, leaving no children. The eldest daughter, Tripura Sundari Dasi, died before her mother, leaving a son, Radha Kanta, and the second, Golap Dasi, or, as she is sometimes called, Golapmoni, survived. By the first marriage of Gobind Chand Basak there had been two sons, Radha Krishna Basak and Sri Krishna Basak, both of whom survived the widow, from them there have been numerous descendants, who will be referred to merely by way of description as the Basak Branch of the family. In truth, the real quarrel in the present case lies between the two branches of the same family descending from the two wives. Bhaggobati's Will was executed on the day of her death. Some question has arisen as to the true translation of the Will. The differences do not seem vital, but in any case their Lordships accept the official translation Exhibit A in the suit No. 711 of 1907. It is addressed to Uday Chand Basak, her grandson, and contains, on the face of it, the following statement:—

"Reliance on the feet of Sri Sri Hariji.

Joy Gopal,

Anandamoyi

Thakur n's.

Shiba Thakur's.

Gopal Lal Ji's."

This fact that it is addressed to Uday Chand is important to bear in mind in construing the provisions of the Will, for the duties that it imposes are clearly placed on him. It relates first to certain property which is referred to as the Company's Paper standing in the name of the testatrix and directs that out of the income "you" (that is Uday Chand) "shall perform the sheba (worship, &c.) of Sri Sri Iswar and the sheba of the ancestral Sri Sri Iswar, 'you' shall perform the sheba of the said Iswarjew out of the income of the ancestral garden called Iswar Gopal Lal Ji's garden, purchased in his name. 'You' shall be the person in charge of the sheba of all the deities." There is then introduced a separate and definite gift with regard to two houses, namely, a house at Chowringhee and a house at Paturiaghata, out of which was directed there should be performed the sheba of Sri Sri Iswarjew "as it is at present," and that the remainder of the income should be divided between three people, namely, Monmohini, Radha Kanta, the son of Tripura, and Golapmoni, thus making provision for each one of the surviving branches of her own family except Joy Krishna, who was insane. The testatrix then refers again to the balance of the interest accruing from the Company's Paper, and directs how that is to be dealt with in connection with religious services. There is no definite gift of the residue.

The first question that arises is, whether the gift is a gift to the idols, or whether there was a gift to any other person or persons charged with the maintenance of the idols. The Will is most obscure, but their Lordships think that there is certainly no direct gift of the whole property to the idols, nor in the circumstances ought one to be implied. It is consequently necessary to see in what capacity and by virtue of what right the worship of the idols is to be carried out. The person on whom the duty was cast was undoubtedly Uday Chand, and the conclusion which their Lordships have reached is that if, as they think, there is no gift to the idols it is only possible to give effect to the provisions of the Will by treating it as conferring the property upon Uday Chand. The Will is addressed to him; upon him throughout all the burdens of performing different duties are cast, and this necessarily involves the ownership of the property.

Their Lordships agree with the High Court in thinking that no heritable shebaitship was established by the Will. Uday Chand was to be shebait during his lifetime, and, so far as the sheba of Iswar Tarkari was concerned, he was directed to perform the ceremonies "according to the existing arrangements of the sheba" in concert with his step-mother, Shiba Sundari; but after his death no express provision was made for the worship, and the necessary duties will have to be performed by persons properly appointed for that purpose.

Although this has never been declared the true interpretation of the Will, it is the construction that has in effect been acted upon for a considerable period of time, for Uday Chand died on the 8th July 1844, and upon his death administration proceedings were instituted by Golap Dasi asking for the usual administration relief. It is unnecessary to pursue the whole course of this suit. Shiba Sundari was, on the 14th December 1857, appointed, jointly with the executors of Uday Chand, to take charge of the idols, and on her death on the 14th August 1858, members of the branch of the family known as the Basak Branch were introduced into the suit, and from that time down to now some of them have been associated with the performance of the duties.

The result of litigation and other expenses, however, has, as the Board is informed, completely exhausted the greater part of the moneys derived from the Company's Paper set apart for the worship of the idols, and the claim has consequently been put forward for the balance of the rents from the two houses, on the ground that the whole of the property was dedicated for the worship of the gods. It is unnecessary for their Lordships to determine whether the effect of the gift in the Will which gave the income of this specially appropriated property to the three named beneficiaries without any limitation of time would be sufficient to create an absolute gift, for, on the 14th December 1857, by an order made in the administration proceedings, the Court declared that out of the produce of the houses belonging to the estate of the testatrix, situate at Clowringhee and Pathuriaghata, the worship of Sri Joy Gopal should be performed, and that the surplus of the said produce should be paid as follows, namely, to the representatives of Radha Kanta Sett, deceased, one equal third part; to the representatives of Srimati Golap Dasi, deceased, one equal third part and to Srimati Monmohini during her lifetime and to her representatives after her death the remaining one equal third part or share. This order, although it contains no express words to that effect, amounts to a clear and effective declaration by the Court as to the absolute interests taken by each of the three named beneficiaries in the Will, for the payment to the representatives of the named beneficiaries admits of no other explanation, but to this order the Basak Branch of the family were not parties. They were, however, parties to a suit instituted in 1851, upon which an order was made on the 15th March 1852, when it was directed that the sum of Rs. 6,849 should be regarded as the surplus income derived from the property set apart for Sri Joy Gopal, and it was ordered that the trustees should divide and pay the same between the parties entitled in the proportions mentioned in the decree of the 14th December 1857, that is, to the representatives of the three named beneficiaries in equal shares. There has consequently been an order binding all parties, based upon the view that the property in which the three beneficiaries mentioned were interested was segregated from the rest of the estate and set apart for the upkeep of the named idol (Sri Joy Gopal Ji), the surplus belonging to them absolutely in equal shares. This disposes of the whole matter in dispute upon appeal. The learned Judges of the High Court who carefully examined all these proceedings, thought that the question as to the absolute interests of the three named beneficiaries had never been definitely raised and decided, and that the directions already mentioned were only made pending the administration suit. But there is no such limitation in the terms of the order, and such a direction given in an administration suit has the effect of an order binding all parties and determines the construction to which it gives effect, so that after the lapse of time necessary for appeal it becomes final and conclusive. [See Pearth v. Marriott (1).]

The questions raised as to whether Joy Krishna was prevented from inheriting by virtue of his lunacy, and the point decided by the High Court as to the true reading of the Dayabhaga do not arise, and their Lordships make no pronouncement upon these points. It is only necessary to add that both from the terms of the Will of Bhaggobati herself and from the information afforded by the documents, it would appear that one at least of the idols mentioned in the Will was ancestral, but even if that were the case their Lordships agree with the High Court in thinking that there is not sufficient evidence to prove any endowment prior to her death. Their Lordships see no reason to doubt that the Court executing the duty of appointing trustees would pay due regard to the claims of that branch of the family with whom the worship was established and by whom the services performed, but they regard the gift as in effect a private trust to which the provisions of section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure would not apply, and consequently the establishment of a scheme for its administration, as provided by the decree of the High Court, is inappropriate.

There remains nothing but the question of costs. The appellants have to a certain extent succeeded, but they have gained a barren victory; they have, moreover, taken 14 years to bring this matter before the Board since the judgment at the High Court. Their Lordships will, therefore, make no order as to their costs. The cross-appellants, represented by Sir George Lowndes, have failed. Mr. Parikh's client appears in the same interest. The only persons who have succeeded at all are the representatives of the three original beneficiaries; but although the point on which they succeed was undoubtedly raised and argued in the High Court, for reasons that it is not easy to understand, the point was never clearly and definitely raised before this Board, and no complaint was made by them against the judgment of the High Court, although it was adverse upon the point. There was, however, sufficient mention of the matter in the respondents' case to permit of its argument, and when argued no answer to it could be found. Their Lordships are not prepared in the circumstances to allow them any costs.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty, (1) that the Appeal No. 169 of 1919 should be allowed in part and the Cross-Appeal No. 170 of 1919 dismissed; (2) that the decree of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, dated the 10th day of January, 1908, should be varied by (a) discharging so much thereof as directs a scheme to be submitted for carrying out the trusts created by the Will of Srimati Bhaggobati Dasi deceased, (b) by declaring that according to the true construction of the said Will, the whole of the property of the testatrix, with the exception of the houses at Ohowringhee and Pathuriaghata, was given absolutely to her grandson, Uday Chandra Basak, charged with the performance of the worship of the deities mentioned in the said Will except the deity Sri Sri Iswarjew and (c) by further declaring that it appearing that by virtue of two decrees, dated the 14th day of December 1857, and the 15th day of March 1888, the residue of the income arising from the said houses has been directed to be paid in proportions to the three named beneficiaries, Monmohini, Radha Kanta and Golapmoni and their res-

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 65, 91—Secondary evidence—Contract reduced to writing—Promissory note.

The language of section 91 of the Evidence Act is uncompromising, and whenever the terms of a contract are reduced to writing and that writing is, for any reason, inadmissible in evidence, the promisee must lose his remedy. The test is whether there is a complete cause of action independently of the document which is inadmissible. [p. 568, col. 2.]

Where a suit is based on a promissory note which is alleged to have been lost, but the loss is not proved, secondary evidence of the promissory note cannot be given and the suit must be dismissed. [p. 568, col. 1.]

First appeal from a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Delhi, dated the 7th January 1918.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Appellant.
Dr. Gokal Chand Naring, Kanwar Dalip Singh, and Lala Amar Nath Ohona, for Mr. Anant Ram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appeal is by Ram Saran Das, Municipal Tax Inspector, Delhi, against a decree for Rs. 9,318, in favour of Tulsi Ram of Multan.

The basis of the suit was a promissory note alleged to have been executed by the defendant-appellant on the 7th December 1915. The plaintiff said that this sum was an ordinary cash loan and that the defendant agreed to pay interest at 60 per cent. per annum. He claimed Rs. 13,720-8-9, principal and interest up to the date of suit. The plaint was filed in the Court of the District Judge, Delhi, on 15th February 1917 and before the defendant's written statement was put in the following proceedings took place.

On the 26th February the plaintiff applied for attachment of the defendant's property before judgment. On the 28th February the property specified in the application was attached. On the 1st March objection was made by the defendant and Counsel for both parties were in Court. A statement was made to the Court on that day by Lala Madan Mohan Lal, Pleader, brother of the plaintiff and also his Counsel, that the original promissory note which had been filed with the plaint was no longer attached to it and that a copy had been substituted. Lala Ram Kishore Pleader, for the defendant, also stated, on instructions from his client, that the document on the record was not the original promissory note. The District Judge recorded the statements of these two gentlemen, those of four officials of his Court and that of the defendant. Counsel on both sides then stated that, despite the summary inquiry held by the District Judge about the promissory note, they desired the suit to be heard by him. Lala Madan Mohan Lal added that he had a copy of the original note which he would produce at the next hearing together with a receipt by the defendant and another document.

On the 5th March the defendant put in his written statement and admitted having signed a promissory note and a receipt for Rs. 8,000 in favour of the plaintiff in the following circumstances. Lala Madan Mohan

RAM SARAN DAS V. TULSI RAM.

Lal was anxious to secure a certain house adjoining that of the defendant. The house was to be sold by the owner Radha Lal to one Mahtab Rai. It was arranged that the defendant was to pre-empt and to transfer to Lala Madan Mohan Lal "for a reasonable price to be fixed by mutual settlement." The defendant accordingly bought the house from Radha Lal for Rs. 8,000 and Lala Madan Mohan Lal paid the price exclusive of a sum of Rs. 544 due to a mortgagee and a small item payable as house-tax. The promissory note and receipt were executed by way of security until such time as the house should be conveyed by the defendant to Lala Madan Mohan Lal. Owing to a dispute this conveyance was not effected.

The defendant pleaded that no suit could be brought on the promissory note, that Lala Madan Mohan Lal could recover the money paid by him for the house provided the agreement to sell to him was cancelled, and that in any case a suit brought not on the original promissory note but on a forgery must be dismissed. The defendant further denied any agreement to pay interest.

The parties were next examined. The plaintiff admitted that Radha Lal sold a house to the defendant, that he (plaintiff) was in possession of the house as a tenant, and that the lease was in the name of his brother, Lala Madan Mohan Lal. He repeated that the consideration for the promissory note was a cash loan and said that the writer of it was one Reoti Saran.

The defendant said that the note signed by him was not that in Court and that he had not read the note which he had signed.

The plaintiff filed three documents, (1) what is admitted to be the original receipt for Rs. 8,000, dated 7th April 1915, (2) a photograph which the plaintiff alleged was of the original promissory note, and (3) what he termed the office copy of the note.

The Court proceeded to frame issues as follows:—

1. Was there any agreement to pay interest? If so, at what rate?
2. Did the consideration Rs. 8,000 entered in the receipt not pass?

3. Was the pro note executed only as a security for an obligation to re-convey the house to Madan Mohan Lal?

4. Is the rate (presumably of interest) unconscionable?

5. To what relief is the plaintiff entitled?

The defendant's Counsel inspected the photograph and at his request a sixth issue was added.

6. Is the whole suit liable to dismissal owing to the original pro note having been tampered with by addition of words as regards interest?

On the 12th March, Lala Ram Kishore stated that his client asserted the words relating to interest to have been added after execution without his knowledge or consent. Lala Madan Mohan Lal replied that the words had been written at the same time by the same scribe "without any appreciable interval of time between the writing of the preceding pro note as to interest" and with the consent and knowledge of the defendant before he signed the note.

On the 15th April the suit was transferred to the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Delhi, and it was decided by Mr. Tapp's judgment, dated the 7th January 1913, now under appeal.

The finding on the first issue was in the affirmative. Mr. Tapp held also, (1) that the plaintiff or Lala Madan Mohan Lal had used the defendant for the acquisition of the house, (2) that the promissory note had been executed in order to show that the transaction was a genuine one, and (3) that the rate of interest was unconscionable. He gave the plaintiff a decree for the principal sum of Rs. 8,000 with interest at 12 per cent. per annum, Rs. 9,133 in all, plus future interest at 6 per cent. up to the date of payment.

There are cross-objections against both rates of interest. We have heard a great deal of argument upon what would be the two main points for decision in the appeal if it were held that secondary evidence of the contents of the promissory note was inadmissible, namely, whether the defendant agreed to pay interest and whether the plaintiff is not entitled to a decree of any kind because he has based his suit on a forged document. The learned Advocate for the defendant, however, contended throughout that unless it be held that the promissory note, on which the suit is based, has been lost no decree can be given to the plaintiff.

The judgment of the lower Court is not very satisfactory upon this question of loss and of the admissibility of secondary evidence. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the original note had been filed with the plaintiff and declined to decide the question of responsibility for its removal. He did not record a clear finding that the note had been lost. He may have thought that loss was admitted by the defendant before the case was transferred to him, and this may be the explanation of an order passed by him on 30th October 1917, that it was unnecessary to call evidence as to the loss of the promissory-note and of the following passage in his judgment:—

"It is not for me to determine how or by whom the document was removed, nor must I be taken as imputing blame in the matter to any one or making the least reflection on any of the persons concerned with the case. It is not necessary for me to do so, as for the purpose of deciding whether or not there has been any alteration, the photographs in the case have proved amply sufficient."

Elsewhere, however, he hints pretty strongly at an opinion that the note was removed from the record by or at the instance of the defendant. It appears to us that this was in fact his opinion and he might well have used plain language and said so.

We can find no trace of any admission by the defendant that the note has been lost and the defendant could scarcely have made such an admission without acquiescing in the imputation against him of theft. Moreover, at the first hearing of evidence in the lower Court on 23rd March 1917, specific objection was taken to the proof of the photograph as secondary evidence of the original.

The only evidence that the original note was filed with the plaintiff is the deposition of Lala Madan Mohan Lal, who is an interested party. The District Judge's Clerk of Court was examined as a witness and said that he did not know what documents were put in with the plaintiff. At the preliminary inquiry by the District Judge held on 1st March both the Court Ahlmad and an employed candidate declared that the document then attached was the one which had been filed with the plaintiff. These men were not put into the witness-box subsequently.

It has been contended for the plaintiff respondent that the lower Court refused to allow him to produce two other important witnesses on this point, the photographer who, he says, took the photograph at Mutan in August or September 1915 and a Pleader, Lala Chandar Bhan, who was present when the photograph was taken. Application was made for these witnesses to be summoned and they are said not to have been summoned because of the learned Subordinate Judge's decision on the 30th October 1917, already referred to, and that it was unnecessary to call evidence as to the loss of the promissory-note.

The plaintiff's explanation of how he came to possess a photograph of the note was given by Lala Madan Mohan Lal in the witness-box. He said that the photograph was taken "in August or September 1916" in connection with a partition of joint property between the two brothers in order to enable one to hold the original while the other kept a replica. He wished to examine the photographer and Lala Chandar Bhan in order that they might corroborate this story. If, however, they had done so their evidence would not have taken the case any further in the direction of proving loss. It might have helped to repel a suggestion that the plaintiff filed the original with the plaintiff, removed it substituting another document, and then had it photographed in order to conceal the method in which it had been tampered with; but it would not have proved that the note was lost after the date of presentation of the plaint, nor that the plaintiff did not file the copy in the first instance in order to manufacture evidence of loss.

The plaintiff has not seen fit to give evidence and we are left with nothing but the statement of his brother, Lala Madan Mohan Lal, unsupported by any Court official who handled the plaint, that the original note was put into Court with the plaint. The inferences in favour of the truth of this statement deduced by the learned Subordinate Judge from "attendant circumstances" do not impress us and it is unnecessary to repeat them.

Now, Lala Madan Mohan Lal, in the first place, is a person strongly interested in the subject-matter of the suit. Although the promissory-note was in his brother's name he has admitted that the debt which it purports to create is joint property of him-self and his brother. He also took a prominent part in the transactions of 17th December 1915, whatever their precise character was, and the house purchased on that day by the defendant is admittedly occupied by him.

In the second place, Lala Madan Mohan Lal has shown himself open to the accusation of having a treacherous memory. As Counsel for the plaintiff he stated in Court on 12th March 1917 that the disputed words "with interest, etc." had been written before the defendant's signature, and he had previously told an expert witness, Mr. Hardless, the same when he first took him the photograph for examination, so Mr. Hardless says. As a witness on the 13th August 1917 Lala Madan Mohan Lal said that, as far as he remembered, the defendant signed the paper before the promissory note was written out. On the 18th April 1917 he on the one side and the District Judge and his Reader on the other were found to disagree in their respective recollections of an explanation given when the photograph was first produced of how the plaintiff came to possess it, and the disagreement resulted in the suit being transferred by the learned District Judge to another Court. On the 13th August 1917 when cross-examined about a certain alleged relationship, Lala Madan Mohan Lal said that he did not know whether his father had a sister.

We are unable to hold on his uncorroborated statement that the original promissory note was filed with the plaint. In addition to the contradiction by two Court officials there is the fact which Lala Madan Mohan Lal himself admitted, and his admission was recorded, that on the 1st March the spurious note was found to have exactly the same number of pinholes in places corresponding as the list of documents filed which he attached to the plaint. It is not impossible, of course, that a person substituting another document may have been at pains to fabricate the pinholes, but it does not strike us as certain that he would do so.

We hold that the promissory note on which the suit was based is not proved to have been lost and that secondary evidence of its existence and contents, therefore, could not be given. The terms of the alleged contract of the 7th December 1915 by which the defendant agreed to pay the plaintiff Rs. 8,000 on demand in consideration of having received this sum having been reduced to the form of a document no evidence could be given of those terms except the document itself or secondary evidence of its contents (section 91, Indian Evidence Act).

It was held by a Division Bench of this Court in Gurdas Mal Singh v. Ishar Das (1), that the language of section 91 is uncompromising and that whenever the terms of a contract are reduced to writing and that writing is, for any reason, inadmissible in evidence, the promisee must lose his remedy. A large number of previous authorities were reviewed in the judgment including Sheikh Akbar v. Sheikh Khan (2). It was pointed out that the test was, "has the creditor a complete cause of action independently of the document which is inadmissible?" In the present case, according to the plaint, the alleged loan and the execution of the promissory note were simultaneous transactions and the contract for re-payment was embodied in the promissory note.

Following this ruling we held that the plaintiff is not entitled to any decree. It has been urged that he could be given a decree on the defendant's admission that he signed a promissory note for Rs. 8,000 and that he has acquired a house for which the greater part of the price of Rs. 8,000 was paid by the plaintiff. The first admission, however, is a piece of secondary evidence of the existence of the promissory note on which the suit is based and so cannot be taken into consideration. The second admission is not an admission of liability. In fact the defendant had denied what the plaintiff asserts, that a loan of Rs. 8,000 was made to him, and he has also denied that he is liable to pay this sum. Whether the plaintiff should receive any remedy by application of the doctrine of equity would depend upon an examination of the nature of the contract entered into between the parties and this cannot be proved.

We, therefore, accept the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Court, and order

Hindu Law—"Antecedent debt"—Debt secured by mortgage of joint property, whether antecedent—Son's pious obligation to pay father's debts—Doctrine, whether can be invoked during father's lifetime—Mitakshara—Alienation by co-parcener.

Under Hindu Law a debt to be "antecedent" must not only be antecedent to the alienation in time but must have been incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be available by such joint estate. [p. 571, col. 1.]

Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh, 89 Ind. Cas. 280; 89 A. 437; 21 C. W. N. 698; 1 P. L. W. 577; 15 A. L. J. 437; 19 Bom. L. R. 498; 26 O. L. J. 1; 33 M. L. J. 14; (1917) M. W. N. 439; 22 M. L. Therefore, a mortgage which is at its date an invalid deed in so far as it purports to encumber the joint family property cannot, on the principle of "antecedent debt," become a just and valid consideration for an alienation by the father of a Hindu joint family. [p. 570, col. 2; p. 571, col. 1.]

The doctrine of the "pious obligation" of a Hindu son to pay his father's debts cannot be invoked during the father's lifetime. Thus, the grandson's assets cannot be made liable for his grandfather's debts while the father is alive. [p. 571, col. 2.]

Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh, 89 Ind. Cas. 280; 89 A. 437; 21 C. W. N. 698; 1 P. L. W. 557; 15 A. L. J. 437; 19 Bom. L. R. 498; 26 O. L. J. 1; 33 M. L. J. 14; (1917) M. W. N. 439; 22 M. L. T. 22; 6 L. W. 213; 44 I. A. 126 (P. C.), referred to.

According to the Mitakshara Law, joint family property cannot be the subject of a gift, sale or mortgage by one co-parcener except with the consent, express or implied, of all the other co-parceners. Any deed of gift, sale or mortgage granted by one co-parcener on his own account of or over the joint family property is invalid, the estate is wholly unaffected by it, and stands entirely free of it. Appeal against a decision of their Lordships of the Allahabad High Court (Refique and Lindsay, J.J.), dated the 11th March 1919, and reported as 51 Ind. Cas. 119, reversing that of the First Sub-Judge, Meerut, dated the 31st March 1916.

JUDGMENT.

LORD SHAW.—This is an appeal from a decree, dated the 11th March 1919, of the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad, which varied a decree dated the 31st March 1916.

The suit was brought on the 24th July 1915 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Meerut. The plaintiffs were minors and sued through their guardian, Ram Singh.

No pedigree need be given. It is sufficient to bear in mind that Amar Singh succeeded on the death of his father, Nawal Singh, to a half of Nawal's property. This half, thus ancestral family property, was, at the date of the mortgage and sale after mentioned, the joint family property of Amar, of his two sons, Bharat and Kehar, and of Ram, son of Bharat, and Mahabir and Gajraj, the two sons of Kehar. This ancestral joint undivided estate was thus owned by two sons and three grandsons. The two sons as well as the three grandsons, the plaintiffs, were all alive at the date of the mortgage and sale after mentioned, and they are still alive. Amar, the grandfather, died in 1909.

On 23rd March 1904 Amar executed a mortgage over this family property for Rs. 8,000. It is a fact beyond dispute that Amar, whom the Subordinate Judge finds to have been a man of extravagant habits, not leading a moral life and addicted to drink, incurred this debt for his own personal purposes. It was, with the doubtful exception of Rs. 1,000 to be presently referred to, neither incurred nor used for family purposes or necessity, nor was it an antecedent debt. It was scheduled upon the mortgage as "Received in cash at the village before registration, Rs 1,000. Cash at the time of registration Rs. 7,000."

(As to the Rs. 1,000, the High Court has allowed it with certain interest as a good charge, and the respondents do not present any cross-appeal. The item may accordingly be dismissed from further consideration).

In short, Amar treated the property as his own and violated the well known rule of the Mitakshara, under which, as clearly laid down in Sahu Ram Ohandra v. Bhup Singh (1), joint family property "cannot be the subject of a gift, sale or mortgage by one co-parcener except with the consent, express or implied, of all the other co-parceners. Any deed of gift, sale or mortgage granted by one co-parcener on his own account of or over the joint family property is invalid, the estate is wholly unaffected by it, and it stands entirely free of it."

This law has been, in substance, repeated again and again. It is in entire accord with the ancient texts. It was accepted law long prior to Sahu Ram Ohandra's case (1), a convenient instance being Lord Watson's judgment in Mauho Parshad v. Mehrun Singh (2) and it has been followed by the cases after referred to.

The exception to this rule is where the consideration for the transaction is an antecedent debt of the vendor or mortgagor, and the judgment of Sir John Stanley on this part of the law in Chandraseo Singh v. Mata Prasad (3), and expressly affirmed by this Board in Sahu Ram Ohandra v. Bhup Singh (1), appears to this Board exactly to cover the present case.

Before passing from the mortgage, however, their Lordships desire to note that it was, by its terms, a usufructuary mortgage, and was for the period of ten years running from its date, that is, from 1907—1917. It is stipulated that, possession and occupation being given to the mortgagee:—

(1) 39 Ind. Cas. 280; 39 A. 437; 21 O. W. N. 698; 1 P. L. W. 557; 15 A. L. J. 487; 19 Bom. L. R. 438; 26 C. L. J. 1; 31 M. L. J. 14; (1917) M. W. N. 439, 22 M. L. T. 23; 6 L. W. 213; 44 I. A. 126 (P. O.).

(2) 18 O. 157; 17 I. A. 194; 5 Sar. P. O. J. 583; Rafique & Jackson's P. O. No. 121; 9 Ind. Dec. (N.S.) 10; P. O.

(3) 1 Ind. Cas. 479; 31 A. 176; 6 A. L. J. 263.

"The profits of the mortgaged land will be equal to the interest of the amount of mortgage until redemption of the mortgage.... Whenever, after the expiry of ten years, I, the executant, shall have paid the entire amount of mortgage in a lump sum to the mortgagee, I shall get the property mortgaged by me redeemed. I shall not have power to the redemption of the mortgage before the expiry of ten years."

Apparently, however, the profuse scale of the father's personal expenditure continued, and he was again willing to put, or attempt to put, in jeopardy the joint family property. Notwithstanding the ten years' provision of the usufructuary mortgage, he (Amar Singh) within three years from its date—namely, on the 16th July 1907—sold his equity of redemption in the property to the mortgagees for Rs. 13,500. In the specification of the consideration as "allowed credit," to the vendees for the Rs. 80.0 obtained from the mortgage, and the balance was put down,

"Received in cash at the time of the registration."

Beyond all question with regard to this latter sum, here was a sale in flat defiance of the law. For what, it is not pretended to be any family purpose or necessity, he had improperly and illegally sold the family property; and such a sale cannot stand.

This case is singularly clear because it is not affected by other considerations such as the property having been publicly sold; there are no rights of execution-creditors or auction purchasers to be considered.

But an argument was submitted, supported by the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, to the effect that although by the rules of the Mitakshara Law a mortgage is at its date an invalid deed in so far as purporting to encumber the joint family property, yet when it purports to become the consideration for a sale, it then becomes a just and a legal consideration on the principle of "antecedent debt." The family property could not be affected by such an invalid mortgage, but it could be sold next year or next day to the mortgagee for an 'antecedent' debt—namely, the mortgage debt itself! Thus by turning the 'antecedent debt' simply into a debt 'antecedent' to the sale, the whole doctrine of 'antecedent debt' is reduced ad absurdum, the principle of the Mitakshara Law is circumvented, and the rights of the junior members of a Hindu family are no longer protected but can be easily destroyed. Their Lordships cannot hold that this is in accordance with law. The views of the Board have been expressed quite recently in Sahu Ram Chandra's case (1), and in Jogi Das v. Ganga Ram (4) about to be referred to.

As to the matter of the antecedency of debts, it is clear beyond question that the antecedency is antecedency to the mortgage itself. And it is more than that—it is disconnection with the mortgage in fact as well as in time. In no other way can the law of Indian joint family property protect itself against being undermined.

These sentences from Sahu Ram Chandra's case (1) may be quoted as particularly applicable to the circumstances of this appeal:—

"In their Lordships' opinion these expressions, which have been the subject of so much difference of legal opinion, do not give any countenance to the idea that the joint family estate can be effectively sold or charged in such a manner as to bind the issue of the father, except where the sale or charge has been made in order to discharge an obligation not only antecedently incurred, but incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be available by such joint estate. The exception being allowed, as in the state of the authorities it must be, it appears to their Lordships to apply, and to apply to the case where the father's debts have been incurred irrespective of the credit obtainable from immoveable assets which do not personally belong to him but are joint family property. In their view of the rights of a father and his creditors, if the principle were extended further, then the exception would be made so wide as in effect to extinguish the sound and wholesome principle itself, namely, that no manager, guardian, or trustee can be entitled for his own purposes to dispose of the estate which is under his charge."

(4) 42 Ind. Cas. 791; 21 C. W. N. 957; (1917) M. W. N. 739 (P. C.).

The law thus laid down was followed in Lachhman Prasad v. Sarinom Singh (5). Further, to employ the re une made by the learned Judge of the High Court:—

The point was again considered by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Jogi Das v. Ganga Ram (4) where Lord Haldane interpreted the judgment in the case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) as follows:—"In that case it was laid down in effect that joint property could not be alienated as against co-shareers by way of mortgage, or otherwise except for necessity, or for payment of an actual antecedent debt, quite distinct from the debt incurred in the mortgage itself and that in consequence the transaction in that case could not stand, and it was added that the mere circumstance of a pious obligation does not validate the mortgage."

This body of law is rightly followed and applied by the High Court, and their Lordships fully approve of the judgment delivered.

A separate and protracted argument was laid before the Board to the effect that the respondents, the grandsons of Amar Singh, are not entitled to have their property against his invalid proceedings by reason of 'pious obligation.' It is sufficient to say that no such doctrine can be invoked in the circumstance of the present case. In Sahu Ram Chandra's case (1) a similar appeal to the 'pious obligation' doctrine was made during the father's lifetime, and the point was thus dealt with:—

"While the father, however, remains in life, the attempt to affect the sons' and grandsons' shares in the property in respect merely of their pious obligation to pay off their father's debts; and not in respect of the debt having been truly incurred for the interest of the estate itself, which they with their father jointly own... must fail; and the simplest of all reasons may be assigned for this, namely, that before the father's death he may pay off the debt, or after his death there may be ample personal estate belonging to the father himself out of which the debt may be discharged. In short, responsibility to meet the father's (5) 40 Ind. Cas. 284; 39 A. 500; 15 A. L. J. 584; 2 P. L. W. 29; 21 C. W. N. 990; 33 M. L. J. 39; 19 Bom. L. R. 646; 6 C. L. J. 97; (1917) M. W. debts is one thing and the validity of a mortgage over the joint estate is quite another thing."

In the present case the doctrine is invoked against grandsons and in the lifetime of sons.

Nothing more need be said. The invocation of the doctrine entirely fails.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be refused with costs.

JUDGMENT.—These two connected second appeals arising out of the same suit have been referred for decision to a Bench as involving an important question of interpretation of Article 134 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act. The suit was one for redemption of a mortgage of a nine-pie share in two villages executed by one Rachhpal Singh in favour of Balka an Singh.
Both parties to the transaction are long since dead and the plaintiffs are the representatives of the mortgagor. There were sixty eight defendants to the suit and it is owing to the difficulty of effecting service of process on all these persons that this litigation has been pending for more than seven years. The suit was instituted on the 15th November 1914. There were two appeals to the Court below and though filed in 1917

BIJAI PARTAB SINGH V. RAGHURAJ SINGH.

were not decided till February 1921. The fact that the delay occurred chiefly in the lower Appellate Court seems to point to the desirability of some amendment of our rules for the service of process on the lines of that adopted by the Allahabad High Court.

The defendants Nos. 1 to 33 are representatives of the original mortgagees. The defendants Nos. 34 to 42 are representatives of the mortgagor who have not joined in the suit. The defendants Nos. 43 to 63 are transferees from some of the first 33 defendants. Two appeals have been filed to this Court. Appeal No. 143 of 1921 is by certain transferees. Appeal No. 144 of 1921 is by 21 of the representatives of the mortgagees.

The sole question for decision in Appeal No. 143 is the construction of Article 134. The memorandum of appeal in Appeal No. 144 filed by the mortgagees raises five pleas, none of which has been pressed in the precise form in which they appeared in the grounds of appeal. The pleas actually pressed have been—

1. That the mortgage created an under-proprietary right which entitled the mortgagees to retain actual possession of the share even after redemption.

2. That the mortgagor's right was extinguished by a compromise between the parties in connection with certain litigation in the year 1884.

3. That even if that compromise is not legally valid its effect was to make the possession of the defendants adverse from the date of its execution.

The appellants' Counsel contends that these pleas are covered by his second ground of appeal which runs—

"Because in a suit for redemption the plaintiff must prove prima facie that the mortgage is redeemable on the date of the institution of the suit."

On the question of construction of Article 134 the only difference between the parties in this Court has been one of the burden of proof. Both parties accept the view laid down in Drigpal Singh v. Kallu (1) that a person who purchases from a mortgagee with full knowledge that the latter has only a mortgagee's right cannot claim the benefit of the Article even though the sale may ostensibly be one of full proprietary right. Both parties equally accept the view that a person who purchases a right which he honestly believes to be full proprietary right and which is so described in the deed of sale can claim the benefit of the Article, even though by the exercise of diligence he might have discovered that his transferor was only a mortgagee. In other words, both parties accept the principle that the mere constructive notice without actual knowledge is not sufficient to deprive the purchaser of the benefit of the Article. In this case there is no evidence and no finding of the Courts below that the transferees had actual knowledge that their transferors were mere mortgagees. All the transfers in question purported to transfer full proprietary right. The case has been decided by both the Courts below on this footing. A doubt was suggested in argument before us as to one of them, Exhibit VVI, but we have examined the document and there is no doubt that it purports to be a transfer of full proprietary interest. The appellants contend that it was for the plaintiffs who allege that these transfers were something other than they purported on their face to be, to show that the purchasers had knowledge of the real state of affairs. The plaintiffs, on the other hand, contend that it was for the transferees who claimed the benefit of Article 134 to prove affirmatively that they were ignorant of the real state of the mortgagors' title.

As Appeal No. 143 has been referred to this Court for an authoritative decision on the question involved it is desirable to say that the position accepted by the parties is that to which the authorities lead. The lower Appellate Court has based its decision on a finding that the transferees did not take in good faith as defined in the Limitation Act, because they might if they had made proper enquiries have ascertained the true state of facts; in other words, they had constructive notice. The definition of "good faith" in section 2 (1) provides that "nothing shall be deemed to be done in good faith which is not done with due care and attention." The words "good faith" do not, however, occur in Article 134. They do occur in the corresponding provision of the Acts of 1859 and 1871 but were omitted in the Limitation Acts of 1877 and 1908. There is no justification for reading into the Act words which were deliberately omitted from it. A purchaser who bought what purported to be and what he believed to be full proprietary right cannot be deprived of the benefit of the Article by failure to make enquiries as to the true state of the title.

(1) 30 Ind. Cas. 956; 37 A. 660; 13 A. L. J. 945.

The rule laid down in Drigpal Singh v. Kallu (1) and Mahbub Ali v. Muhammad Husain (2) that a purchaser who buys knowing full well that he is buying a mortgagee's right is not entitled to the benefit of the Article may be based on two distinct grounds.

The first is that stated by the Privy Council in Radanath Doss v. Gisborne & Co. (3) a case decided under the Act of 1859. Their Lordships say: "What is the meaning of the term 'purchaser' in this section? It cannot be a person who purchases a mortgagee's right as a mortgage, because that would be merely equivalent to the assignment of a mortgage."

The second is that where the transferor and transferee combine to represent what is really a mortgagee's right as proprietary right they are really combining to practise a fraud upon the true owner and no party is entitled to take advantage of his own fraud.

Neither of these considerations applies to the case of mere constructive notice without actual knowledge. This is also the view taken by the Bombay High Court in Pandu v. Vithu (4).

The burden of proof, in our opinion, lay on the plaintiffs and not on the defendants. It is for the person who asserts that a transaction was something different from what, on the face of it, it purports to be to substantiate that assertion. The transactions impugned are transactions which, on the face of them, are exactly covered by the language of the Article. The plaintiffs seek to take the case out of the Article by alleging a special fact, namely, knowledge on the part of the transferees that the vendor's title was that of a mortgagee. They must prove the fact on which they rely. The Court cannot accept the mere allegation as sufficient, nor can it assume without evidence that the transferees were endeavouring to perpetrate a fraud. In one of the cases most relied on by the respondents both in this Court and in the lower Court, Drigpal Singh v. Kallu (1), it is suggested in the judgment that one reason for the omission of the words "in good faith" from the Act of 1877 was that their retention would have thrown on the transferee the onus of proving that he had no knowledge of his vendor's title. The learned Judges point out that this would be in many cases a hardship on the person in possession of the property and that, he would have to prove a negative possibly after the lapse of many years. The view of the learned Judges clearly was that though proof of knowledge of the true state of the title would take the suit out of the operation of the Article 134 such knowledge must be proved like any other fact which it was necessary to establish in order to enable the plaintiffs to succeed.

Appeal No. 143 must, therefore, be allowed. We have dealt with this appeal on the assumption that proper enquiry would have satisfied the transferees that what they were purchasing was merely a mortgagee's right, as this is a finding of fact of the lower Appellate Court which is binding on us in second appeal. In view of the compromise of 1886 to which we shall have to refer in dealing with Appeal No. 144 we should be disposed to hold, if the matter were open, that it is very doubtful whether enquiry would have led them to any such conclusion.

The only substantial plea pressed in Appeal No. 144 is that of adverse possession. The first two require very little discussion. The mortgage was what is known as a biwi mortgage. This is described in Sykes (Compendium on Talukdari Law, page 193) as "a special class of mortgage by the proprietor to a cultivator of the latter's holding for a sum of money paid down." Generally a low rent called piramsana was reserved which represented the difference between the interest due on the money and the full rent. Such was the case with the mortgage in suit. The full rent of the holding was Rs. 182 15 6. The mortgage provided that the mortgagee should retain Rs. 127.6.0

in lieu of interest and Rs. 2-7-6 on account of jarawal (winter clothing) and pay the balance of Rs. 53-2-0 to the mortgagor as paramana or rent. On redemption the mortgagor was to get back his deed and full rent was to become payable. The appellants rely on the fact that biswi is described by Sykes as an under-proprietary tenure. The same authority makes it clear, however, that it was an under-proprietary tenure subject to redemption. This is stated more explicitly in an authority to which the appellants themselves have referred us, Col. MacAndrew's "Some Revenue Matters, chiefly in the Province of Oudh," published in 1866. Col. MacAndrew was Commissioner of Sitapur at the time. Speaking of the tenure, he says, that it differs from all other under-proprietary tenures in being liable to redemption, and he goes on to say that in his opinion a mistake was made in describing these tenures as under-proprietary at all in the Settlement Records and that, it would have been better to treat them as simple mortgages. There is absolutely nothing in the terms of the deed in suit to warrant the suggestion that a permanent under-proprietary right was conferred by it.

The second and third pleas are based on the same transaction. In the year 1885 the mortgagor instituted a suit for redemption of the mortgage now in dispute (Exhibit 4). This was in the lifetime of the original mortgage. The parties came to terms and by a compromise dated 27th February 1886 it was provided.—

First, that the defendants would pay the Government revenue and certain other expenses.

Second, that the defendants should remain in possession with under-proprietary right paying thirteen per cent. of the Government revenue as malikana allowance to the mortgagee.

Third, that the share in suit should be included in mahal Hasanpur Partii.

Fourth, that the property should not be liable to redemption, and Fifth, that if the defendants fail to pay the thirteen per cent. haq malikana it should be recoverable from their moveable and immoveable property.

Unfortunately for the defendants the plaintiff mortgagor had failed to pay the full Court fees on his plaint. An order was passed to the effect that if the plaintiff paid into Court the amount found due on the mortgage and made up the deficiency in Court-fees a decree for redemption should be passed in his favour. This order was passed on 11th February 1883 before the parties had come to terms. After the compromise was effected the plaintiff, probably thinking that as the matter had been settled it would be a useless expense to pay additional Court-fees, failed to make up the deficiency with the result that instead of the decree being passed in terms of the compromise the suit was dismissed for non-payment of Court-fees. The effect of this was that the compromise, not having been embodied in a decree of the Court, remained invalid for want of registration. These facts are not disputed by the learned Counsel for the appellants and though he had announced as his second plea that the mortgage was extinguished by virtue of this compromise he was unable, when it came to the point, to contend in view of the provisions of sections 17 and 49 of the Registration Act that the two unregistered applications put in by the parties embodying the terms of the compromise could confer a right in immovable property. As their Lordships of the Privy Council remarked in a recent case [Ettisham Ali v. Jamna Prasad (5)] "when a deed of sale has been once executed and registered it can only be avoided by a subsequent registered transfer." The original mortgage in this case was, it is true, not registered, but that is because it was executed at a time when no law requiring registration was in force.

In their grounds of appeal the appellants took a plea that the dismissal of the previous suit for redemption barred the present suit under the rule of res judicata, but as they had taken a similar plea in the Court below and then abandoned it they have not pressed it here. They do, however, contend that the effect of the compromise was to make their possession adverse from its date. They fully accept the principle that curing the continuance of the mortgage no act of the mortgagee alone can make his possession adverse but they contend that where both parties have treated the mortgage as termi-

ated the case stands on a different footing. Mahendra Bahadur Singh v. Ohantrapal Singh (6) is a direct authority in their favour. The facts were very similar to those of the present case and are indistinguishable in principle. The mortgagor had effected an out and out sale of the mortgaged property to the mortgagees but, as in the present case, the deed in which the transaction was embodied was invalid for want of registration. The learned Judicial Commissioner held that from the date of the deed the possession of the mortgagees became adverse. He said:—

"The law is that no act of a mortgagee can by itself change the character of the possession which was originally acquired.

"But in the present case the facts are different. The act upon which the defendant-appellant relies was not his own act but was an act to which both the mortgagor and the mortgagees were parties. This is not a case of mere repudiation of the mortgagor's title or mere assertion of adverse title by a mortgagee in possession. It seems to me that it must be held that from the date on which these two documents were executed, that is to say, on the 21st of November 1889, the possession of the defendant-appellant became adverse to the mortgagor. The possession of a grantee under a void grant is adverse to the grantor."

The respondents raised a preliminary objection to the plea being heard on the ground that it was not explicitly taken in the grounds of appeal.

The plea was directly raised in the Trial Court and an issue was framed on it. Issue No. 18 ran:—

"Have the defendants been in adverse possession of the property in suit for more than twelve years before the suit?"

It was also raised in the first ground of appeal to the Court below. If not directly raised it was clearly implied in the first ground of appeal to this Court which was that the plaintiff's suit is barred by the rule of twelve years' limitation. Even if we considered that it was not stated with sufficient clearness in that ground we should be prepared to allow the appellants to urge it under O. XLII, r. 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure. To prevent any possibility of the respondent being taken by surprise we offered to allow their learned advocates further time to prepare his arguments on his point, but he stated that he did not require. Apart from this technical objection he relies on the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Khairajinal v. Daim (7) that as between mortgagor and mortgagee—

"Neither exclusive possession by the mortgagees for any length of time short of the statutory period of sixty years, nor any acquiescence by the mortgagor not amounting to a release of the equity of redemption, will be a bar or defence to a suit for redemption if the parties are otherwise entitled to redeem."

The circumstances relied on as establishing adverse possession are stated on page 311* of the report. They were that no accounts had been demanded by or rendered to the mortgagors or their representatives, no payments of subsistence money which they were entitled to under the mortgages had been made to them and the parties after the sale ceased to cultivate the land, and left the village, and renewed pattas had been granted to the nominees of the mortgagees. The present case is not one of acquiescence at all. It is a case of direct release by the mortgagor of the equity of redemption though that release was not clothed in the appropriate legal form. The observations of their Lordships deal only with a plea of acquiescence and not with the case of a direct renunciation of his right on the part of the mortgagor. The effect of the compromise was that both parties, the mortgagor as well as the mortgagee, treated the mortgagee right as having come to an end and the mortgagee as holding in adverse under proprietary right. It is difficult to see what more could be required in order to render the mortgagee's possession adverse. We think, therefore, that the mortgagees are entitled to succeed on this issue.

The result is that we allow both appeals and dismiss the suit with costs in favour of the appellants in all Courts.

JUDGMENT.—This judgment will dispose of two connected appeals and one criminal revision. Two persons, namely, Salig Ram and Kunj Lal, have been convicted under section 304, Part II, Indian Penal Code, for having caused the death of Jowinda Mal, and have been sentenced to 'five years' rigorous imprisonment each. They have both appealed to this Court, while Durga Das, complainant, has filed a petition for enhancement of their sentences on the ground that the offence committed by them was one falling under section 302, Indian Penal Code. I have heard Pandit Sheo Narain on behalf of Salig Ram, appellant, Mr. Mool Chand for Kunj Lal, appellant, and Mr. Dhanraj Shah in the revision petition.

The facts of the case are given at length in the judgment of the Trial Court and are briefly as follows:—Kunj Lal is the son of Jowinda Mal, deceased, from his first wife. The relations between father and son were strained, because Jowinda Mal had children from his second wife, whom he favoured, and was displeased with Kunj Lal, whose mother had died about 14 years ago. He did not allow Kunj Lal to share the business of cloth merchants which he was carrying on jointly with his brothers. On the 20th December 1921, Jowinda Mal was going home from his shop about 7 P. M. when he was assaulted and beaten with dangs in Bhadarkali Lane, inside Lahore City. He was removed to his house, which was not far from the place where he was assaulted, and the next day at 1 P. M. a report was made to the Police by Durga Das, brother of the deceased, in which it was stated that Jowinda Mal had been beaten by Kunj Lal and by one other who was a friend of the latter. The injuries of the deceased were examined by Lieutenant Clarke, Assistant Surgeon, who detailed them in a certificate which he gave to the relations of the deceased, and which was produced before the Police at the time of the report. It showed that the deceased had altogether six injuries on his person, three of which were on the head and three on the other parts of the body, all caused by some blunt weapon. One of the injuries on the head was described as serious, and probably led to Jowinda Mal's death five or six days later. The Police started investigation on the very day when the report was made and the Sub-Inspector, Mr. Muhammad Asghar, (P. W. No. 8), recorded the statement of the deceased with regard to his injuries, in which Jowinda Mal stated that he had been assaulted by four or five persons including Kunj Lal and Salig Ram, but that he had not identified the other men, who seemed to be Muhammadans. After taking down this statement, the Sub-Inspector thought that the condition of the deceased was precarious and he asked a Magistrate, Mr. Abdur Rahim, (P. W. No. 3) to come and take down the statement of Jowinda Mal regarding his assailants. The Magistrate came and questioned the deceased and took down his statement, which was practically the same as had already been made to the Sub-Inspector. In the first report Hari Chand and Fakir Chand had been mentioned, as witnesses of the occurrence and in the two statements which Jowinda Mal made to the Sub-Inspector and the Magistrate, respectively, he mentioned the name of Fakir Chand only, though it was said that others also had seen the occurrence. It is unfortunate, however, that Hari Chand was not produced as a witness in Court and Fakir Chand who had been cited and was present was given up. One Muhammad Bakhsh was produced who did not profess to have seen anything and only stated that he had seen Jowinda Mal lying injured. The only man who professed to be an eye witness in Court was Jiwan Lal (P. W. No. 4). He deposed that he had seen Kunj Lal and Salig Ram and three other men, whom he did not identify and who seemed to be Muhammadans, beat Jowinda Mal with sticks. Durga Das was also examined as P. W. No. 1 and stated that the information given by him in his report was obtained by him from the deceased, who told him about 9 P. M. on the same evening on which he was injured and soon after the assault, that he had been beaten by Kunj Lal and Salig Ram and others. He added that at the time of making the report he forgot to mention the name of Salig Ram and also to say that there were other assailants besides the two. The statements as regards his injuries, made by Jowinda Mal, to the Sub-Inspector and M. Abdur Rahim have been proved by the production of both these witnesses and, with the exception of the statement of Jiwan Mal, constitute the main evidence for the prosecution in this case.

KUNJ LAL V. EMPEROR.

It is contended by the learned Counsel for Salig Ram, appellant, that there is no evidence worth the name against his client. He argues that the evidence of Jiwan Lal should not be relied upon because he does not appear to be a genuine eye witness. He is not only not mentioned in the first report as a man who saw anything, but even the two statements which have been treated as dying declarations do not make any mention of him though it is shown by the statement recorded by M. Abdur Rahim that Jiwan Lal was present when the deceased was describing the incident. After having thus criticised Jiwan Mal, Mr. S. C. Narain proceeds to attack the dying declarations so far as their effect against his client is concerned. He says that the weight that ordinarily attaches to such statements is not present in this case, because there is nothing to show that the deceased thought that he was dying, beyond the apprehension which the Sub-Inspector entertained at the time he got the statement of the deceased recorded by the Magistrate. He also urges that it should be presumed from the first report, which was made after considerable delay, that till the time that the report was made the name of Salig Ram was not given out by the deceased, who mentioned it only at the time of making his statement to the Sub-Inspector and repeated the same to M. Abdur Rahim and this, he says, must have been due to some erroneous impression. He suggests that Jiwan Mal, who has had some litigation with the father of Salig Ram, and is on bad terms with the latter, might have put the notion into the mind of the deceased that the friend of Kunj Lal, about whose identity he was not clear, was Salig Ram, and if, under these circumstances, Jowinda Mal named Salig Ram much importance should not be attached to his naming him, because it may be due only to accepting the suggestion made to him and not because he had really identified Salig Ram. He, therefore, argues that his client is entitled to acquittal because, on the facts referred to above, a substantial doubt in his favour is created even if the dying declarations are believed to be correct and are given effect to, though he adds that they are not dying declarations properly speaking.

Mr. Mool Chand, on behalf of Kunj Lal, says that if the evidence of Jiwan Mal is eliminated, as it is doubtful that he had seen anything, then the statements of the deceased are the only things remaining against the appellants. He points out that the statements of the deceased were, according to the prosecution witnesses, made on several occasions. Firstly, those made by him during the night to Durga Das and other people as to who his assailants were; secondly, the account of the occurrence given by him to the Sub-Inspector, and, thirdly, a similar account given by him to M. Abdur Rahim, Magistrate.

With regard to the earliest statement, Mr. Mool Chand says that the prosecution have produced none of the other persons who saw the deceased on the evening in question and have contented themselves only with the testimony of Durga Das on the point. He says that Durga Das should not be regarded as independent and reliable, that he is not independent because he may be interested in depriving his nephew, Kunj Lal, of the share of the property of the deceased, and that he is not reliable because he exaggerates his statements in Court and improves on what his brother had told him. He has given a good deal beyond the information he gave in the first report and made the addition of the name of Salig Ram when giving his evidence in Court.

As regards the statements made by the deceased to the Sub-Inspector and the Magistrate and recorded by each one of them, Mr. Mool Chand raises a technical objection against them. He says that these statements should have been proved by questioning the witnesses to whom they were made as to what the deceased told them, and should not have been proved by simply showing them their recorded statements and proving them as if they were documents which could be proved as such under section 91 of the Evidence Act. In this connection he refers to King-Emperor v. Mathura Thakur (1) in which the following observations were made by Taylor, J.:

"Witnesses should not be allowed to prove a dying declaration as if it is a substantial piece of evidence in the case. The relevant fact to be proved is the statement made by a deceased person admissible under section 32 of the Evidence Act, and that statement is not the document made by the Magistrate but the verbal statement made by the deceased person."

"The only way of proving a dying declaration is by the evidence of some witness who heard it made, the witness being at liberty to refresh his memory by referring to the note made by him or read over by him at or about the time the statement is made."

He also refers to Samiruddin, In the matter of the petition of (2) in which also the principle referred to above was recognised as sound.

He further refers to Gouridas Namasudra v. Emperor (3) which is a ruling similar to the two already mentioned. He, therefore, argues that these dying declarations should be excluded from consideration and his client should be acquitted. He argues, in the alternative, that even if the dying declarations are treated as evidence, they should not be believed, because the time when the deceased was assaulted was a dark December evening, which was also cloudy, and, therefore, it is probable that the deceased, on being suddenly assaulted, could not identify his assailants and the name of Kunj Lal probably was introduced because suspicion fell on him. He says that on a former occasion, when fire had been set to the shop which Jowinda Mal and his brothers and their father owned, suspicion had fallen, though wrongly, on Kunj Lal and, therefore, there is nothing strange in his being suspected again. He also urges that the deceased not having had any scruples about adding to his story as time elapsed made himself further unworthy of credit.

Mr. Niaz Ali replying to the above arguments on behalf of the Crown says the dying declarations are worthy of belief and that the technical objections raised against them by Mr. Mool Chand should not result in their exclusion. He argues that it is shown clearly by the evidence on the record, both of medical men as well as of laymen, that the deceased was capable of speaking after the first shock of his injuries was over and continued to be so. He mentioned his assailants to his brother, then to the Sub-Inspector and then to the Magistrate. All the three witnesses have been produced in Court and examined to prove those statements and if there is any defect in the form in which the depositions of the two witnesses last referred to have been recorded, that should not take away from the effect of that testimony. He points out that in the case reported as Gouridas Namasudra v. Emperor (3) what happened was that an attempt was made to treat a dying declaration as proved, simply by the production of the magisterial record of it, without producing the Magistrate as a witness. It was held by the Calcutta High Court that the record was not proved by him and that in that case the recorded statement was rightly held to be not proved, but such is not the case here. Here, the Magistrate as well as the Sub-Inspector have been duly put into the witness box. He cites Ghazi v. Emperor (4) which was a case in which a statement of a dying man recorded in Hospital by a Magistrate was brought on the record without the Magistrate having been summoned to prove it and it was pointed out by the learned Judges of the Chief Court that it should have been proved by taking the statement of the Magistrate. He goes on to argue that as to the credibility of these statements there should be no doubt, because it does not stand to reason that the deceased could have failed to identify his own son, even if it was dark at the time and it is also unlikely that he would falsely name his own son in such a serious case in spite of relations between him and the son being strained. As regards Salig Ram, he says that he was the man described in the first report as a friend of Kunj Lal, and it is possible that the memory of Durga Das failed him at the time of making the report so far as the name of this appellant was concerned.

After carefully considering the arguments addressed to me on both sides, I am of opinion that the appeal of Kunj Lal must be rejected and that of Salig Ram must be accepted. I share the doubts expressed on behalf of the appellants as to the genuineness of Jiwan Mal as an eye-witness and do not, therefore, attach any weight to his evidence in this case, but I regard the statements made by the deceased as to his principal assailant, namely, his son Kunj Lal, first of all to his brother Durga Das, then to the Sub-Inspector, and then to the Magistrate, as quite credible and entitled to every weight. The statement made to Durga Das about Kunj Lal is proved by Durga Das in Court. I hold that probably the only name mentioned by the deceased at first was that of Kunj Lal and that is the reason why that is the only name which was mentioned in the first report. I do not think it likely that Durga

Das would have forgotten the name of Salig Ram if it had been given to him. It is true that Durga Das in Court states that the deceased had mentioned both Kunj Lal and Salig Ram from the very outset, but I am not prepared to believe that part of his story, because it is contradicted by the first report made by him. I have no doubt that he is telling the truth so far as Kunj Lal is concerned. There is, therefore, this piece of evidence against Kunj Lal to which no such technical objections can be raised as have been raised against the two recorded statements, proved by the evidence of the Sub-Inspector and the Magistrate. As to these, I think, Mr. Mool Chand's criticism is valuable and I wish to take this occasion of drawing the attention of the learned Magistrate to the rule laid down in King-Emperor v. Mathura Thakar (1) as to the manner in which statements purporting to be dying declarations should be recorded. But in view of the fact that in the case before me the two witnesses to whom the statements were made by the deceased have been produced in Court and were available for cross-examination, I do not see that the defect in the form in which these statements were taken down destroys their value to such an extent as to make it necessary to exclude them from consideration. There is no reasonable doubt left in my mind as to the truth of the dying declarations of the deceased so far as Kunj Lal is concerned and I dismiss Kunj Lal's appeal.

As regards Salig Ram, I am not prepared to say that the deceased told a deliberate lie when he named Salig Ram before the Sub-Inspector and the Magistrate. It is quite possible that owing to the serious injury that he had received to his brain the name of the other man escaped his memory and at the time of giving instructions to his brother he could not tell anything more than that Kunj Lal was accompanied by a friend of his. He may have recollected the name at the time the Sub-Inspector arrived. It is quite possible that Salig Ram may have been the companion of Kunj Lal, referred to in the first report, but it is conceivable that the deceased may have readily accepted a suggestion coming from a man like Jiwan Mal, who is admittedly hostile to Salig Ram and may have given this name owing to the suggestion thus received. Thus a doubt in favour of Salig Ram is created which is strengthened by the absence of his name from the first report, and also by the absence of motive on his part to join the assault. It is also significant and may be mentioned for whatever it is worth; that I find, on reference to the Police diaries, that the earliest statement of Jiwan Mal contained no mention of Salig Ram but simply gave the name of Kunj Lal. This lends colour to the theory that the addition of the name of Salig Ram and the statement that two or three other men took part in the affair are developments of the case, which cannot be easily treated as reliable. Therefore, I acquit Salig Ram, giving him the benefit of the doubt.

Coming to the petition of enhancement I do not think much need be said on the point after the view of the case I have taken above. It may be mentioned that the plea urged on behalf of the complainant-petitioner was that the assault was made with the intention of committing murder and, therefore, deserved the punishment provided for that offence, but the circumstances of the case do not lead to that conclusion. I have seen the plan on the record, which shows that there are other lanes leading to the house of the deceased and there is nothing to show that any assailant of his could have known which of those he would pass through on his way home on that particular evening. Moreover, I have no doubt that there were not more than two men concerned in the assault, as shown by the first report. The mentioning of four or five persons was an exaggeration and after-thought simply to increase the gravity of the offence. The real facts as to how the assault was committed or what preceded the assault cannot be possibly known. Moreover, the nature of the injuries shows that only one of the injuries on the head was really serious and the man survived that injury for over six days. It is also conceivable that with better and more careful treatment he might possibly have got better, because it is in evidence that the relations of the deceased were directed by Lieutenant Clarke to take him to the Hospital for treatment, but they refrained from doing so and he was kept all the time at home. Presumably, he had better chances of recovery by going to the Hospital than by remaining at his house. In such circumstances, I think the Court below was justified in framing a charge under section 304, Part II, Indian Penal Code, and there is no sufficient cause for an enhancement of the sentence. The petition for enhancement is, therefore, rejected.

JURY REFERENCE No. 2 of 1922.

*Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1878), s. 307—
Reference—Verdict of Jury—Reasons for verdict—
Sessions Judge to give reasons for his opinion—High Court's duty to consider evidence, etc.—Ground for setting aside verdict of Jury.*

The verdict of a jury must not be lightly disregarded by the High Court. Due weight must be given to it, and whenever it is set aside, it must be upon a very substantial ground and not merely upon the ground that another view of the evidence might have been taken [p. 584, col. 1].

Emperor v. Neamatulla, 21 Ind. Cas. 56; 17 C. W. N. 1077; 14 Cr. L. J. 556, referred to.

In referring a case under section 307, Criminal Procedure Code, it is not sufficient for the Sessions Judge to say merely that he believes the evidence of witnesses on whose evidence the jury has returned a verdict of not guilty; he should give reasons for his opinion in sufficient detail to enable the High Court to appreciate it and to give due weight to it. [p. 584, col. 2.]

On a reference under section 307, Criminal Procedure Code, the High Court has to consider the entire evidence in the case and to give due weight to the opinions of the Sessions Judge and of the jury. [p. 583, col. 2.]

Per Jwala Prasad, J.—In making a reference, under section 307, Criminal Procedure Code, disagreeing with the verdict of the jury, the Sessions Judge should ask for their reasons for the verdict. [p. 583, col. 1.]

EMPEROR v. PUNIT CHAIN.

Where the Sessions Judge and the Jury differ and there is a division in the opinion of the jury, the High Court will consider not only the opinion of the majority but also of the minority of the Jury [p. 583, col. 1.]

Emperor v. Musammat Zohra, 55 Ind. Cas. 294; 1 P. L. T. 657; 21 Cr. L. J. 27, referred to.

Per Courts, J.—The opinion of a Jury is its verdict and not the reasons on which the verdict is based. [p. 584, col. 2.]

The High Court is not bound to act in accordance with the verdict of the Jury even where it is unanimous [p. 584, col. 2.]

Emperor v. Lyall, 29 C. 128; 6 C. W. N. 253, referred to.

Reference under section 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code by the Sessions Judge, Patna, dated the 24th January 1922.

Mr. H. L. Nandoolkar, Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Messrs. P. E. Lal and I. B. Biswas, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—This is a Reference under section 307 of the Code of Criminal Procedure by the Sessions Judge of Patna recommending that Punit and Ramkhelawan be convicted of an offence under section 302, Indian Penal Code read with section 34, Indian Penal Code and under section 148, Indian Penal Code, and that Sita Ram and Indar be convicted of an offence under section 147, Indian Penal Code.

The above named four accused along with 17 others were tried by the learned Sessions Judge of Patna with the aid of Jury consisting of five gentlemen, on the charge of having murdered one Kokil Mahto. The Jury returned a divided verdict, three of the Jurors returned the verdict of not guilty and two a verdict of guilty. The learned Sessions Judge accepted the verdict of the majority of the Jury with respect to the 17 accused persons, and disagreeing with the verdict of the majority with respect to the aforesaid four persons has referred their case to us under section 307 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The reason for the reference has been given by the learned Sessions Judge in his letter No. 329/XI, dated the 24th of January 1922, to this Court. He says.—“The evidence appears to me conclusive to establish the charges of rioting and to prove that the four men, Punit, Ram Khelawan, Sita Ram and Indar were members of the body of rioters, that the two former were armed with chakras, that Sita Ram and Indar carried lathis and that either Punit or Ram Khelawan in furtherance of an intention which was common to both of them, caused the fatal wound in the chest of Kokil. My charge to the Jury will show the details of the evidence against each of these four men. I rely particularly on the evidence of Sardagar, Musammat Subhagia, Musammat Makhni, Ram Prasad Lohar, constable Ram Bilas Singh and Dahaur. I can find no reason why Musammat Subhagia or Musammat Makhni or Ram Prasad Lohar or constable Ram Bilas Singh or Dahaur should perjure themselves, and their demeanour in the witness-box was quite satisfactory. The evidence itself shows no grounds at all for considering their testimony to be inspired by any evil motives. As against all the four men with whom this reference is concerned the only further fact that they were all arrested near the scene that night and also the fact that Sita Ram was found wearing a woman's garb.”

It may incidentally be mentioned here that the charge to the Jury, the verdict of the Jury and the judgment of the Court all took place on the 21st of February 1922, as the order sheet and the verdict of the Jury and the judgment show, but the charge to the Jury bears the date “23rd February 1922,” under the signature of the learned Sessions Judge. No doubt, the Jury was charged on the 21st and apparently a typed copy was placed before the learned Sessions Judge for his signature on the 23rd. It should have appeared on this copy when the Jury was actually charged.

In the letter of reference it would appear from the summary of the reasons quoted above that the learned Sessions Judge has not really discussed the evidence in the case for and against the accused persons, in order to justify the conclusion that the charge against the aforesaid four accused persons was established. He, however, refers to his charge to the Jury for details of the evidence against each of the aforesaid four persons.

After referring at some length to the summary of the Sessions Judge's charge to the Jury, his Lordship proceeded as follows:—

Now, the learned Sessions Judge has not himself discussed the evidence in his letter of reference. He has simply said that the evidence of the witnesses mentioned above should be accepted. He ought to have given his reasons for accepting the evidence. He ought to have met all the objections raised by the defence against the evidence of the aforesaid witnesses; in other words, he ought to have given his reasons for the decisions arrived at by him, that the evidence in the case establishes the guilt of the aforesaid four accused persons. Now, this was obviously more necessary in the present case because the learned Sessions Judge has deviated from the well-recognized principle that in making a reference under section 307 of the Code of Criminal Procedure disagreeing with the verdict of the Jury, the learned Sessions Judge should have asked for their reasons for the verdict. It was still more necessary as it was pointed out in the case of Emperor v. Musammat Zohra (1) that when the Jury had differed and there was a division in the opinion of the Jury we have to consider not only the opinion of the majority but also of the minority of the Jury. Section 307, clause (3) requires us to give "due weight to the opinion of the Sessions Judge and the Jury." We have in the present case got the opinion of the Judge, but we have not got the reasons and the opinion of the Jury except the verdict of "not guilty". We have, therefore, to depend entirely upon the record in the case or upon the arguments advanced on behalf of the defence in order to find out whether the evidence relied upon by the learned Sessions Judge should or should not be accepted as proving the guilt of the accused.

Now, we have given broadly, without having gone into minute details, the summary of the criticisms that might have been present in the minds of the Jurors when they discarded the evidence on behalf of the prosecution and held that the case against the accused was not proved. Whether there might have been the explanations for the Police to record late the statement of the principal witnesses for the prosecution, the defence is entitled to ask that the evidence of those witnesses should be discarded inasmuch as there was sufficient time and opportunity for being tutored. Thus eliminated, there was only the evidence of Dabaur and Ram Blas Singh, against whom also there were reasons for holding that they did not come in proper time to identify the assailants. Therefore, the verdict of the Jury in the present case cannot be said to have been a perverse one. Upon the evidence, at the best, it can be said that there was room for another opinion, an opinion differing from that of the Jury. But that is not the criterion upon which a reference under section 307 of the Code of Criminal Procedure should be determined. True, on a reference the High Court is required to consider the entire evidence in the case, but that does not necessarily mean that the opinion of the Jury on the question of fact will be ignored. There must be something more than a mere estimate of the evidence on the facts that should entitle us to upset the verdict of the Jury. I do not think it is necessary in this case to discuss the various authorities played before us on both sides. Each case was decided on its own merits: vide Emperor v. Surnamoyee Biswas (2), Queen v. Sham Bagdi (3), Emperor v. Lyall (4), Emperor v. O'hellan (5), Emperor v. Annada Oharan Tinkur (6), King Emperor v. Salimudi Sardar (7), Emperor v. Neamatulla (8), Emperor v. Musammat Zohra (1) and Emperor v. Bhulotai Singh (9).

Now, the meaning and scope of section 307 was discussed by me in the case already referred to above, namely, Emperor v. Musammat Zohra (1), I do not propose in this case to go into that discussion again, but I have not still come across a single case where the verdict of the Jury on a question of fact has been set aside without there being an astounding reason for it. The case of the Emperor v. Neamatulla (5) is an instance of the kind. There, the verdict of the Jury was set aside when there was an omission in the Sessions Judge's charge to the Jury of a very material fact, namely, of incriminating articles in the shape of ornaments with blood stains found in the possession of the accused.

JHANDA RAM v. TOPAN RAM.

Under these circumstances his Lordship, Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., held that a proper case was made out for differing from the opinion of the Jury and for convicting the accused. Therefore, whenever a verdict of a Jury is set aside it must be upon a very substantial ground, and not merely upon the ground that another view of the evidence might be taken. In the present case the facts and the criticisms of the learned Judge were placed before the Jury in his charge and the Jury upon a consideration of the evidence and the circumstances gave a decided and unambiguous verdict of 'not guilty.' We have also duly considered the entire evidence in the case and the opinion of both the Jury and the learned Sessions Judge and we have come to the conclusion that this is not a case in which we should interfere.

We, cannot, therefore, accept the reference. The verdict of the Jury is accepted and the accused are acquitted.

CANTU, J.—I agree that this reference must fail; but I am not certain that I would accept all the remarks which have been made by my learned brother. Section 307, sub-clause (3) of the Criminal Procedure Code requires that the High Court shall, after considering the entire evidence and after giving due weight to the opinions of the Sessions Judge and the Jury, acquit or convict the accused of any offence of which the Jury could have convicted him upon the charge framed and placed before it, and in many cases the High Court has convicted accused persons in respect of whom there has been an unanimous verdict of 'not guilty'. The case of Emperor v. Lyall (4) was such a case. In that case it was contended on behalf of the accused that the High Court was bound to act in accordance with the unanimous verdict of the Jury unless it was shown to be perverse or clearly and manifestly wrong. It was held, however, that this was not so and that since the alteration of the section by the Act of 1898 the High Court was bound to consider the entire evidence of the case and to give due weight to the opinion of the Sessions Judge and of the Jury and not to rely solely on the verdict of the Jury. This is, in my opinion, the correct view of the law as it now stands. The opinion of a Jury is its verdict and not the reasons on which the verdict is based. But although when a case has been referred, the High Court is bound to consider the entire evidence, the verdict of the Jury must not be lightly disregarded, due weight must be given to it and in referring a case under this section it is not sufficient for the Sessions Judge to say merely that he believes the evidence of witnesses on whose evidence the Jury has returned a verdict of not guilty; he should give reasons for his opinion in sufficient detail to enable the Court to appreciate it and to give due weight to it.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 145, 435 (3)—Proceedings under section 145—Dispute, finding as to, whether necessary—Revision—High Court, power of interference of.

Section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not require a Magistrate to give in his final order a finding that there is a likelihood of a breach of the peace. After he has made an order in writing under sub-section 1) of section 145, the only matter which he has to determine is the question of the possession of the disputed property.

Having regard to the provisions of section 435 (3) of the Criminal Procedure Code the High Court has no power to interfere in revision with an order under section 145 of the Code, even though such order was made without affording the aggrieved party an opportunity of producing evidence, having had no notice that the case would come up on a certain date. Mr Harcharn Das Bhalla, for the Petitioners.

Diwan Mehr Chand, for the Respondent.

EMPEROR v. PANCHU.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order passed under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. One point urged on behalf of the petitioners is that the order made under sub-section (1) did not mention the existence of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace. This is true, but the Magistrate said in that order that the report of Sadat Ali Khan (to whom the case had been sent for inquiry) supported the complaint, and as both the report and the complaint mentioned that there was a dispute between the parties likely to cause a breach of the peace it may be taken that the Magistrate was satisfied before making the order, that such a dispute existed.

The next point taken is that the Magistrate in his final order has given no finding that there is a likelihood of a breach of the peace. As to this it is sufficient to say that section 145 does not require the Magistrate to give a finding on that question. After he has made an order in writing under sub-section (1) the only matter which he has to determine is the question of the possession of the disputed property.

The third point is that the petitioners were not given an opportunity of producing evidence, having had no notice that the case was to come up before the lower Court on the 6th May, when the order under revision was passed, but thought that it was to come up before the Tahsildar, to whom the Court had ordered that it should be sent for investigation. This appears to be correct, at least there is nothing on the record to show that the petitioners were informed that the case would be taken up by the lower Court on the 6th May. But the irregularity or illegality committed by the lower Court in this respect will not, in my opinion, justify this Court in interfering in revision. It is laid down in section 435 (3) that proceedings under Chapter XII are not proceedings within the meaning of that section, and I do not see how it is possible to hold that the lower Court's proceedings are not proceedings under Chapter XII, in which section 145 is included.

Nojem, Mirza v. Jamalali Khalifa (1), a case in which a Magistrate had passed an order under section 145 without taking evidence, no doubt supports the contention of the petitioners' Counsel, but I cannot follow it in the face of the clear provisions of section 435.

The question of the power of the High Court to interfere in revision in cases under section 145 was carefully considered by the Madras High Court in Kamal Kutty v. Udayasarma Raja (2). It was there held that the essential requisite to give a Magistrate jurisdiction under section 145 is that he must be satisfied from information of some sort that a dispute exists likely to cause a breach of the peace concerning land or water or the boundaries thereof in his jurisdiction and that once he is so satisfied his jurisdiction is complete, and his subsequent action must be considered in relation to procedure, not jurisdiction. That is, in my opinion, a correct view of the law, and I accordingly hold that the application for revision in the present case cannot be entertained, and I dismiss it.

Surety young and living at some distance from accused —Ground for rejecting.*

Where in a proceeding under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code the accused is required to furnish sureties, the mere fact that the surety offered resides at some distance away from the accused and is a young man, is no reason for refusing to accept him, if otherwise he is a fit and proper person to be surety. [p. 586, cols 1 & 2.]

Reference made by the Officiating Additional Sessions Judge, Bahraich.

FACTS appear from the following Referring Order of the Officiating Additional Sessions Judge, Bahraich:—

"This is an application for revision against the order of Mr. Hari Shankar, First Class Magistrate of Bahraich, dated the 5th November 1919.

Panchu Ledh of Bishanpur was sent to jail on the 17th November 1919, for failing to furnish security (two sureties for Rs. 250 each), SOHANA RAM v. EMPEROR.

Abdul Aziz and Riaz-ud-din of Bahraich offered the required security.

It is admitted that the sureties bear satisfactory character, and that the properties hypothecated are also sufficient.

Thus the sureties are admittedly persons of adequate means, position and respectability.

The learned Magistrate has rejected Abdul Aziz, surety, for the following reasons:—

(a) Panchu's house is four miles away from Bahraich.

(b) Abdul Aziz Khan is quite young and looks a boy yet and inexperienced. He will be weak to take proper care of Panchu.

I have heard the learned Counsel on both sides. I have also seen Abdul Aziz. I have recorded his statement. He has a younger brother and he has been appointed the guardian of the person and property of his minor brother by the District Judge of Gonda. The certificate was granted to him in March 1919. His statement and appearance show that he is not less than 22.

In rejecting sureties, the Magistrate is given wide discretion of course; but the discretion is not arbitrary or absolute but judicial. I think a surety should not be rejected simply because he resides at some distance from the place where the man for whom he is to be a surety lives. A surety should not be rejected as unfit merely because he resides in a different Tahsil [See King Emperor v. Mangal (1)].

Upright and unnecessary difficulties should not, I think, be thrown in the way of persons attempting to furnish the required securities. I think Abdul Aziz, surety, should not be rejected simply because he lives at the distance of some four miles from Panchu's village.

The second ground also does not appear to be a good ground. The learned Magistrate bases his finding on this point on the Patwari's evidence. The Patwari states, of course, that Abdul Aziz will not be able to take proper care of Panchu; but he says so, simply because the surety lives at Bahraich and Panchu at Bishanpur. The distance is four miles only. I have already observed that, in my opinion, Abdul Aziz surety should not be rejected simply because he lives at a distance of four miles from Panchu's village.

As to the age of Abdul Aziz, he is not, surely, a boy. He is, of course, a young man. I do not think that a man of his age will necessarily be weak to take proper care of Panchu. I think he can manage to control Panchu. In my opinion, the reasons for which Abdul Aziz, surety, has been rejected are not good and sufficient. I think I should submit the case under section 438, Criminal Procedure Code, for the orders of the High Court of this Province.

I direct that the case be reported to the Hon'ble Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, for orders (after obtaining the explanation of the Magistrate).

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—I have read the Referring Order of the Additional Sessions Judge and after a consideration of the report submitted by the Deputy Magistrate, I think the reference ought to be accepted, and that the order rejecting Abdul Aziz as unfit to be a surety of Panchu Lodh should be set aside. There seems to be no really good reason why the security of Abdul Aziz should not be accepted. Let the papers be returned.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 295—Damage to mosque by placing rafters of house in walls thereof—Absence of knowledge of damage or insult to Muhammadan religion—Offence.

When a person in re-building his house has no idea that he is likely to do damage to the walls of a mosque by placing the ends of his rafters thereon, or without knowledge that such damage was likely to result, as would be considered by Muhammadans, as an insult to their religion, his conviction under section 295 of the Penal Code, is not justified. Magistrate, Second Class, Jhang, dated the 22nd March 1920.

Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, for the Petitioner.

Sayad Mohsin Shah, for the Complainant-Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner has been convicted, under section 295, Indian Penal Code, of damaging a mosque by placing the rafters of his house on the wall of the mosque, with the knowledge that such damage was likely to be considered by Muhammadans as an insult to their religion.

The petitioner's house adjoins the west and south walls of the mosque, and the damage done appears to have resulted from his re-building the house. The Trial Magistrate has accepted as true the statement of the witness Jahana, who says that the ends of the petitioner's rafters were in the west wall of the mosque before the re-construction took place, but that they have been placed in that wall at a lower level than they were before. It cannot be supposed that the petitioner knew that he was likely to damage the wall by placing the ends of his rafters higher up than they were at first.

Mr. Mohsin Shah, who appears in support of the conviction, lays stress on the fact that the petitioner has also placed the ends of some of his rafters in the south wall of the mosque, where they did not exist before he re-built the house. But it does not appear that any damage has resulted from this act. The Magistrate found on inspecting the mosque that the west wall was cracked in two or three places, but his judgment does not show that any damage had been done to the south wall.

It is also argued that as the petitioner's house is pukka he must have known that he was likely to do damage by placing the ends of his rafters in the walls of the mosque, which are kacha. This argument, however, is sufficiently answered by the fact that, so far as appears from the Trial Magistrate's judgment, the south wall did not actually sustain any damage from the petitioner's rafters resting on it.

It appears to me that the petitioner, when he was re-building his house had no idea that he was likely to do any damage to the walls of the mosque by placing the ends of his rafters in them. Much less could he have known that such damage was likely to result as would be considered by Muhammadans as an insult to their religion.

I accept this application, set aside the conviction and sentence, and acquit the petitioner. The fine, if paid, will be refunded.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the petitioners have been convicted of offences under section 417 and sections 47/109, Indian Penal Code, and have been sentenced to four months' rigorous imprisonment each and fines. Their appeals to the Additional District Magistrate were unsuccessful and they have applied for revision to this Court on the ground that the Trying Magistrate who exercised Second-Class powers had no jurisdiction to hear the case against them. The facts alleged by the prosecution were that the complainant was taken to another village on the pretence that a buffalo would be bought for him and the money necessary for this purpose would be advanced to him. He was then given a large amount of liquor to drink and when in the state of intoxication a document purporting to be a bond was executed and his signature was obtained. This document, it may be added, was a deed of divorce of his wife who was then taken away by some of the petitioners.

It is urged before me that the offence charged did not fall within the purview of section 417, but of section 420, Indian Penal Code. This is obviously correct and the Trying Magistrate, possessing as he did, only Second Class powers, had no jurisdiction to enquire into or try the case. I, therefore, accept the petition for revision, discharge the petitioners and direct the District Magistrate either himself or through another competent Magistrate to make further enquiry into the case.

Held, that the conviction could not be sustained.

Reference made by the District Magistrate, Lucknow.

FACTS appear from the following Order of Reference of the District Magistrate, Lucknow:

"The father of the accused in this case was challaned under section 411, Indian Penal Code, on the same grounds, and was convicted. I have referred to the file of that case, and find from the evidence that the keys of the boxes in which the stolen property was found were in possession of the father at the time of the Police search. Father and son lived in the same house. There is nothing against the son except the statement that he told the Police there was no stolen property in the house. It can, of course, easily be argued that he was unaware of what his father had in the boxes. There is nothing to show that he was in possession of property which he knew or had reason to believe was stolen. I think Bashir Ahmad Khan v. Emperor (1) applies here.

"For the above reasons, I report the case for the orders of the Judicial Commissioner under section 433 (1), Criminal Procedure Code, with a recommendation that the sentence be reversed. Meanwhile execution of the sentence will be suspended, and the accused will remain on the bail and recognizances already accepted."

Petitioner, who was a candidate for the post of lambardar, made a statement concerning respondent, a rival candidate for the post, that he was not the son of the deceased lambardar but was a pichhlag and lawaris. Respondent filed a complaint against petitioner under section 500 of the Penal Code, in pursuance of which a bailable warrant was issued against the petitioner to appear and answer the charge. Petitioner applied to the Sessions Judge to quash the proceedings and his application being rejected he moved the High Court in revision:

Lala Ram Chand Manchanda, for the Petitioner.

Sardar Kharak Singh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—One Puran Singh, claiming to be a son of Sundar Singh, brought a complaint against Thakaria, son of Pattu, under section 500, Indian Penal Code, for having defamed him in certain applications which he made to the Revenue Authorities in a lambardari case and in certain statements that he made in support of his applications. In pursuance of that complaint, Thakaria was summoned as an accused person to answer the charge against him, but he made an application to the Sessions Judge, under section 435, Criminal Procedure Code, praying for interference on the ground that the words alleged to be used by him did not amount to defamation and that the complaint had been wrongly entertained. The Sessions Judge declined to interfere on the ground that he did not think that he was authorised to interfere at that stage.

Thakaria has now filed a revision in this Court and it is contended on his behalf that the complaint filed by Puran Singh did not disclose that any offence under section 499, Indian Penal Code, had been committed and that the case is a fit one for the proceedings before the Trial Court being quashed. Lala Ram Chand Manchanda, who has argued the case for the petitioner before me, urges that all that the petitioner alleged in the applications in question was that the respondent was not Sundar Singh's own son but a pichhlag of his wife. He adds that this was neither defamatory nor meant to be so and that the petitioner was within his rights in putting forward this plea in his own interests as a bona fide applicant for the lambardari for which Puran Singh was also a candidate and which had fallen vacant on the death of Sundar Singh. He says that even if the words used were held to be defamatory, Exception 9 to section 499, Indian Penal Code, covers the present case and shows that no offence has been committed by the petitioner. Sardar Kharak Singh, who appears for the respondent, urges, in the first place, that no revision lies and that this Court is not competent to interfere at a stage when no final order has been passed by the Trial Court and no penalty has been imposed upon the accused. He relies on Asim Khan v. Empress (1) as an authority supporting his contention. Lala Ram Chand's reply to this part of the argument is that this Court has extensive powers of revision under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, and can interfere even with orders that are not final, where it is apparent that grave injustice would be done by allowing the proceedings before a subordinate Court to continue. He refers me to

Emperor v. Bishen Das (2) which relates to a case in which an order framing a charge against an accused person was interfered with, though the order was not final and not appealable and no penalty had been imposed on the accused person. I see no reason why Emperor v. Bishen Das (2) should not be followed in this case so far as the question of the power of this Court to interfere in a case like the one before me is concerned.

On the merits, Sardar Kharak Singh argues that when Mr. Justice Martineau issued a notice in this case, he did so because it was represented to him that "all that the petitioner alleged was that the respondent was Sundar Singh's pichhlag," and that it was not brought to his notice that in one of the applications the petitioner has called the respondent lawaris. He contends that these two words used together amount to calling the respondent an illegitimately born person. He further argues that Exception 9 to section 499, Indian Penal Code, cannot apply to this case, because Thakaria was not a bona fide applicant for the vacant lambardari and had no real claim to it as he was only a maternal uncle's son of the deceased Sundar Singh. I am afraid there is not any force in both these contentions. The words pichhlag and lawaris do not mean an illegitimate child and, though Puran Singh alleged in his complaint that he had been called wald-ul haram (illegitimate) by Thakaria, there is nothing in Thakaria's applications and statements to show that any such word or any equivalent of this word was used.

As regards the question of the application of Exception 9 to section 499, Indian Penal Code, that question need hardly be discussed if the statement made is not defamatory in character, but it may be pointed out that it is clear from the record of this case that Thakaria was putting in applications as a bona fide applicant and it was obviously to his interest to point out any flaw in the status of a rival candidate. Exception 9 would, therefore, in such a case come to his help even if the alleged statement had been defamatory. It is clear, therefore, that the complaint filed by Puran Singh does not disclose the commission of an offence under section 499, Indian Penal Code, and that the order passed against Thakaria was not justified under the circumstances. Accordingly I accept this revision. In a criminal case the accused put forward a defence, the principal incident of which was stated by them to have occurred on a certain spot in the neighbourhood of a village. In order to test the accuracy of the story told by the accused the Magistrate on his own motion took them to the neighbourhood of the village and made them point out the spot in turn. In deciding the case he attached great importance to the fact that they did not all point out the same place. There was no evidence on the record as to what occurred when the Magistrate went to the spot and the Magistrate relied entirely on his own knowledge of the incident: Held, that in the absence of any evidence regarding this episode it must be totally ignored; [p. 69, col. 2]

Petition, under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of an order of the Sessions Judge, Montgomery, at Lahore, dated the 4th October 1921, varying that of the Magistrate, First Class, Montgomery, dated the 8th June 1921.

Mr. Ghulam Rasul, for the Petitioners.

Mr. M. Sleem, for the Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT—Four men, Nura son of Rehana, Nura son of Fattu, Baqar and Waryam have been convicted under section 457, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to undergo two years' rigorous imprisonment each and in addition Nura son of Rehana has been ordered to pay a fine of Rs. 200. Their appeal has been dismissed by the Sessions Judge and they now apply for revision.

The facts as found are that these four men jumped over the wall into the haveli of one Bahadur, complainant, and tried to carry off his daughter, Musammât Fatima, aged 18, who was sleeping there beside him. Both she and her father are said to have woken up and to have seen all four accused as they ran away. One Imam Din, who lives next-door, is said to have come out and also to have identified the accused.

The story told by the accused is to the effect that Nura Mirasi, accused No. 1, had an assignation with Musammât Fatima in the jungle and was caught sitting with her there by her father and others. The other three accused then came up and rescued him and this false case was manufactured against them.

In order to test, as he states, the accuracy of the story told by the accused the Magistrate on his own motion took them to the neighbourhood of the village and made them point out in turn the place where they said that Nura Mirasi was sitting with the girl, and he has attached great importance to the fact that, as he says himself, they did not point out the same place. Now, the conduct of the Magistrate in acting, as he did, appears to me to verge dangerously near upon cross-examining the accused, but there is an even more serious and obvious objection in that there is no evidence whatsoever on the record as to what happened when the test was applied. No witness has come forward to say that he saw the accused pointing out the different places, and the Magistrate has relied entirely on his own knowledge, he not having gone into the witness box nor subjected himself to cross-examination. In the absence of any evidence regarding this episode it must be totally ignored. The learned Sessions Judge has come to the conclusion that the identification of the four accused is sufficient. This identification rests on the evidence of three witnesses, Bahadur the complainant himself, Musammât Fatima and Imam Din. Now, Bahadur has denied that his daughter was in the house at all when the accused came, and the Sessions Judge has held that he is obviously telling a lie when he does so. If a man lies on an all important point such as this it appears to me to be wholly impossible to place any reliance on the remainder of his evidence. It is true that Musammât Fatima in Court stated that she recognised all four accused but I find on reference to zimmis that she clearly stated to the Police when first examined that she recognised none and was subsequently told by her father who they were. She was produced at a very late stage of the case, her name not having been entered in the original chalan and apparently as an after-thought and it is certainly peculiar that she should be produced to give this evidence in spite of what she had stated during the investigation. This leaves Imam Din only and I do not consider his statement to be sufficient by itself, nor for that matter very satisfactory, when compared with his statement to the Police. One Imam Ali was produced also at a late stage of the case to give evidence as to a confession made by the accused. All that the Police diaries show is that he made the same statement during the investigation as Mehr Shah, lambirdar, and the confession is shown as having been made to Mehr Shah, and yet he is quite silent on the subject though he was one of the original witnesses and his name was entered in the chalan.

Taking all these facts into consideration, I find that the guilt of the accused is not established.

I accept the application for revision, and set aside the convictions and acquit the accused.

Criminal revision to quash the proceedings pending in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Parnea.

Mr. S. P. Sen, for the Petitioners.

Assistant Government Advocate, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to quash the proceedings in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Parnea against the petitioners. The complainant alleged that holding a second class ticket he was entering a first class compartment owing to the crowd of passengers but was obstructed by a peon who turned out to be the pay clerk's peon. He succeeded in getting in, but the peon abused and insulted him so that the complainant gave him a blow whereupon he was attacked by the petitioners. Five persons were named as accused and three sections were specified—Sections 323, 147 and 342, but summonses were issued under section 323 only. In his petition of complaint the complainant goes on to say that "the pay clerk's peon begged pardon of me and I gave him word that I would not proceed against him, so he is not included among the accused." The inference to be drawn from this statement is that if the peon had not been pardoned he would have been included among the accused. The whole proceeding was one transaction arising out of the attempt of the pay clerk's peon to prevent the complainant from entering the first class compartment. Apparently, if the peon had not apologised his name would have been among those who were entered in the petition of complaint as accused persons. His name was not so entered because the complainant had compromised the case with him. The case is, therefore, on the authority of Shyam Behari Singh v. Sagar Singh (1), one in which the whole offence has been compounded. The proceedings are, therefore, quashed.

Mr. Muand Lal Puri, for the Appellant.

Lala Faqir Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for a declaration to the effect that the decree, dated the 13th November 1905, passed in favour of the firm called Mukanda Mal-Kapur Chand of Kalka against the plaintiff and Ram Narain, defendant, had been satisfied and was not executable. The plaintiff's case was that the defendant No. 1 held a decree of the Simla Court against the plaintiff and the defendant No. 2 for Rs. 19,562; that the plaintiff and the defendant No. 2 had paid the amount of the decree in full, but that the decree-holders had allowed payment of Rs. 17,961 only and taken out execution for Rs. 4,784 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Sargodha, and that on the 26th January 1916 the Subordinate Judge holding that Rs. 2,009 had been paid off had disallowed Rs. 1,600. Thus, the plaintiff owed nothing to the decree-holders and has, therefore, prayed for a declaration that the above-mentioned decree had been satisfied and was incapable of being executed. The defendant No. 1 denied the payment and pleaded that the suit was not maintainable and that in any case the suit, as framed, did not lie. The plea more clearly put was as follows, namely, that the suit was barred by the provisions of section 47, Civil Procedure Code, and that in any case as no consequential relief was claimed it could not be maintained with reference to the provisions of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. The Trial Court, with reference to the decisions in Jaikaran Bharti v. Raghunath Singh (1), Deno Bundhu Nundy v. Hari Mati Dassee (2) and Azizan v. Matuk Lal Sahu (3), was inclined to take the view that the suit was barred by section 47 but it felt bound to follow the decision of the Punjab Chief Court in Diwan Singh v. Amir Singh (4) and held that the suit was not barred under the said section. With regard to the second part of the plea the Trial Court, however, came to the conclusion that the plaintiff was bound to sue for a consequential relief and without claiming a relief to that effect his suit was not entertainable according to the provisions of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. Taking this view of the case the Trial Court returned the plaint to the plaintiff to enable him to amend the plaint and re-present it after the necessary amendment. The plaintiff having declined to carry out the order of the Court the suit was thrown out as being opposed to the rule contained in section 42 of the Specific Relief Act.

The plaintiff preferred an appeal against the decree of the Trial Court dismissing the suit, and the Appellate Court, relying on Diwan Singh v. Amir Singh (4), held that he could only protect himself from execution proceedings being taken against him by the decree-holder by a prayer for injunction as a consequential relief and dismissed the appeal.

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal to this Court. It came up for decision before a Division Bench which disagreed with the two Courts below as to the view taken by them with regard to the applicability of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, but the learned Judges constituting the Bench were of opinion that the suit was barred by section 47, Civil Procedure Code. This view, however, being contrary to the view taken by a Division Bench of the Chief Court in Diwan Singh v. Amir Singh (4), they referred the whole case to a Full Bench stating the question to be decided by the Full Bench in the following terms:—

"The question is whether a suit for a declaration that a decree has been fully satisfied and is incapable of execution is barred under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code."

Clause (1) of section 47 provides that "all questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, or their representatives, and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, shall be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit." Now, it cannot be denied that the question involved in the present suit has arisen between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed and relates to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. In fact the very terms of the relief are to the effect that the decree has been satisfied and is not executable. It has been held in numerous cases to which it is not necessary to refer that the section should receive a liberal construction. This has been further emphasized by the introduction of the word 'all' in the present Code.

Where the decree itself is not impugned in any way and is validly susceptible of execution, all questions relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, according to the policy underlying the provisions contained in section 47, must be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit. According to r. (1) of O. XXI, all money payable under a decree shall be paid as follows, namely, (a) into the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree; or (b) out of Court to the decree-holder; or (c) otherwise as the Court, which made the decree, directs. Sub-clause (b) of the above rule suggested the contingency of a decree being satisfied out of Court and the Legislature in order to preserve the jurisdiction of the Court executing the decree enacted clause (1) of r. 2, O. XXI, in order to meet the contingency. This clause provides that "where any money payable under a decree of any kind is paid out of Court, or the decree is otherwise adjusted in whole or in part to the satisfaction of the decree holder, the decree holder shall certify such payment or adjustment to the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree, and the Court shall record the same accordingly." The policy of the Legislature is abundantly made clear by this clause, namely, that even in respect of payment or adjustment out of Court the Court executing the decree alone will have a right to decide. This policy is further emphasized by enacting clause (3) of r. 2 of O. XXI, which provides that "A payment or adjustment which has not been certified or recorded as aforesaid, shall not be recognized by any Court executing the decree." Consistently, therefore, with the policy underlying the provisions of section 47 we must hold that the question of the adjustment of a decree out of Court lies exclusively within the purview of the rule contained in that section. We are aware that the learned Judges of the Division Bench who decided the case reported as Diwan Singh v. Amir Singh (4) held that as section 258 of the old Code specifically enacted that an uncertified adjustment of the decree by any Court executing the decree, it was implied that it might be recognized as such by a Court trying the matter as a regular suit. We are not prepared to agree in this interpretation. This interpretation was not accepted by the majority of the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Aisaz v. Matuk Lal Sahu (3). In our opinion the opinion of the majority was correct. In a later case in Deno Bundhu Nundy v. Hari Mati Dasse (2), Maclean, C. J., and Hall and Stevens, JJ. accepted the view of the majority in Aisaz v. Matuk Lal Sahu (3). This ruling was not brought to the notice of the learned Judges of the Chief Court who decided the case of Diwan Singh v. Amir Singh (4).

THAMMAN SINGH C. DALCHAND.

Mr. Mukand Lal Pari has relied upon two other cases decided by the Punjab Chief Court in support of his argument. They are reported as Jamna v. Bel Ram (5) and Jamun Ram v. Kishen Ram (6). The decisions in both these cases, however, were based upon the rule laid down in the earlier case referred to above, and we are not prepared to accept any of these decisions as laying down the correct view. The learned Counsel has also relied upon two earlier decisions of the Calcutta High Court reported as Nubo Kishen Mookerjee v. Debnath Roy (7) and Nujeem Mullick v. Erfan Mollah (8). Both these decisions were considered in the case of Azizun v. Matuk Lal Sahu (3) and it was pointed out by Mr. Justice Macpherson that in those decisions the prohibition contained in section 11 of Act XXIII of 1861 against separate suits was ignored. We cannot, therefore, regard these cases as laying down good law. Mr. Faqir Chand has called our attention to an old case decided by the Chief Court reported as Karm Singh v. Amin Chand (9), which appears to have laid down a rule contrary to the one expounded in Diwan Singh v. Amir Singh (4). The judgment is somewhat meagre, but the principle of section 47, Civil Procedure Code, is clearly deducible from it.

In the case of Manjunatha Chetty v. Appaya (10), almost all the cases on the subject were reviewed and the learned Judges who decided the case held that "section 47, Civil Procedure Code, is a statutory prohibition against matters relating to the execution of a decree being agitated by a separate suit. A suit, therefore, for a declaration that a decree was satisfied and for an injunction restraining the defendant from executing his decree against the plaintiff is barred by section 47 (), Civil Procedure Code." The rule is laid down in the case of Jaikaran Bharti v. Raghunath Singh (). It has repeatedly been held that one of the objects of the Legislature in enacting section 47 was to avoid multiplicity of suits. If we were to accept the contention put forward on behalf of the plaintiff we should be giving effect to a rule which would defeat the policy of the Legislature.

We accordingly dissent from the view taken in Diwan Singh v. Amir Singh (4) and accepting the view of the Calcutta, Madras and Allahabad High Courts, hold that a suit for a declaration that a decree has been fully satisfied and is inexecutable of execution is barred under section 47, Civil Procedure Code.

We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Plaintiff sued for sale of a property mortgaged to him: the property was a cultivatory holding and was not liable for sale, so in his replication the plaintiff desired a money decree. The period, however, for suing for such a decree had elapsed, and the claim was dismissed under Article 116 of the Limitation Act. The lower Appellate Court being of opinion that it was a case of a consideration which had afterwards failed, decreed the claim under Article 97 of the Act holding that the date of the failure was the date of the proceedings in the First Court:

Held, restoring the decree of the First Court, that Article 97 had no application to the case as the property in suit being inalienable from the very inception of the mortgage, there never existed any consideration which could afterwards fail.

Mr. J. K. Banerji, for the Appellant.

Mr. Niamat Ullah, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued for sale of a mortgaged property on foot of a mortgage dated the 1st of March 1895. The property being a cultivatory holding was not liable to sale, so in his replication the plaintiff desired a money decree. The First Court of the Munsif of Bilgram held the suit to be time-barred under Article 116 of the Limitation Act. There was a further plea of the plaintiff in that Court that the defendant had fraudulently represented the property to be alienable property and that, therefore, the period of limitation applicable would count under Article 95 of the Limitation Act from the date of the discovery of the fraud. This plea was repelled by the First Court on the ground that no fraud was proved.

The plaintiff appealed to the District Court and the learned Subordinate Judge of Hardoi, sitting as an Appellate Court, decreed the appeal and the suit in what appears to be a somewhat summary judgment. It is noticeable that the lower Court did not make use of Article 95 and so it apparently held that no fraud was practised on the plaintiff. He decreed the suit under colour of Article 97 of the Limitation Act which runs as follows:—"For money paid upon an existing consideration which afterwards fails: three years from the date of the failure." The Court pointed out that the date of the failure was the date of the proceedings in the First Court.

I find considerable difficulty in understanding this point of view. There was no existing consideration whatsoever because from the very inception of the mortgage the property in suit was not alienable. There has been no alteration of condition subsequent to the mortgage. The First Court viewed the case very clearly that it must either fall under Article 116 or under Article 95 in case of the alleged fraud of the defendant being proved. The learned Counsel for the respondent also quoted cases to bring the suit within Article 95. In both the cases of this Court quoted by the learned Counsel [Udit Narain Singh v. Dohab Ali (1) and Lachhman Prasad v. Ramphal (2)] fraud was held to have been proved. In these cases the suit would be within time if brought within three years of the discovery of the fraud. In the present case I agree with the First Court that no fraud is proved.

The ruling reported as Madan Lal v. Reoti Singh (3) should be applied to this case. The suit was brought more than six years after failure of payment of instalments and was time-barred.

I set aside the decrees of the lower Appellate Court and restore the decrees of the First Court with costs of all the Courts.

BHAGWATI KURR O. JAGDAM SAHAY.

JUDGMENT.—Mr. Anant Ram for respondents raises a preliminary objection to the hearing of this appeal on the ground that it has abated. Sharaf was the sole defendant in the case and the sole respondent in this appeal. He is said to have died on the 23rd of August 1921. On the 29th of November 1921 an application was made on behalf of the appellants under O. XXII, r. 4, Civil Procedure Code. This application was supported by an affidavit sworn by one of the appellants. In it it was stated that the appellants had only learnt of Sharaf's death on the 28th of November 1921. Under Article 177 of the Limitation Act, as amended in 1920, the period within which an application under O. XXII, r. 4, Civil Procedure Code, is to be made has been reduced from six months to ninety days. The application as made, therefore, was clearly bad, and the suit had abated ninety days after the death of Sharaf. It was, however, open to the appellants to move the Court under O. XXII, r. 9 (2) and apparently this fact was borne in mind by the learned Vakil for the appellants who carefully inserted in the application, and added in the affidavit, the allegation that the appellants had only come to know of the death of Sharaf on the 28th of November 1921. Although the present application is bad, we are prepared to treat it as having been made under r. 9 of O. XXII, Civil Procedure Code.

The question is, whether we are satisfied that there was sufficient cause for the appellant's delay in moving this Court. As to this the only reason given for the delay is that the appellants were ignorant of Sharaf's death. Now, it has been repeatedly held that mere ignorance of the factum of death is not sufficient excuse under this rule and Order: See inter alia, Jamna v. Sarjit (1) and Inayat v. Ganga (2). Daya Singh v. Buta Singh (3) and the cases therein cited. After careful consideration of all the circumstances in this case we are not prepared to hold that the reason advanced for the delay is sufficient.

(3) 38 Ind. Cas. 7; 119 P. R. 1916; 139 P. W. R. 1916.

The appellants came from the same village as Sharaf. Mr. Madan Gopal for the appellants admitted that the appellants had a large number of relatives living in the village where Sharaf lived and where Sharaf died. Milkhi Chand who has sworn the affidavit was admittedly working as a School Master, some 18 miles from the village and there can be little doubt that he was in constant communication with his relatives. In any event, we consider that it was incumbent on him to keep himself sufficiently in touch with Sharaf and that his failure to do so shows such negligence as disentitles him from the benefit of O. XXII, r. 9.

We, therefore, hold that the reason advanced in this case does not amount to sufficient cause and that the appeal must be dismissed as having abated. In the circumstances we allow the parties to bear their own costs in this Court.

ORDER.

Das, J.—This is an application for review of our judgment, dated the 21st June 1921. The principal ground urged by Mr. Sushil Madhab Mullick on behalf of the applicant is that we have given a decree to the plaintiffs which they did not ask for in the plaint.

The suit was a suit for possession of certain properties set out in the schedule. The plaintiff claimed to be the reversioner of one Girwar Narain and entitled to the properties on the death of his daughter, Fateh Kuer. The applicant claims to hold a mokarrari lease in her favour granted to her by Fateh Kuer. The plaintiff's case in the plaint was that Girwar Narain was separate from his brother, Sadhoo Narain, and that upon his death his estate devolved upon his daughter, Fateh Kuer, and that upon Fateh Kuer's death the plaintiff became entitled to the estate which belonged to Girwar Narain. It appears that upon Girwar's death, there was a contest between Fateh Kuer on the one hand and Ram Prasad and Sant Prasad, sons of Sadhoo Narain, on the other. There was a settlement between the parties by which the properties of Girwar Narain were divided between all the parties, who claimed to have an interest in the estate of Girwar Narain. The plaintiff became a party to that compromise through his father, but it appears that he was then an infant and never ratified the transaction into which his father entered on his behalf. He accordingly by his action claimed to recover possession of the properties and cited the applicant as one of the principal defendants in the suit. He alleged in the seventh paragraph of his plaint that the defendant No. 2, that is to say, the applicant, representing herself as the purchaser of perpetual mokarrari right created under a deed executed by Musammât Fateh Kuer, was in unlawful possession of the property described in Schedule 1 and that the defendant No. 1 was holding unlawful possession like a proprietor over the property mentioned in that schedule without having any right whatever. The applicant, who, as I have mentioned, was cited as defendant No. 2 in the action, entered appearance and claimed under the mokarrari deed executed in her favour by Musammât Fateh Kuer. That was the claim which she put forward in the action. Her case was that Girwar Narain was joint with his brother, Sadhoo, and that the compromise between the parties was binding upon the plaintiff. She accordingly contended in her written statement that Fateh Kuer took an absolute interest in the properties which were assigned to her and was competent to execute a mokarrari deed in her favour. By our judgment we came to the conclusion that Girwar Narain was separate from Sadhoo and that the compromise between the parties did not operate to give any absolute title to Fateh Kuer, and that the compromise was not binding upon the plaintiff. We gave the plaintiff a decree for possession as against all the defendants.

Mr. Sushil Madhab Mullick's argument is, that the plaintiff claimed possession of the proprietary interest in the properties and that there was no power in the Court to give him a decree in respect of the mokarrari interest which is in the applicant for the reason that the plaintiff never claimed possession of that interest. We are by no means prepared to accede to the argument of Mr. Mullick; but assuming that his contention is correct, the point becomes one of technicality without any substance to recommend it. The difficulty can be remedied at any time by amendment of the plaint, and if we are to grant a review we would be compelled to allow any application for amendment that might be made on behalf of the plaintiff if in justice the plaintiff is entitled to a decree as against the applicant.

Mr. Mullick then contended that in justice the plaintiff was not entitled to any decree as against his client, inasmuch as the question as between the plaintiff and Ram Prasad was left open. It appears that during the pendency of the case, the plaintiff and Ram Prasad entered into a settlement and by our judgment we did not, in any way, decide the question as between the plaintiff and Ram Prasad. Mr. Mullick's argument now is, that if any one dispossessed the plaintiff it was Ram Prasad and that as his client claims title under Ram Prasad, it is unfair to give a decree to the plaintiff as against his client, leaving the entire question open as between the plaintiff and Ram Prasad. In the first place, it may be pointed out that his client does not claim any title through Ram Prasad; she held under a mokarrari deed executed in her favour by Fateh Kuer, that is, the deed which she sets up in her written statement. It is quite true that on Fateh Kuer's death, there was a contest in the Land Registration Department as between Ram Prasad on the one hand and Fateh Kuer's daughter on the other as to who was entitled to be registered in the Land Registration Department in the place of Fateh Kuer, and the Land Registration Department decided the question in favour of Ram Prasad; and we have no reason to doubt that since that decision the petitioner has been paying rent to Ram Prasad. Mr. Mullick's contention is that we must regard that decision subsequent to the death of Fateh Kuer as a new settlement by Ram Prasad in favour of his client. I cannot look upon the decision in that way at all. The petitioner claims under Fateh Kuer and though it is quite true she is now paying rent to Ram Prasad because the Land Registration Department has decided the question in favour of Ram Prasad, still she claims to be in possession of the property, not by virtue of any settlement made by Ram Prasad, but by virtue of the settlement made by Fateh Kuer. The question, therefore, in the form in which it has been raised by Mr. Mullick, does not arise; but assuming it does arise, I am not prepared to admit that we are incompetent to give a decree to the plaintiff for possession as against the person in juridical possession of the property, if for some reason the plaintiff does not choose to claim any relief as against the party who may put the other party in actual possession of the land. The decision of the Bombay High Court to which I referred in the course of my judgment¹ is conclusive on the point. Mr. Mullick relied upon the case of Oannon v. Binonath Adhicari (1). It appears that that case was subsequently relied upon by the Calcutta High Court in a case which was reversed by the Judicial Committee in the case of Durga Prasad Singh v. Brojo Nath Bose (2). That case was also not followed by the Bombay High Court in the case to which I referred. It appears to me that the decision of Farran, C. J., correctly lays down the principle that ought to guide us in dealing with cases of this nature.

Where an application to be registered as jenmi of certain lands is refused by the Revenue Authorities, and a subsequent identical application, made some years afterwards, by his successor is also refused a suit to obtain a declaration that the plaintiff is the jenmi of the lands must be brought within the period of limitation prescribed by Article 120, Schedule I, Limitation Act, the terminus a quo of such period being the date of refusal of the first application by the Revenue Authorities. FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. P. Ramakrishna Aiyar, for the Appellant.—The suit is not barred under Article 120 of the Limitation Act as a fresh cause of action accrued to the plaintiff in 1917. *Brojendra Kishore Roy v. The plaintiff was in continuous and undisturbed enjoyment for over the statutory period. He has a right to sue for declaration of his title.

The plaintiff has a recurring cause of action every time that his right is denied.

Mr. K. Govinda Marar, for the Respondent.—The claim by the son is in terms identical with that preferred by his father in 1903. There was no fresh cause of action in 1917. The cases cited are distinguishable. The mere refusal by the Revenue Authorities to register does not amount to dispossession. There must be an act of obstruction by the defendant to give the plaintiff a fresh cause of action. The defendant did not collect the profits. Article 120 of the Limitation Act applies and the suit is barred.

JUDGMENT.

DEVADOSS, J.—The plaintiff alleges that he is the jenmi of the plaint property and that he applied to have the land registered in his name in 1917 and that, on the objection of the defendant, the Revenue Authorities refused to change the registry. He, therefore, sues for a declaration that he is the jenmi of the plaint land. Both the Courts dismissed the suit as being barred by limitation under Article 120. The plaintiff has preferred this second appeal.

It is found that the plaintiff's father applied in 1903 for change of revenue registry to his name and the Settlement Officer ordered that the registry should stand as it did. It is contended on his behalf that the suit is not barred by limitation as there was a fresh cause of action in 1917. He relies upon Brojendra Kishore Roy v. Bharat Chandra Roy [Abdul Razac] (1). The facts in that case were the plaintiffs claimed title to some property by purchase at a sale in execution of a mortgage-decree. They took possession but were resisted by the defendants and the property was attached under section 146, Criminal Procedure Code. The order of the Magistrate was made on 25th April 1902. On the 3rd July and 11th October 1909 two sets of plaintiffs instituted suits for a declaration of their title and for their shares of the property. The Courts found that plaintiffs had title to the property and that they were in possession, till the attachment of the property by the Magistrate on 25th April 1902. The lower Appellate Court dismissed the suits as barred by limitation under Article 120 of the Limitation Act. The learned Judges held that the attachment by the Magistrate on account of the interference of the defendants was a continuing wrong and that no question of limitation arose. In Allah Jilai v. Unrao Husain (2) the learned Judges held that the suit brought for profits of the share gave the plaintiffs a fresh cause of action. In Kali Prasad Misir v. Harbans Misir (3) Piggott, J. observes: "My opinion is that the proceedings taken in the Partition Court whereby the plaintiffs found themselves, if their statements of facts are true, for the first time in danger of being actually dispossessed of their joint ownership over plot No. 55, give rise to a fresh cause of action altogether independent of any cause of action which may have been furnished to the plaintiffs by the Settlement entry made in 1877." If, in this case, the respondents had attempted to disturb the plaintiff's possession or claim any right over the property to the derogation of the plaintiff's right, such an act would give a fresh cause of action. The plaintiff herein asks for the same relief which was denied to him in 1903. As observed in Chowdhry Shamanund v. Rajnarain Das (6), "it cannot be successfully maintained that the plaintiffs should as a matter of law be regarded as dispossessed merely by virtue of the order of the Revenue Authorities dismissing their application for registration. The suit is in substance, as it is in form, a suit for declaration of title and the rule of limitation applicable is that provided in Article 120 and not that in Article 144."

The case in Anantaram v. Narayanarazu (4) has no application to the facts of the present case. There was an attachment of a person's land, as if it belonged to another, and on a later date the same was sold in Court auction. It was held that "the plaintiff, no doubt, might then have sued, but we do not think they were bound to sue.... The owner's title is affected by a sale in an altogether different and greater degree than it is by an attachment. We think this gives the owner of the property a fresh cause of action."

In the present case it cannot be contended that there was a fresh cause of action in 1917. The plaintiff's father was refused change of registry to his name in 1903. The plaintiff again applied in 1917 for the same relief which was refused. The suit brought after six years from the date of first refusal is barred under Article 120 of the Limitation Act, vide Akbar Khan v. Turaban (7).

It is next contended that the respondent did not deny the plaintiff's title in 1903 and that he denied plaintiff's title only in 1917. The facts in evidence do not support this contention. Operations under the Mabar Land Registration Act, 1896, went on in 1901 and 1902 and under sections 4 and 5, notices must have been issued, and such enquiry as was necessary must have been held under section 6.

The records of the operations seem to have been destroyed and it would be putting a premium upon perjury to allow the parties to adduce oral evidence as to what happened in 1903. It is clear from Exhibit VII that plaintiff's father must have been aware of what was going on then and after the entry was made in defendant's name he wanted a transfer to his name which was refused by the Settlement Officer; vide Exhibit VII.

It is next contended that the plaintiff has been in undisturbed possession for the last twelve years and that he is, therefore, entitled to bring a suit for declaration of his title against the defendant. In the first place there is no evidence as to the nature of his possession. Even if he is in possession as a tenant that would not by itself give a cause of action against the defendant.

It is further contended that every fresh denial of title gives a fresh cause of action and Bhāgī [Jalandhar Thakur] v. Jharula Das (5) is cited to support it. In that case their Lordships held "that on each occasion on which Jharula Das received and wrongfully appropriated to his own use a share of the income to which the shebait was entitled Jharula Das committed a fresh actionable wrong in respect of which a suit could be brought against him by the shebait." If, in the present case, the defendants attempted to collect or collected the income of the land, the plaintiff would have had a fresh cause of action. By asking for this identical relief in 1917, which was denied his father in 1903, the plaintiff does not acquire a fresh cause of action against the defendants. The second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Contract, suit for, breach of—Contract involving mutual obligation—Plaintiff must prove his readiness to perform his obligation on date of performance.

Where a contract imposes mutual obligations upon the contracting parties and one of the parties sues for damages for a breach of the contract he must show that, on the date fixed for the performance of the contract, he was ready and willing to perform his part of the bargain. [p. 606, col. 1]

First appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Meerut, dated the 30th of January 1919.

Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru and Dr. Surendra Nath Sen and Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Appellant.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, Mohamad Ismail Khan, who has died since the institution of the suit and is now represented by his heirs, brought the suit, out of which this appeal has arisen, to recover Rs. 9,000 odd by way of damages for breach of contract.

There were two defendants in the case (1) Hasan Ali Khan, (2) Nasirulla Khan.

Briefly put, the case for the plaintiff was that, on or about the 14th September 1916, he entered into a contract with the first defendant for the purchase of a quantity of indigo at the rate of Rs. 2.0 per factory maund. The agreement between the parties was that the indigo should be delivered to the plaintiff about the end of October. The case for the plaintiff was that, on the 7th of November 1916, the defendant, Hasan Ali Khan, refused to give him delivery, thereby breaking the contract.

It may be mentioned here that the second defendant was more or less a nominal defendant in the case. He is the servant of the first defendant and is said to have been a partner in the indigo business to the extent of a one-anna share.

The defence raises two main pleas, namely:—

(1) That there was no complete contract between the defendants and the plaintiff; and,

(2) that, if there was a complete contract between the parties, the defendants had not been guilty of breach of contract, but, on the other hand, the plaintiff himself had made default.

The learned Subordinate Judge seems to have been of opinion that there was no complete contract between the parties. He further held in the defendants' favour that, if there was a contract, the party in default was the plaintiff himself who was, therefore, not entitled to recover.

In appeal here, the case which was raised by way of defence to the effect that there was no complete contract between the parties, has been abandoned and rightly so. There can be no doubt whatever on the evidence in the case that a contract was entered into between these parties on the 14th September 1916, for the sale and purchase of indigo.

The necessary facts are all admitted in the statement made by the first defendant when he was examined as a witness in Court and the letters which passed between the parties amply prove that there was a contract made between them on the date above mentioned.

The case, indeed, be no doubt that the first defendant seems to have desired that the terms of the contract should be reduced to writing. He seems further to have desired that a substantial sum of money should be deposited with him as earnest-money, and it was because the plaintiff had refused to reduce the contract to writing and to supply the Rs. 2,000 demanded by way of earnest-money, that the plea was put forward to the effect that the contract between the parties was not complete.

We need say nothing more about this part of the case. If the first defendant desired to have any special terms made after the date upon which the contract was entered into, that would not affect the contractual relations already established between the parties.

The only question, therefore, with which we have to deal is, whether the plaintiff himself was in fault or whether the defendant wrongfully refused to give the delivery and was thereby guilty of breach of contract.

It appears that, in the month of September, when the contract was made, the indigo which was the subject-matter of the bargain between the parties, had just been manufactured. It was not possible at that time to fix a definite date for delivery before the manufactured cakes had been dried. It was not possible at the time the parties entered into the contract to fix any definite time by which the drying process would be complete. Consequently, it must be taken that, under the arrangement come to between the parties, it was for the first defendant to fix the date of delivery. He was in charge of the indigo which was stored in his Factory and he was responsible for getting the indigo into marketable condition. He was further under an obligation to see that the indigo was properly packed.

There can, we think, be no doubt that at the time the contract was made, a sample of the indigo was given to the plaintiff. Consequently, when the time for delivery came, it was the plaintiff's right to have an inspection of the indigo which was being offered to him, so that he might compare it in bulk with the sample which was in his possession. Lastly, it is clear that, on the terms of the contract, the plaintiff was under an obligation to pay for this indigo at the time of delivery. The amount in question was about Rs. 11,000.

We have been referred to certain letters which passed between the parties from the middle of September till the beginning of November. We do not propose to discuss this correspondence. It is sufficient to say that it appears that the parties were not disposed to trust each other regarding the fulfilment of the contract. Each party seems to have regarded the other with suspicion and, in short, they seem to have been dealing with each other at arm's length.

On the 1st November 1916, the defendant wrote a letter, Exhibit 6, (page 30 of the appellant's book) informing the plaintiff that the goods would be ready for delivery at the Factory at Obidani on the 5th November, 1916. The plaintiff was asked to attend at the Factory on that date, either in person or through a Karind, and to bring with him a sum of Rs. 11,000, the approximate value of the goods. In this letter, the defendant, Hasan Ali Khan, wrote that, if the plaintiff did not appear on the date in question or sent an agent, he would hold the plaintiff liable for a breach of contract and would arrange otherwise for the disposal of his goods.

The plaintiff replied to this letter by a letter dated the 4th November 1916. He took up a controversial attitude over the matter and said that he did not understand what the first defendant meant by saying that the time for delivery had been fixed. He disputed this statement and said that no time had been fixed for delivery nor was it possible that any time could be fixed because the indigo could not be weighed until it was in a dry state. In this letter, moreover, the plaintiff wrote to the defendant that the latter's indigo was not yet dry and he suggested that nothing more should be done until the defendant himself had seen the indigo and was satisfied that it was in a dry condition. We may say here that it is not apparent how the plaintiff could possibly know whether the indigo which was lying in the Factory was or was not in a dry state. His statement that it was not fit for delivery seems to have been based on some inferences which he drew from the state of indigo in some other factories of which he professed to have some knowledge.

The plaintiff admittedly did not attend at the Factory at Chidauli on the 5th November 1916. When he was cross-examined on this point and asked to explain, his answer was that he did not go to the Factory on the date in question because he had no time. He admittedly turned up in the village of Chidauli late in the evening, on the 6th and, on the 7th, he appears to have written a letter or two to the defendant.

The defendant admitted that he had received one of these letters and stated in Court that he had sent an answer to the plaintiff, a copy of which is on the record (Exhibit D). The plaintiff, in his turn, denied ever having received this letter.

In his cross-examination, the plaintiff admitted that when he went to Chidauli on the 6th November, he had no money with him. His statement in Court was that the defendant had asked him to send the money in notes after weighing of the goods had been made. This latter statement, it may be observed, does not appear to be true, for it is in direct conflict with what had been stated by the first defendant in his letter of the 1st November, in which he insisted that the purchase-money, namely, Rs. 11,000, should be brought to the Factory on the 5th November.

The plaintiff remained in Chidauli the night of the 6th, the whole of the 7th of November, and left there on the morning of the 8th of November. It is an admitted fact that all this time he never went near the first defendant's Factory although the evidence shows it is situated only a hundred yards from the house in which the plaintiff was staying.

The plaintiff was cross-examined on this point and said that he would have weighed the indigo if he had known that it was in a dry condition. He went on to say that the defendant did not show him the indigo, and he seems to have put forward this as an excuse for not taking delivery. With regard to this, it may well be asked how the defendant could have shown the plaintiff the indigo when the latter refused to go near the Factory. The plaintiff added by way of explanation that he did not care to come to the Factory because he and the defendant were not on good terms after the correspondence which had passed between them.

As opposed to this, we have the sworn statement of the first defendant whose story is to the effect that, after sending the letter of the 1st November 1916, he went to the Factory at Chidauli on the 5th and was ready to give delivery to the plaintiff whenever he came. The plaintiff failed to appear on the 5th or on the 6th, and the story is that, in these circumstances, the first defendant came to the conclusion that the plaintiff did not intend to take delivery. The defendant, therefore, began packing up the indigo in lines. He admits that he met the plaintiff at dinner on the evening of the 7th at the house of a common friend, one, Raham Ali, and he deposed to a certain conversation which he had with the plaintiff—a conversation which the plaintiff denies.

We have on the record the statement of Raham Ali, the gentleman at whose house both the parties dined on the night of the 7th of November. We have no reason to doubt the truth of the statement made by Raham Ali in Court. He seems to have been a friend of both parties. Raham Ali knew about the indigo business which was being carried on at Chidauli and he states that when the first defendant came to Chidauli on the 5th of November, the indigo cakes were dry and ready for packing. The witness himself saw some of the packing done, and he states definitely that he examined the goods and found that the cakes were in a dry condition. Speaking about the visit of the plaintiff, he deposes that the plaintiff wrote a letter which he sent to the first defendant by one Mahfuz Ali and he further swears that Mahfuz Ali brought a reply to his letter. In addition to this, the witness stated that, in consequence of a request made to him by the first defendant, he spoke to the plaintiff Mohamad Ismail about taking delivery of the indigo. The witness swears that when this message was given to the plaintiff, the latter said that he would have the indigo weighed and that the money would be paid on the date fixed for payment. The plaintiff further added that he had brought no money at that time and he concluded by saying that if the first defendant refused to deliver the indigo, he would "see to it". In other words, he threatened to take proceedings against the first defendant.

We have no doubt at all, on the statement of this witness Raham Ali, that, on the 5th of November, the indigo in the defendant's Factory was ready for delivery and in good marketable condition. There is no foundation whatever for the position taken up by the plaintiff, namely, that the indigo could not, on that date, have been in a fit condition for packing on account of its being wet. As we have said, the plaintiff had no personal knowledge whatever of the state of the indigo inside the Factory for he never went near it.

We have also mentioned a letter, Exhibit D, which was admitted in evidence in the Court below. This is an office copy of the letter which the first defendant says he sent to the plaintiff on the 7th November, 1916. It has been objected before us that this document ought not to have been received in evidence as it was produced at a late stage of the case. The record shows that the other documents in the case were filed on the 16th April 1917. This document, on the other hand, was not put into Court till the 19th December 1917, the date on which the witnesses began to be examined. It is apparent, however, that before this, i. e., in the month of July, the defendant had called upon the plaintiff to produce the original letter of which Exhibit D was a copy. The record shows that this notice was served upon the plaintiff's Counsel and there is nothing to show that the document was brought to Court. In fact, from what the plaintiff himself afterwards stated in the evidence, the document could not have been brought to Court on the assumption that the plaintiff's statement is true, for his story is that he never got any such letter. We do not believe the story for the plaintiff on this point. We have the statement of Raham Ali that when a letter was sent to the defendant on the morning of the 7th of November, a reply to that letter was brought by Mahfuz Ali; the messenger Mahfuz Ali was examined and, when making his statement regarding this particular incident, he stated that he took the letter to the defendant in the morning and came back with a letter. He at once withdrew his latter statement and said that he got no letter from the defendant, saying that he had made a mistake in stating that an answer had been given to him by the defendant. We think we may safely take it that, as a matter of fact, the first defendant did reply to the letter sent by the plaintiff on the morning of the 7th November, and that Exhibit D represents the contents of the letter which was sent by defendant No. 1. If that letter is acted upon, it seems to us to be abundantly clear that the defendant offered delivery of the goods on the 7th of November. In this letter he says that he had been waiting for the plaintiff for two days and that he had lost all hopes of the plaintiff taking delivery and had, therefore, begun to pack the indigo up with the object of sending it to Khurja. He, however, offered the plaintiff another opportunity of taking delivery and said that he might examine the indigo which was already packed and inspect the indigo which had not been put into the boxes. He intimated that delivery would be on the spot but only on condition that the plaintiff brought the money with him.

We have to choose, therefore, between these conflicting stories told by the plaintiff on the one hand, and the first defendant, on the other; and, after a careful consideration of all the evidence, we hold that the story of the defendant ought to be accepted. It is, we think, supported in very material particulars by the testimony of the witness Raham Ali whose bona fides we have no reason to suspect.

It has been urged upon us with considerable force that the probabilities are all in favour of the defendant having refused delivery and for the plaintiff being desirous of taking it. There can, we think, be no doubt that, subsequent to the date of the contract, the market price of indigo had risen considerably. The plaintiff says that the first defendant wanted to back out of his bargain in order to profit by the rise in the price, and it is argued that, with this rise in price, the plaintiff stood to make a very substantial profit and would not, therefore, likely have declined the delivery if the goods were ready for him. There is, no doubt, considerable force in this argument but one thing has to be remembered and that is this, namely, that, under the terms of the contract, the plaintiff was under an obligation to produce a sum of about Rs. 11,000 at the time the delivery was to be given and, after an examination of the evidence, we have come to the conclusion that the real reason why the contract was not completed was that the plaintiff could not find the money. His conduct on the 7th of November at Chidauli seems to us to have been altogether inconsistent with any notion of an intention on his part to take delivery. It is quite inexplicable to us why he failed to go over to the Factory, a few hundred yards away, and satisfy himself that the goods which were being offered to him were up to sample and in a fit condition to be put upon the market. He asks us to hold that the defendant really had no intention of offering delivery on that date and that, in fact, the goods were not in a fit condition to be delivered on that date. On this latter point, the plaintiff admittedly has no knowledge of his own and the other evidence in the case shows that the indigo was dry and fit for packing. Again, we are not satisfied with the plaintiff's explanation of his failure to go to Chidauli on the 5th of November, the date which was fixed by the first defendant. As we have pointed out, the only answer he could give regarding this failure was that, on the date in question, he could find no time.

In a case like this in which there were mutual obligations on the parties, it was for the plaintiff to show that, on the date fixed for performance of the contract, he was ready and willing to perform his part of the bargain. It may perhaps not have been necessary for him to prove that he made an actual tender of the money but it was, at any rate, incumbent on him to show that he had made arrangements for the purchase-money and was in a position to hand it over to the first defendant as soon as he was satisfied that bulk of the goods was in accordance with the sample and that everything was satisfactory. He admittedly made no attempt to compare the bulk of the goods with the sample or, in fact, to do any other thing which he was bound to do under the terms of the contract. As we have said, the impression which is left upon us after a perusal of the evidence in the case is that the plaintiff was in embarrassed circumstances and could not find the money Rs. 11,000 at the time when it was wanted. We are satisfied, therefore, that, though the judgment of the Court below is open to criticism on certain other grounds which we need not pause to consider, the learned Subordinate Judge was right in holding that the plaintiff had failed to prove his case that the defendant was guilty of breach of contract. In these circumstances, the suit was rightly dismissed and this appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

JUDGMENT.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—The judgment debtor is the appellant. He objects to the execution of the decree on two grounds, (1) that the accounts prepared by the office are wrong, and (2) that a Receiver may be appointed by the Court for the properties sought to be sold so that he may pay the balance of the decretal amount in due time. Both these grounds have been overruled by the Court below.

The first ground raises a question of appropriation of the sums paid by the judgment-debtor from time to time towards the satisfaction of the decree. It is said that the payments should have been appropriated towards the principal and not towards the interest. Reference has been made by the learned Vakil on behalf of the appellant to the final decree passed in the case on the 19th February 1915, the petition of compromise filed in Execution Case No. 29 of 1915 on the 25th September 1915 and the petition dated the 5th April 1917 filed by the decree-holder certifying payment of Rs. 23,000 and exempting a part of the mortgage properties. None of these documents are clear as to an agreement between the parties relating to the appropriation of payments made by the judgment-debtor, namely, as to whether they should be credited towards the principal or the interest. There is no indication of any intention of the parties that the payments made should be credited towards the principal in the first instance. In the petition of the 25th September 1915 the judgment debtor accepted the figure mentioned in the sale proclamation, namely, Rs. 1,12,787-8-9 as the correct amount of the decree, presumably both principal and interest and costs. Referring to that petition the learned Subordinate Judge says: "So that the principal decretal money was considered by them to be Rs. 1,12,757-8-9 which includes costs and interest. Payments made were to be deducted out of that sum. Hence this objection fails. Interest was to run on the amount remaining due after the sum paid. There is no stipulation contrary to this. Therefore, I disallow the objection and hold that the account is correct."

In the absence of any agreement to the contrary, the payments have first to be appropriated towards the interest and the balance of the payment, if any, is then to be credited to the principal. Sections 59 to 61 of the Contract Act do not expressly deal with interest, but the principle underlying these sections can well apply to interest as well. In the case of Luchmeswar Sing Bahadur v. Syad Luif Ali Khan (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council affirmed the above principle in the following words:

"Where payment was made upon a bond, the amount paid being less than the interest due, held the payment ought to go to reduce the amount of interest due, and the creditor in a suit upon the bond was entitled to a decree for the principal and balance of interest up to date of decree. This principle of appropriation has been applied from the earliest time to payments made with respect to mortgage-debt: vide the case of Gooroo Doss Dutt v. Oona Churn Roy (2). The argument of the learned Vakil that the appropriation of payments towards the interest would practically amount to charging compound interest against the terms of the bond can be well met by referring to the following passage in the decision of the aforesaid case:

"The balance of interest is never added to the principal so as to produce compound interest; but the practice appears to us to be that the payment so made is to be appropriated to the interest that has accrued. We believe that to be the established practice in cases of mortgage, and we see no reason why that practice should not be followed in the execution of ordinary decrees."

See also the case of Maharaja of Benares v. Har Narain Singh (3). The view taken by the Subordinate Judge is, therefore, correct, and the contention urged on behalf of the judgment-debtor is overruled.

Mr. Yunus also appearing on behalf of the judgment-debtor addressed us on the second point urging that in the circumstances of the case, a Receiver should be appointed in the interest of the decree holder and the judgment-debtor. The decree-holder opposes the application of the judgment-debtor for the appointment of a Receiver, therefore, it cannot be said that the appointments of Receiver would be for the benefit of the decree-holder. Upon the merits of the case the Court below has held that no Receiver ought to be appointed. In its opinion the income of the property is too small to satisfy within a reasonable time the large mortgage still outstanding of about Rs. 60,000. Apart from there being no substance in the application of the judgment-debtor on merits, I think that it would be stretching too far the discretion of the Court under Order XL, rule 1 in the matter of the appointment of Receiver, if we were to deprive the decree-holder of the right accrued to him under the decree to sell the mortgaged property. To do that would be to do away with the solemn agreement between the parties set forth in the mortgage bond expressly stipulating that the decree-holder shall be entitled to sell the property in order to realise the amount due thereunder. I do not think that the Court should step in and use the discretion, if any, vested by the aforesaid rule of the Code of Civil Procedure in order to rip up the contract entered into between the parties. The decree-holder knows his interest best and he has a right to stand upon the decree and to ask the Court to sell the property. I need hardly mention that section 51 of the Code has absolutely no application. That section prescribes the mode in which a decree-holder may seek an execution of his decree, one of the modes being by the appointment of a Receiver. The section does not give any right to the judgment-debtor to apply for the appointment of a Receiver. I, therefore, reject this contention also on behalf of the judgment-debtor.

The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Jaswal Rajputs of Mauza Deoli, in the Una Tahsil of the Hoshiarpur District, observe the Pagwand rule of succession.

In determining which rule of succession applies to a particular family, the safest guide is the rule which is proved to have been observed in the family.

Mr. Gullu Ram for Mr. Anant Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The parties are Jaswal Rajputs of Deoli village in Una Tahsil and the question for decision is whether they observe the Pagwand or the Ohundawand rule.

There can be no gainsaying the fact that in the past the Ohundawand rule was widely prevalent among the Rajputs of the lower hills of Hoshiarpur but for many years past feeling has veered round in favour of Pagwand.

The riwayat of 1869 favoured Ohundawand, but the more recent compilation of 1914 favours Pagwand, though exceptions in which the Ohundawand rule has been observed are quoted.

In each case, however, the safest guide is the rule which is proved to have been observed in the family of the parties and in this very family we find a very clear case of the observance of Pagwand, so that I agree entirely with the Courts below that plaintiff has failed to prove the existence in his family of a custom of succession by the Ohundawand rule.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

GOPABANDHU DAS—ACCUSED—
RESPONDENT.Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 499—Defamation—Imputations against persons who cannot be identified—Printing unfounded rumours—Good faith—Journalistic duties

A defamatory statement to be actionable must contain an imputation concerning some particular person or persons whose identity can be established. An imputation against an Association or collection of persons jointly may amount to defamation within the meaning of section 499, Indian Penal Code, but it must be an imputation capable of being brought home to a particular individual or collection of individuals as such. [p. 611, col. 2; p. 612, col. 1.]

It is unnecessary that the person whose conduct is called in question should be described by name. It is sufficient if on the evidence it can be shown that the imputation was directed against a particular person or persons who can be identified. The rule is that if the words used contain no reflection upon a particular individual or individuals but may equally well apply to others, although belonging to the same class, an action will not lie. [p. 612, cols. 1 & 2.]

To publish, without regard to the feelings of those against whom it is directed, every foul rumour that may be reported to him, cannot be justified by any recognised standard of editorial duty, specially in a case where the untruth of the rumour could easily have been established by a few simple enquiries on the spot. The Editor in such a case neither acts in "good faith" nor for the "public good." [p. 611, col. 2.]

Sir John Bourn's case, (1896) Cro. Eliz. 497; 78 E. R. 747 and James v. Rutledge, (1899) 4 Co. Rep. 17a; 76 E. R. 900, relied upon.

Appeal by the Local Government, under section 417 of the Criminal Procedure Code, against an order of acquittal, dated the 21st November 1921, passed by the Magistrate, First Class, Khurda, in the District of Puri.

Mr. H. L. Nandkeoyar, Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

MILLER, C. J.—This is an appeal under section 417 of the Criminal Procedure Code against the acquittal of Gopabandhu Das, who was tried before Mr. S. C. Bose, Magistrate of the First Class, stationed at Khurda Sub-Division in the Puri District. The charge upon which the respondent was tried was that of publishing a defamatory libel under sections 499 500 of the Indian Penal Code. The complainants are four constables stationed at the Begunia Police Station in the Puri District, who allege that they have been brought into contempt and hatred and their characters seriously defamed by the publication of the libel in question. The respondent is alleged to be the Editor, and is proved to be the Printer and Publisher of a weekly newspaper, named the "Samaj", printed in the Oriya language and published from Satyabadi in the Puri District. The article complained of appeared in the issue of the 13th August 1921. It is headed "Serious, if true" and after stating "we hear that last week a boy with a labourer was going through Begunia taking his young adult sister to her mother-in-law's house," it proceeds to describe how the boy just before evening left his sister by the road side some distance from the Begunia hat at the call of nature and, the labourer having also left her to purchase betel, two constables afterwards dragged the woman away and shut her up in a room not far off locking the door and sitting outside with the key in their possession. On his return the boy not finding his sister began to cry and made enquiries of various people. It then continues: "Some boys were playing near by. They had seen the two constables drag the woman away. Having got the information from them, the brother went to the constables. On asking the constables about his sister they replied in the negative. He entreated them in various ways to open the door. The constables in return gave him a good beating. While the boy was coming crying after being beaten, he saw Ajoy Babu, the Sub-Divisional Officer of Khurda, coming in a motor car. He ran to him, threw himself on the road and besought him. Ajoy Babu stopped the motor car and went to the place of occurrence. He asked the constables for the key to open the room. The constable having refused, he broke open the door with kicks and entered into the room. He found the young woman naked and strangled to death by hanging herself with her wearing cloth. All this happened within an hour. He has sent up the dead body and the constables. We hear that certain higher Police Officers have been sent up. But we do not know the real facts of the case."

There can be no dispute that this article contains very serious charges of misconduct against two constables which, if true, would show that they were totally unfitted to act as such and were guilty of gross impropriety. On the evidence it is abundantly proved that there is not a word of truth from beginning to end in the whole of this story. The complainants contend that the article in question is an imputation against their character, they being the only four constables stationed at Begunia Thara. It is also proved that the immediate effect of this article was to lead people to believe that the misconduct referred to in the article had been committed by some or other of the Police constables stationed at Begunia. The people at the hat treated them with contempt, and despite their disclaimer would not believe that the allegations were not true, having been published in the "Samaj." The constables in question also received numerous letters and postcards from their friends and relatives enquiring about the affair and asking if it were true. It is also certain that the publication of an article of this sort must have caused considerable arguish of mind to the complainants, who undoubtedly were, for some time at all events, treated by many of the people in the neighbourhood with ridicule and contempt. If this was the object of the writer of the article, there can be no doubt that from his point of view it was successful as the complainants were insulted and abused by the villagers for having committed an act for which there was no shadow of foundation in truth. As soon as it was brought to their notice, the Police made searching enquiries but could elicit nothing as to how the rumour got about. Neither the Police nor any of the witnesses who were called at the trial ever heard of such a rumour before it appeared in the respondent's paper. The respondent, who states that he is a leader of what is known as the non-co operation movement in Orissa and that his paper "the Samaj" is considered an influential organ of the movement, has not deigned to give any evidence as to how he came to publish this unfounded rumour in his newspaper or to disclose the source from which he derived the information. He takes up the attitude that to enter upon any defence in this case would be contrary to his principles as a non-co-operator. The tenets of the political creed to which he subscribes, however, have not prevented him from putting in a long written statement, covering about three pages of closely printed matter, in which he admits printing and publishing the paragraph after reading it and seeks to justify his conduct on the ground that the discharge of journalistic duties requires that all cases of injustice and oppression should be published, with a view to drawing to them the attention of the Authorities and of the public to set matters right or to take such action as the situation may demand. It does not appear to have occurred to him that the publication of such an article was bound to have the effect of seriously injuring the reputation of the Police in the neighbourhood and more particularly those stationed at Begunia and to subject them to insult and annoyance, nor does it appear that he ever stopped to consider whether there was any foundation of truth for the rumour, which he alone and those connected with his newspaper appear to have heard. His attitude appears to be, judging from the argumentative matter disclosed in the written statement, that every rumour, however ill founded and however much pain it may give to those concerned, which comes to the ears of the Editor of a newspaper, should at once be published broadcast to the public, provided the paper states it does not vouch for the truth of the story. This he contends is acting in good faith and for the public good in the discharge of his journalistic duties, as the publication of the paragraph, made in the manner in which it was, would lead people to doubt the truth of the report and would go a great way in saving the reputation of those who had been damaged by the wide currency of the rumour. The matter was drawn to the attention of the respondent by a letter from Mr. Guise, the Superintendent of Police at

GOVERNMENT ADVOCATE v. GOPABANDHU DAS.

Puri, written on the 23rd August to the Editor of "the Samaj" in which he states that he would be obliged if the Editor could supply him with the name of the correspondent of the original report who brought the matter to his notice, this information being required for the purpose of a Departmental enquiry into this serious allegation. The reply to this, written by the Manager on the 1st September, was a regret that, owing to the absence of the Editor from the station, a reply could not be sent in time, but added that the paragraph referred to contained sufficient material for an enquiry, either judicial or Departmental, for the disclosure of the whole truth about the report, and that the letter was being sent to the Editor for a further reply. A further letter, dated the 3rd September, from Mr. Guise asking for further information in reply to the previous letter, was answered by the Manager on the 24th September referring Mr. Guise to an article appearing in the issue of the paper of that date. This article refers to an earlier paragraph in the issue of the 27th August which stated that, "the truth or otherwise of the rumour about the Begunia incident which appeared in the 'Samaj' of the 13th last has not yet been known. We are enquiring about it. On receipt of information we shall publish it in due time."

The article of the 24th September then proceeds in a manner which, if anything, aggravates the original offense. It says:—"We heard of the occurrence from various people. It was, of course, a rumour. But considering the form which this rumour assumed in various places in the Mofassil, we thought it our duty to publish it in the paper to ascertain the truth or otherwise thereof. Rumours are not always unfounded. Indeed, many hidden truths are often found in rumours. In publishing this rumour in the paper we expected that the real facts would be forthcoming from the Local Authorities and the public. In the meantime, we, too, were not idle. However, it appears from our inquiries that this rumour originated in the following manner. At the time when this occurrence took place, a Panjabi was found at Janti taking away a woman of Begunia side and he went away leaving her there. A few days before this, a murder had been committed in Bolgarh side, Babu Ajoy Chandra Das, the Sub-Divisional Officer of Khurda, was then enquiring into it. To a combination of these two events may be traced the origin of the rumour." It apparently did not occur to the Editor or Publisher to ascertain the truth or otherwise of the rumour from the Police Station at Begunia or by making enquiries on the spot before jumping to the conclusion that it was their duty to publish it in order to find out the truth. The slightest enquiries on the spot and from the Police would have put the respondent in possession of the facts which would at once have shown him that his duty lay, certainly not in publishing the rumour, but in contradicting it, if any action at all on his part should appear necessary.

Having read the article complained of and the evidence in the case, one is driven to the conclusion that its publication was altogether unjustifiable and cannot be excused on any supposed ground of journalistic duty. A very little reflection, I feel sure, ought to convince the respondent that to publish, without regard to the feeling of those against whom it is directed, every foul rumour that may be reported to him cannot be justified by any recognised standard of editorial duty: and especially is this the case when, as here, the untruth of the rumour could easily have been established by a few simple enquiries on the spot. I cannot help regretting that, even after enquiries had been made and its untruth demonstrated, there is no expression of regret, either in the written statement or in the subsequent articles published in the newspaper, for the publication of this false rumour. It does not follow, however, that its publication necessarily amounts to an offence under section 499 of the Indian Penal Code. However reprehensible and morally unjustifiable the words complained of may be, they must, to be actionable, contain an imputation concerning some particular person or persons whose identity can be established. An imputation against an Association or collection of persons jointly may also amount to defamation within the meaning of the section, but at the same time it must be an imputation capable of being brought home to a particular individual or collection of individuals as such. The article in question is not directed against the constables of the Begunia Thana collectively so that they, as a body, could assert that each and all of them had been libelled. Nor can it be said that any two ascertained individuals have been the object of the attack. It is unnecessary that the person whose conduct is called in question should be described by name. It is sufficient if, on the evidence, it can be shown that the imputation was directed towards a particular person or persons who can be identified. In the present case the imputation complained of was directed against two constables only, and it would be impossible, in my opinion, upon the facts disclosed to ascertain, with any degree of certitude, who those two constables were. They may have been and in fact were taken by the villagers to have been two constables attached to the Begunia Thana, but there is nothing to indicate which were the two in question. Had the attack been directed towards all four of the constables at Begunia so that they could be identified, I think they would have had a collective cause of complaint which would have been sufficient to found a charge of criminal libel. It is not even certain that the persons aimed at were any of the constables stationed at Begunia, but even could a legitimate inference be drawn to this effect it would, in my opinion, afford no ground for a charge of publishing a defamatory libel.

Certain cases have been drawn to our attention by the learned Assistant Government Advocate in support of this appeal to show that, whatever the intention of a person charged, if the defamatory words can reasonably be considered as applying to a particular individual or individuals, an action will lie, but in each of those cases the individuality of the person or persons attacked has been proved; and I am not aware of any modern case which has decided that an action will lie for defamatory words written concerning one or other person out of a particular class unless his identity can be established. The respondent has not been represented in this appeal; we have, therefore, not had the assistance of any argument on his behalf and the old cases all seem to show that an action will not lie for defamatory words which might apply equally to any one or more persons out of a larger class. In Sir John Bourn's case (1) where a party in a cause said to three men who had just given evidence against him: "One of you three is a perjurer," it was held that no action lay. In James v. Rutledge (2) it was said if the defendant said to a master: "One of thy servants hath robbed me," in the absence of special circumstances no one could sue, for it is not apparent who is the person slandered and there are many other cases to the same effect. The rule is that if the words used contain no reflection upon a particular individual or individuals but may equally well apply to others, although belonging to the same class, an action will not lie.

"So if the words reflect impartially upon either A or B or upon some one of a certain number or class and there is nothing to show which one was meant, no one can sue; Where the words reflect on each and every member of a certain class, each or all can sue" (Odgers on Libel and Slander, 5th Edition, 148).

In the present case, I am reluctantly driven to the conclusion that it is impossible in the circumstances for any two of the complainants to show that they were the individuals aimed at by the article in question, and, however morally unjustifiable that article may be, I think this appeal must be dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by the Crown to enhance the sentence of transportation for life passed upon Shwe Hla U for the murder of his uncle, to the extreme penalty.

The facts are simple and are hardly contested.

The accused had been working for his uncle, but left before the completion of the work. He had been paid 40 baskets of paddy, but some balance of wages was still due to him. On the day in question Kala Aung, a ten house-gang, and an ex-pongyi were going to deceased's hut to get a bamboo. They met the accused who went with them. The accused demanded the balance of his wages, and was told that they would be paid in a few days' time. According to the deceased's widow, the balance was fixed at 60 baskets of paddy, and in the accused's statement to the Commuting Magistrate he speaks of the balance of 60 baskets. Kala Aung says there was no quarrel between the two men at that time, and the widow of the deceased says that, when accused was told that the balance would be 60 baskets, he said it was too little. Her husband said it was not, and the accused replied: "All right, give the balance 60 baskets now." He was told that it would be given in four or five days' time. There is no suggestion that there was any serious quarrel or, indeed, any quarrel at all between the two men. Kala Aung says that he and the ex-pongyi left, leaving the accused behind them. The widow and the two other women eye-witnesses say that the accused followed Kala Aung. Shortly afterwards he returned, saying he left his pipe behind. In his statement in the Sessions Court accused admits that it was true that he went back to the hut to look for his pipe. According to the prosecution witnesses, after searching for his pipe all over the place, he went to a hut on the talin where the deceased was seated and, when he got behind him, he struck him a violent blow on the left side of the neck which caused instantaneous death.

The evidence shows that he is a left-handed man, and there is no reason to doubt that he is so. According to the medical evidence, therefore, the blow would have been struck from behind, and according to the prosecution evidence, there was no assault or justification for the cowardly attack such as this beyond that he got disgusted for not getting more wages and not getting them at once.

The accused's statements are to the effect that, when he demanded the balance of his wages, deceased struck him with a stick and he fell down; that accused then picked up something, he did not know whether it was a stick or a do, and warding off the blow with it. He says he got one blow, which fell on his back. In the Sessions Court he said that, when he went back to look for his pipe, deceased came out and beat him, saying "Have you come to pick a quarrel with me." He warding off the blow.

Accused calls two witnesses who are nephews of the deceased. One says that he stopped at a hut about 30 bamboos' length away from deceased's hut. While there, he heard some one abusing and looking round saw the deceased running to his hut. He did not see the accused at that time. When he got near the hut, he heard deceased's wife cry out "cutting, cutting," and then saw the accused run away. The cutting was inside a hut, but according to this witness, the cry he heard was raised when the deceased got near the hut. The other witness was seated about 40 bamboos' length from the deceased's hut. He heard deceased using abusive language and saw him go towards his hut. When he got near the hut, he heard people shouting out "cutting, cutting" and then saw the accused run away.

According to both these witnesses, therefore, they should have seen the cutting. We do not think any reliance can be placed on this evidence. The learned Additional Sessions Judge has apparently been influenced by the fact that they are nephews of the deceased, and he, therefore, holds that there is no reason to doubt their statements. This is a most inadequate reason. He further finds that the three women witnesses for the prosecution for obvious reasons tried their best to shield the deceased as much as possible. He argues that it is not likely that the accused would have assaulted his relation without provocation, and his final conclusion is that it may be safely presumed that there was some provocation. On that ground he considers the sentence of death should not be passed.

The Indian Penal Code allows one or other of two sentences for the offence of culpable homicide amounting to murder. Section 367 (5) of the Code of Criminal Procedure provides that if the accused is convicted of an offence punishable with death and the Court sentences him to any punishment other than death, the Court shall, in its judgment state the reason why sentence of death was not passed.

In Crown v. Tha Sin (1) a Full Bench of this Court held that "the extreme sentence is the normal sentence; the mitigated sentence is the exception. It is not for the Judge to ask himself whether there are reasons for imposing the penalty of death, but whether there are reasons for abstaining from doing so." With this view we entirely concur. If the presiding Judge does not pass the sentence of death, he is bound to record the reasons why death sentence was not passed, that is to say, he must find, in the language of the judgment of the case just cited, that there are really extenuating circumstances and not merely an absence of aggravating circumstances.

In the present case it is clear that, whatever discussion there might have been as to what the balance of the wages was to be, there was no serious quarrel between the two men, and it is clear and is, indeed, admitted that the accused left and shortly afterwards returned on the plea of searching for his lost pipe. There is no proof and no reason to suppose that there was any quarrel between the two men at that time. The story of an assault and the warding off of a blow with the da that he had in his hand is wholly unconvincing. We must, therefore, hold that he came back on the plea of searching for his pipe, and that even if he had lost his pipe there, he suddenly and without any cause attacked the deceased from behind, striking him a blow on a vital part with a dahma with great force and causing instantaneous death, and was, therefore, guilty of murder. Thus, it is hard to see what extenuating circumstances can be held to have existed. Even had he been disgusted at the amount of wages that it was proposed to give him, that could not justify the return and the cowardly assault which was made clearly with the intention to cause death.

The existence of some provocation is not enough to justify the passing of the mitigated sentence, and we are clearly of opinion that in this case the learned Additional Sessions Judge should have passed a capital sentence. However, the sentence he did pass was passed on the 1st of June 1921. Nine months have elapsed since that date, and under these circumstances we do not see our way to now enhancing the sentence.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 233
—Joint trial for perjury under section 198, Penal Code—Illegality.

The joint trial of several persons for perjury under section 198 of the Penal Code is illegal.

Bagga Singh v. Empress, 39 P. R. 1889 Cr., Kotha Subba Chetti v. Queen, 6 M. 252; 7 Ind. Jur. 247; 1 Weir 116; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 454 and Empress of India v. Niaz Ali, 5 A. 17; A. W. N. (1882) 161; 3 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 59, followed.

Petition, under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of an order of the Sessions Judge, Amritsar, dated the 19th August 1921, affirming that of the Honorary Magistrate, First Class, Amritsar, dated the 16th July 1921, Lala Devi Das, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT—The petitioners in this case appeared as witnesses in a case in which Dalip Singh charged Ganda Singh under section 324, Indian Penal Code. The petitioners gave evidence in support of the charge. The case against Ganda Singh was found to be false and he was discharged. Thereupon Ganda Singh applied for sanction to prosecute Dalip Singh along with the three petitioners for offences under sections 211/193, Indian Penal Code. Sanction was granted. Thereupon Ganda Singh complainant brought a complaint against the petitioners and Dalip Singh. Apparently Dalip Singh had absconded. The complainant, therefore, elected to proceed against the petitioners, Lachhman Singh, Udham Singh and Thakar Singh. They were tried jointly and found guilty by the Magistrate and were sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 20 each. Their convictions have been upheld by the Sessions Judge, Amritsar, in appeal. They have accordingly come up on revision to this Court and one of the pleas taken on their behalf by their learned Counsel, Mr. Devi Das, is that the joint trial of the petitioners was illegal and that the petitioners had been prejudiced by the procedure adopted by the Magistrate. In support of his contention the learned Vakil has relied upon the case of Bagga Singh v. Empress (1). The learned Judges who decided the above case laid down the following rule which is embodied in the head-note:

"Held, that each of the accused, on the supposition that the evidence given by him was false, had committed a distinct offence, for which he ought to have been tried separately under the provisions of section 233, Criminal Procedure Code, and as the course adopted by the Magistrate had deprived each of the accused of the advantage of calling the other persons, who were now in the position of so accused, to give evidence for him, which evidence would have had to be considered by the Magistrate trying the case, the accused must be held to have been prejudiced."

There are other authorities also supporting this proposition—see, for example, Kotha Subba Chetti v. Queen (2) and Empress of India v. Niaz Ali (3). The convictions of the petitioners, therefore, must be set aside as being illegal and I accordingly set them aside.

The only question that remains for consideration is whether I should order a new trial of the petitioners or not. It appears that Ganda Singh made an application on the 15th of December 1920 to the Magistrate praying to be allowed to withdraw the complaint on the ground that sufficient evidence was not available. The Magistrate, however, was of opinion that the prosecution had been ordered by Mr. Puckle, the Magistrate, and the complainant could not be allowed to withdraw. It is, however, apparent from the record that the proceedings were instituted on the complaint made by Ganda Singh. Under these circumstances, I do not think it is necessary that I should order a fresh trial. It will, however, be open to Ganda Singh to file a fresh complaint if he chooses. The petition is allowed and the petitioners are acquitted.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 79 OF 1921.

February 28, 1921.

Present:—Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad.

PARMESHWAR LALL MITTER—

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 342, 364; 263; 264—Summons-case—Intricate case—Summary trial—Examination of accused, whether essential—Plea of accused, record of, under section 263, whether enough—Postponement of cross-examination of witness by direction of Magistrate—Cross-examination, effect of not allowing—Local inspection by Magistrate—Magistrate's duty to put inspection note on record—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 447—Criminal trespass—Possession, finding as to.

Where the question in a case under section 447, Penal Code, is an intricate one dealing with the title and possession of the parties and the evidence led in the case by the parties is not convincing as to the exact location and the identity of the land, a summary trial is not proper and the case should be tried in the ordinary way. [p. 617, cols. 1 & 2.]

Even in the trial of summons-cases an examination of the accused under section 342 is essential and obligatory and an omission to do so would vitiate the whole trial. Neither sections 263 and 264, nor any other provision in the Chapter for summary trials does away expressly with the requirement of sections 342 and 364 of the Code relating to the examination of the accused. [p. 618, col. 1.]

The plea of the accused under clause (g) of section 263 cannot possibly take the place of his examination under section 342, for the former occurs at the initial stage of the case and the latter after the termination of the prosecution evidence. [p. 618, col. 1.]

Under the procedure laid down for the trial of summons-cases, the accused has no right to postpone the cross-examination of any prosecution witness as in the case of the trial of a warrant case. But if the cross-examination is postponed in accordance with the direction of the Magistrate, the Magistrate is bound to give further opportunity to the accused to cross-examine the witness. Without such a cross-examination, the evidence of the witness is legally inadmissible [p. 618, col. 2.]

There is nothing in law to prevent a Magistrate from making local inspection, but in order to give an opportunity to the accused to remove any wrong impression created on the mind of the Magistrate, it is fair that a note of the inspection should be placed on the record, and the Magistrate commits a grave irregularity particularly when without placing a note of the inspection on the record, he uses the information gathered locally as substantive evidence in the case. [p. 618, col. 2; p. 619, col. 1.]

Section 447, Indian Penal Code, requires it to be affirmatively and positively held that the complainant was in possession of the land in dispute with respect to which the criminal trespass is said to have been committed. [p. 619, col. 1.]

Application against the conviction and order of sentence passed by the Honorary Magistrate, Bhagalpur.

Messrs. J. N. Maitra, N. O. Roy and S. S. Bose, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Khurshaid Humain, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner has been convicted under section 447, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 51 by the Honorary Magistrate of Bhagalpur. The trial was held according to the procedure laid down in Chapter XXII of the Code of Criminal Procedure for summary trials.

As section 447 is a summons case, the procedure laid down under Chapter XX of the Code for the trial of summons cases would apply to the trial of the present case by virtue of section 262 of the Code. The trial is impugned as having been vitiated by the irregularities committed by the Magistrate. It is also urged that in the circumstances of the case the Magistrate ought to have tried the case not summarily but by the regular procedure as there were complicated questions of title and possession involved in the dispute between the parties. For this reliance is placed upon sub section 2 of section 260 of the Code. The irregularities complained of may be summarised as follows:—

- (1) That the examination of the accused under section 342 was not taken or recorded;
- (2) that no opportunity was given to the accused to cross-examine the complainant on the main question relating to the occurrence;
- (3) that the Magistrate acted illegally and irregularly in not placing a note of his local inspection on the record;
- (4) that the Magistrate imported into his judgment facts, the knowledge whereof he gained at the local investigation, and did not confine himself strictly to the evidence taken by him in Court; and
- (5) that the findings of the Magistrate are not sufficient for a conviction under section 447, Indian Penal Code.

PARMESHVAR LALL MITTER v. EMPEROR.

In order to appreciate the first contention, namely, that the trial in the present case should not have been by the summary procedure, it is necessary to state very briefly the circumstances relating to the dispute between the parties.

In 1902 the complainant purchased about 12 bighas of Brahmottar land situate in village Jichushook. There was a dispute with regard to either the whole or a portion of this land between the complainant and the neighbouring village Shampur which resulted in favour of the complainant. Subsequently he acquired the raiya interest also in respect of those 12 bighas. In 1905 the Record of Rights was prepared. Plots Nos. 83 to 86 have been shown in the Record of Rights as belonging to the complainant and plot No. 82 as belonging to Mr. Grant. In 1908 there was a civil litigation between the complainant and Mr. Grant which resulted in a decree in favour of the complainant with respect to two bighas odd. The complainant obtained dakhaldehali in 1911. The present dispute is in connection with plot No. 82, measuring 11 kathas. The accused obtained lease of mustajiri from Mr. Grant including the land in dispute, plot No. 82. The complainant's case is that the accused on the day of occurrence forcibly ploughed about 11 kathas of land in plot No. 82. The question before the Magistrate for determination was, therefore, whether the 11 kathas of land in dispute is a part and parcel of the two bighas odd decreed in favour of the complainant in the year 1908. The above statement will clearly show that the dispute between the parties is far from being simple. In the litigation in the Civil Court the plots of land were not specified and it is difficult to find out whether it corresponds with plot No. 82 of the survey or not. According to the survey the land in dispute is admittedly to the name of the accused's lessor and is covered by the lease granted to him. It was, therefore, for the complainant to prove conclusively that the particular plot was covered by the decree and the writ of delivery of possession obtained by him from the Civil Court. On the 11th August 1920 it appears from the order-sheet that the Magistrate admitted that the question involved in the present case was an intricate one dealing with title and possession of the parties and that upon that ground it was transferred from the file of one Honorary Magistrate to the present one, apparently because the Honorary Magistrate who had tried the case was an experienced retired officer. The evidence led in the case by the parties was far from convincing as to the exact location and the identity of the land in question. This necessitated a local inspection by the Magistrate. From the judgment of the Magistrate it is clear that he could not entirely depend upon the evidence before him, but had perforce to take assistance of the impression upon his mind created by the local inspection and upon the statements of the parties made before him while pointing out the land in dispute. Upon this sole question as to whether the land in dispute was identical with plot No. 82, the Magistrate has devoted about 11 typed pages. This could not possibly come within the scope of a summary trial wherein one point would require the Magistrate to write such a long judgment. It establishes beyond doubt that the case was one which on the face of it came under sub section (2) of section 260 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and the Magistrate would have done well if he had exercised discretion vested in him by that section and had tried the case by the ordinary procedure. The prejudice resulting from the summary procedure to the accused is obvious, for the question for determination depended upon the documentary evidence and a comparison of the survey map with the locality. The learned Magistrate himself says that he tried his best to draw up a sketch of the land in accordance with the survey map. I think that if the course adopted by the Magistrate were not summary, the best way to solve the difficulty would have been to depute a Commissioner to find out the exact position of the land in question. I, therefore, agree with the contention that the procedure adopted for the trial of the case was not proper and that the case should have been tried in an ordinary way.

The irregularities complained of appear to me to be substantial and fatal to the trial of the petitioner. There is no trace in the record of the examination of the accused under section 342 which, as has been settled by this Court in a number of cases, is essential and obligatory. The Bombay High Court in the case of Fernandes v. Emperor (1), following the decision of this Court in the case of Raghu Bhumi v. Emperor (2), held that the principle of the decision of this Court extends to the trial of summons cases also and that the omission to examine the accused under section 342 would vitiate the whole trial. No doubt, under section 263 of the Code the Court is required to prepare a record of the summary trial giving the particulars enumerated in that section. True also that the Magistrate need not record the evidence of the witnesses or frame a formal charge, and that the judgment of the Court embodying the substance of the evidence and the particulars mentioned in section 263 shall only form the record of the case (section 264). But neither these sections 263 and 264, nor any other provision in the Chapter for summary trials does away expressly with the requirement of sections 342 and 364 of the Code relating to the examination of the accused. The Magistrate is not absolved from the responsibility of recording the examination of the accused simply because the trial was summary. The plea of the accused under clause (g) of section 263 cannot possibly take the place of the examination of the accused, for the former naturally occurs at the initial stage of the case and the latter after the termination of the prosecution evidence and before the accused is called on to enter into his defense. It appears from the record that the complainant was examined and cross-examined on the 23rd August and on the next date, the 30th August, two more witnesses were examined and cross-examined. The case was then fixed for the 13th September for the defense. On that date the accused made an application stating that the complainant was not cross-examined upon the occurrence as the Magistrate intimated to the Pleader for the accused that the cross-examination should at that stage be confined as to the title of the parties to the land in question. The petitioner accordingly desired that an opportunity should be given to him to cross-examine the complainant on the occurrence. The Magistrate rejected this petition on the ground that the complainant had been cross-examined at great length. There is no denial by the Magistrate of the facts set forth in the petition, namely, that the cross-examination of the complainant about the occurrence was postponed with his direction, nor has any explanation been submitted to this Court to contradict the statement made in the petition to this Court. It would appear that the complainant was, as a matter of fact, not cross-examined at all about the occurrence, whereas the two witnesses examined on the 30th August were cross-examined. There is no reason why the complainant should not have been cross-examined upon the occurrence, inasmuch as the accused denied that there was any occurrence such as was alleged by the prosecution. The Magistrate apparently was in doubt as to the question of title involved in the case and consequently wanted to have the evidence laid upon that point first. In the circumstances, the accused has been denied the opportunity of cross-examining the complainant upon the occurrence and the Magistrate would have exercised his discretion better if he had allowed the complainant to be re-called for cross-examination. No doubt, under the procedure laid down for the trial of summons cases, the accused has no right to postpone the cross-examination of any prosecution witness as in the case of the trial of a warrant case. But if the cross-examination was postponed in accordance with the direction of the Magistrate, the Magistrate was bound to give further opportunity to the accused to cross-examine the witness. Without such a cross-examination the complainant's evidence will not be legally admissible.

The aforesaid irregularity also, therefore, vitiates the trial.

The third and the fourth objection relate to the local investigation and may be disposed of together. There is nothing in law to prevent a Magistrate from making local inspection; but in order to give an opportunity to the accused to remove any wrong impression created on the mind of the Magistrate, it is fair that a note of the inspection should have been placed on the record, and the parties should have been given an opportunity of being heard with respect to it. The Magistrate, therefore, committed a grave irregularity in this case, particularly when he has used the information gathered at the locality as substantive evidence in the case.

The Civil Court dakaldekani took place in 1911 in favour of the complainant. The Magistrate no doubt has addressed himself at great length to find out whether the plot in dispute was covered by the Civil Court dakhaldekani or not, and he has also held that the accused dispossessed the complainant from the land. He has not come to a definite finding as to whether the complainant or the accused was in possession of the land in dispute at the time when the occurrence took place. This is apparently because he was misled by the issue laid down by him, namely, whether the accused dispossessed the complainant from the land. No issue was framed by him as to whether the complainant was or was not in possession of the land. Thus the finding of the Magistrate upon the issue laid down by him does not dispose of the case under section 447, Indian Penal Code, which requires it to be affirmatively and positively held that the complainant was in possession of the land in dispute with respect to which the criminal trespass is said to have been committed.

For all the aforesaid reasons I think the trial in this case has been illegal and accordingly set aside the conviction of, and the sentence passed on the petitioner. The fine, if already realised, should be refunded.

In view of the aforesaid remarks I do not think any useful purpose will be served by ordering a re-trial. The parties are apparently disputing the possession of the land in question and in case of the dispute being of a serious nature the Magistrate has full power to deal with it under the law to prevent any breach of the peace.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT—APPELLANT

versus

GANGA RAM—ACCUSED—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code: (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 415, 420—

Cheating—Fraudulent intention—"Property," meaning of—Certificate obtained by making false representations—Certificate, if "property."

A practically conclusive test of the fraudulent character of a deception for criminal purposes is this: Did the author of the deceit derive any advantage from it which could not have been had if the truth had been known? [p 621, col. 2.]

Whether an article is or is not "property" within the meaning of section 420, Indian Penal Code does not depend upon its possessing a money or market value. If it has some special value for the person or persons concerned, it is "property," even though its value cannot be measured in money. [p 622, col. 1.]

A certificate for having passed an examination is "property" within the meaning of section 415, Indian Penal Code. [p. 622, col. 1.]

Where a person by representing himself to be another obtains from an Inspector of Schools a certificate testifying to his having passed a certain examination, when, in fact, he had not passed that examination, he commits the offence of cheating punishable under section 420 of the Penal Code. [p. 622, col. 1.]

Criminal appeal against the order of the Sessions Judge, East Berar, Amraoti, dated the 17th February 1921.

Mr G. P. Dick, for the Crown.

Mr. V. Eose, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal directed by the Local Government under section 417, Code of Criminal Procedure, from an appellate order of acquittal passed by the Sessions Judge, East Berar, reversing the conviction and sentence passed upon the above named accused by a First Class Magistrate, Amraoti, for cheating punishable under section 420, Indian Penal Code.

2. The main facts of the case are not in dispute. One Tukaram Bapuji, who was the Revenue Patel of Walgaon in the Amraoti, District, died in the month of May of the last year and the question of the appointment of a successor to him arose. There were two possible claimants to the Patelki and they were the accused Gangaram Krishnaji Kunbi and his younger brother Pandurang Krishnaji. In the ordinary course, Gangaram being the elder brother should have been recommended, but the village Patwari recommended Pandurang instead, on the ground that he could read and write well and had read up to the fifth Mahratti standard. It has to be stated that under the Berar Revenue Book Circular No. V-1, no person can be appointed a Patel, who has not passed an examination of the fourth vernacular standard of the Educational Department in Berar, or an equivalent test in another Province. Gangaram presented an application on 14th June 1920 to the Deputy Inspector of Schools, Amratti, stating therein that he had passed the fourth Mahratti standard from the Walgaon School and requesting that a certificate to that effect be given to him. A student passing the fourth vernacular standard is granted what is called a Primary School Certificate on a printed form. The Deputy Inspector of Schools consulted the examination result sheets which are preserved in his office, and finding the name of Gangaram Krishnaji from the Walgaon School, amongst the successful pupils at the examination held in 1906, issued the necessary certificate to the accused. In the proceedings taken in the Revenue Court for the appointment of a successor to Tukaram Bapuji, the accused produced that certificate in support of his claim to the Patelki.

3. On his receiving certain information, the Deputy Inspector sent for and examined the admission registers of the Walgaon School and found that the accused was not at that school in the year 1906 and that he had never passed the fourth standard examination. Gangaram Krishnaji mentioned in the examination result sheets was a different person altogether, being a Mali by caste. It has to be stated that in the examination result sheets, there was no column for caste and hence the caste of the successful candidate Gangaram Krishnaji was not mentioned. On these facts the accused was prosecuted and tried on a charge that he had cheated the Deputy Inspector by dishonestly inducing him to deliver the certificate to him, an offence punishable under section 420, Indian Penal Code.

4. The defense of the accused was that he had, about 14 years ago, appeared at the fourth standard examination and that he did not know if he was or was not successful at it. He said that after the death of Tukaram Bapuji he made enquiries on the point and was told by one Mr. Gore, the agent of the Jagirdar at Walgaon, that a boy by name Gangaram Krishnaji had passed the examination in the year 1906.

Acting on this information the accused said he applied to the Deputy Inspector of Schools for the necessary certificate. It is now admitted by the accused that the information received by him was incorrect and that Gangaram Krishnaji shown in the examination sheets of 1906 was a different person from him. The defense, in short, was that the accused had honestly, on the strength of the information received by him, believed that he had passed the examination and that in applying to the Deputy Inspector of Schools for the certificate and in filing it in the revenue proceedings he had acted in good faith.

5. Both the Magistrate and the learned Sessions Judge did not believe the explanation given by the accused and they were of opinion that the false representation was deliberately made by him to the Deputy Inspector for the purpose of obtaining the certificate. The learned Sessions Judge held it proved that the accused made a false statement to the Deputy Inspector and on its strength obtained the certificate. I have gone through the evidence and my conclusion is that the above finding is a correct one. I cannot believe that the accused honestly believed that he had passed the fourth standard in 1906, when he was not at school at all that year. The school registers were examined by me and these show that Gangaram Krishnaji Kunbi finally left the school in 1900 and no boy of the name of Gangaram Krishnaji Kunbi was in the school at all after that year. I have separately prepared a statement from the admission registers of the Walgaon School showing the dates and years when Gangaram Krishnaji Kunbi joined and left the school and the classes in which he was reading. From that statement, it will be apparent that no boy of the name of Gangaram Krishnaji Kunbi attended the school after 1900. The accused could not have, therefore, been at the school after 1900 and he could not have believed that he had in 1906 passed the fourth standard examination. It must be taken as established that the accused knowingly and deliberately made that false representation to the Deputy Inspector and that it was on the faith of that representation that the Deputy Inspector was induced to issue a certificate to him.

6. The learned Sessions Judge was of opinion that even on these facts, the accused could not be held guilty of cheating and that his act could not come within the definition of cheating as given in section 415, Indian Penal Code. If we look to the definition, we find that it contains two distinct parts, the opening words "whoever by deceiving any person" being common to the whole section. The necessary ingredients of the offence of cheating are:—

- (1) Deception of any person; and
2. (a) Fraudulently or dishonestly inducing that person to deliver any property to any person or to consent that any person shall retain any property; or
- (b) Intentionally inducing that person to do or omit to do anything which he would not do or omit, if he were not so deceived, and which act or omission causes or is likely to cause damage or harm to that person in body, mind, reputation or property.

Thus the offence of cheating is made up of the ingredients 1 and 2 (a) or 1 and 2 (b). The first ingredient is common and in all cases of cheating there must be a deception practised by the accused upon some person. Let us now see if the first ingredient mentioned above is present in the case before us. The facts found in the case will show that the accused did deceive the Deputy Inspector of Schools, by causing him to believe what was not true. The first requisite is, therefore, fulfilled in the present case. It was a wilful misrepresentation of facts by the accused.

7. We will now consider if the act of the accused satisfies the condition 2 (b). He no doubt by making the false representation intentionally induced the Deputy Inspector of Schools to deliver to him the certificate, which he would not have done had he not been so deceived. The question, however, is: Did the preparation of the certificate and its delivery to the accused cause or was it likely to cause damage or harm to the Deputy Inspector in body, mind, reputation or property? The Deputy Inspector did not certainly suffer any harm or damage in body or in property. It could not be said that he had suffered in reputation because he had been deceived by an ordinary person like the accused. He could not have suffered any mental pain by the deception practised upon him. The harm or injury contemplated by the section must be tangible, and reasonable and not remote or imaginary. In the present case I do not find that any damage or harm was caused, or was likely to be caused to the Deputy Inspector by the deception practised upon him by the accused. The ingredient 2 (b) is, therefore, wanting in the case.

8. We must next come to the question whether the act of the accused falls under the above-mentioned clause 2 (a). The two conditions are that the accused must have done the act fraudulently or dishonestly and there must have been a delivery of property. The learned Sessions Judge was of opinion that the certificate in question could not be called "property" and the learned Counsel appearing for the accused here supports him. A number of cases were cited for both the sides during the argument, but many of these were not exactly applicable to the facts of the case. That the act of the accused was fraudulent admits of no doubt. In the case of Kotamraju Venkatrayadu v. Emperor (1), the meaning of the term 'fraudulently' was fully explained and it was observed that, where there was an intention to secure an advantage or benefit on one hand or to cause loss or detriment on the other, there was an intent to defraud. The following observations of Sir James Stephen from his History of Criminal Law of England were quoted with approval:

"A practically conclusive test of the fraudulent character of a deception for criminal purposes is this: Did the author of the deceit derive any advantage from it which could not have been had if the truth had been known?"

In this case the accused, by means of the deception practised by him upon the Deputy Inspector, wanted to secure for himself an advantage, as against his younger brother, to which advantage he was not entitled. The first condition is thus fulfilled in the present case.

9. Even if a fraudulent intention is proved, the offence of cheating is not complete, unless there is also a delivery of property. The question, therefore, is whether the certificate secured by the accused can be called 'property'. It is contended for the accused that the certificate cannot be called 'property' as it has no value whatsoever, it being merely a piece of paper. Whether a certain article is or is not 'property' does not depend upon its possessing a money or market value. An article may not fetch any value in the market and still it may have a value to certain persons. In my opinion the certificate which the accused obtained from the Deputy Inspector had a special value to both of them, though that value could not be computed in money. A University diploma of a graduate or a license of a licentiate has a peculiar value to its holder and a person stealing it from his possession would not be acquitted on the ground that it has no value and is, therefore, not 'property.' In Queen-Empress v. Appasami (2), a ticket entitling its holder to enter an examination room was held to be 'property' under section 415, Indian Penal Code. A similar view was taken in Queen-Empress v. Soshi Bhushan (3), where a written certificate very similar to the one obtained by the accused in the present case was held to be 'property' and it was observed as follows :

"If the prisoner had obtained the certificate which he tried to obtain, and some one had stolen it from him, no one, we imagine, would suggest that the thief could not legally be convicted, under section 379 of the Indian Penal Code, of the theft of the certificate, but if the certificate was not moveable 'property' the person who dishonestly took the certificate out of the possession of the prisoner, without the prisoner's consent, could not be convicted of a theft in respect of it."

My view, therefore, is that the certificate secured by the accused from the Deputy Inspector was 'property,' within the meaning of section 415. The accused is, therefore, guilty of cheating as defined in the first portion of that section. It is unnecessary to refer to cases cited by the Sessions Court, and I have already found that the act of the accused did not fall under the last portion of section 415, Indian Penal Code.

10. The result is that the appeal is allowed and the order of acquittal is set aside. The accused is convicted for the offence of cheating punishable under section 420, Indian Penal Code. As regards the sentence, the Magistrate had awarded him rigorous imprisonment for one year. The sentence was somewhat severe. The case has been going on practically for the last six months and the accused has been in suspense so long. In my opinion rigorous imprisonment for four months would meet the requirements of the case and I sentence the accused accordingly.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner in this case is an insolvent, who has been convicted under section 69 of the Provincial Insolvency Act V of 1920. Proceedings were instituted on a complaint by Mr. Skemp, District Judge, in accordance with section 69 (5) of the Act. The petitioner appealed against his conviction by the Magistrate to Mr. Skemp as Sessions Judge. The appeal was rejected on the merits and Mr. Skemp noted in his judgment that when the appeal was first presented he had asked the appellant's Counsel if there was any objection to his hearing the appeal by reason of his having lodged the complaint, and was told that the appellant had no objection.

In revision now it is pleaded that Mr. Skemp, notwithstanding the consent of the appellant or his Counsel, had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal, and this objection is pressed in argument. It appears to me that it must prevail. Section 556, Criminal Procedure Code, lays down that no Judge or Magistrate shall, except with the permission of the Court to which an appeal lies from his Court, try any case to or in which he is a party. In the present instance, although Mr. Skemp had, from a practical point of view, little or nothing to do with the prosecution since he was not the presiding officer of the Court when the allegations which were the basis for the prosecution were made by the Official Receiver, nevertheless he was unmistakably a party to the case. The Magistrate could not have taken cognizance without a complaint by the District Judge under section 69 (5) of Act V of 1920, and that complaint was drawn up, signed and presented by Mr. Skemp. It has been ruled in Nistārini Debi v. A. C. Ghose (1) that in section 555 of the then Criminal Procedure Code, (which is reproduced in section 556 of the present Code) the words "try any case" are comprehensive enough to include the hearing of an appeal, and Counsel for the petitioner cites Bisheshar Bhattacharya v. Emperor (2) according to which the consent of a party concerned cannot affect the absolute disqualification imposed by section 556. Counsel for the respondent has put forward no authority to the contrary. He might have relied upon Emperor v. Banka Behari (3) but did not quote it, and that ruling, I think, is not exactly in point.

Accordingly, I set aside Mr. Skemp's order on appeal dated the 4th October 1921 as having been made without jurisdiction and I direct that the appeal be heard by the Sessions Judge, Ambala. The appellant may be released on bail of Rs. 1,000 to the satisfaction of the District Magistrate.

Petition, under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of an order of the District Magistrate, Karnal, dated the 29th July 1921, affirming that of the Honorary Magistrate, Second Class, Kunjpura, District Karnal, dated the 16th July 1921.

Lala Sardha Ram, for the Petitioner.

Lala Anant Ram Khosla, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Three persons viz., Harparshad, Gaiinda Ram and Joti Parshad, describing themselves as partners in the Kurakshetar Motor Service Company, Thanesar, District Karnal, filed a complaint under section 420, Indian Penal Code, in the Karnal District against Raghbir Saran, proprietor of the firm Pyare Lal and Sons, Kashmiri Gate, Delhi. The complaint was taken up by an Honorary Magistrate of the Second Class who recorded the statements of the complainants, and summoned the accused. The accused, when he appeared, objected to the jurisdiction of the Court, and contended that the case was triable exclusively in Delhi. The Magistrate ruled with reference to section 179, Criminal Procedure Code, that consequences of the alleged offence had taken place in the Karnal District and that such offence could be enquired into in that district. The District Magistrate refused to interfere on revision and an application has been made to this Court.

According to the complaint and the statements of the complainants, the latter purchased two motor lorries from the accused through Parshotam Das, another partner in the Company. Rs. 400 were paid at Delhi by Parshotam Das to the accused. On the 2nd of June, the accused telegraphed to the complainants at Kurakshetar that the lorries had arrived at Delhi. The three complainants went to Delhi, paid Rs. 10,000 to the accused there and brought back one lorry, and on the 25th of June they went again, paid the accused Rs. 4,000 and brought back the second lorry. In the beginning of July, the vehicles were examined and it was found that certain parts were missing. The accused was asked to send them but did not do so, and so the complaint was lodged.

Counsel for the petitioner, Raghbir Saran, has quoted a case very similar to the present, Prag Das v. Daulat Ram (1) which supports his contention that the complaint cannot be enquired into in the Karnal District. On behalf of the complainants-respondents a number of authorities have been cited, most of them based on Queen Empress v. O'Brien (2) which was disapproved by this Court in Ohint Singh v. Crown (3). In any case all these rulings deal with the offence of criminal misappropriation which is essentially different from that of cheating. Assuming that loss was sustained by the complainants in the Karnal District this would not have the effect of bringing the present case under section 179, Criminal Procedure Code. In the offence of criminal misappropriation loss to the rightful owner must be caused, and the action of the person who causes it, is an offence by reason of that consequence. Loss, however, is not a necessary element of the offence of cheating. There must be an intention to cause wrongful loss or wrongful gain, but it is not essential that loss should be caused. In the present case the allegation in the complaint is that deceit, inducement and delivery all took place at Delhi. The inducement is alleged to have been dishonest, but it would not be necessary in order to establish the offence of cheating to prove that the dishonest intention matured into actual loss. Therefore, loss at Karnal would not render section 179 applicable.

Moreover, it is quite plain that the loss, if any, took place at Delhi where the money was paid and delivery was taken by the complainants of the motor lorries.

Counsel for the complainants has stated that there was inducement at Karnal in the shape of telegrams sent from Delhi, but the complaint and the statements do not refer to, and Counsel has not shown me, any such documents.

I accept the petition and direct that the complaint in question be transferred to the District Magistrate, Delhi.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 8th August 1918, affirming that of the Munsif, First Class, Amritsar, dated the 21st June 1918.

Bakhsbi Tek Chand, for the Appellant.

Dr Gokal Chand Narang, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued separately to pre-empt two contiguous plots of land, each measuring 9 marlas, in the estate of Amritsar. The vendor was the same in each case, but the vendees were different. The sales took place on the 11th October 1913 and the two suits were filed on the 10th October 1917. On the 6th May 1918 the Punjab Government declared by Notification No. 10473 under section 8 (2) of the Punjab Pre-emption Act, 1913, "that from the date of this Notification no right of pre-emption shall exist in respect of agricultural land and village immoveable property" within an area in which the plots in suit admittedly are comprised. The suits were pending in the Trial Court at the date of this Notification and for that reason the Munsif dismissed them both holding that the Notification took away from the pre-emptor before decree the right of pre-emption which he appeared to hold at the dates both of the sale and of the institution of the suits. Appeals preferred to the District Judge were dismissed, the District Judge referring to Bishen Singh v. Ganda Singh (1). The result has been two second appeals to this Court, Nos. 3031 and 2035 of 1918, both of which will be disposed of by this order.

The judgment reported as Bishen Singh v. Ganda Singh (1) was delivered on facts precisely similar to those now under consideration. It held that the right of pre-emption in suit ceased to exist immediately on the publication of the Notification, although it was in existence when the suit was instituted and that the Court below had no alternative to dismissing the suit, having no power to pass a decree establishing a right which had ceased to exist. It is not disputed that the present appeals must fail if Bishen Singh v. Ganda Singh (1) be followed, but Bakhsbi Tek Chand for the appellants contends that the case was not correctly decided.

References to it is to be found in two later published judgments, Niaz Ali v. Muhammad Ramzan (2) and Kaju Mal v. Salig Ram (3). In both of these cases the pre-emptor had obtained a decree, his right to pre-empt had been declared not to exist by a Notification published subsequent to decree and during the pendency of the vendee's appeal and the Notification was pleaded in support of the appeal unsuccessfully. In Niaz Ali v. Muhammad Ramzan (2) the Judges expressed no disapproval of what was ruled in Bishen Singh v. Ganda Singh (1) but distinguished the position of a decree-holder defending his decree from that of a mere plaintiff seeking to enforce a claim to pre-empt. They held that the decree gave the decree-holder the status of full owner immediately he paid in the decree money, that unless fault could be found with the decree it should be upheld, and that if it was right on the day it was passed the subsequent Government Notification could not make it wrong. They remarked that had the plaintiff's suit been dismissed, and had he been the appellant, a Government Notification issued while the appeal was pending and taking away the right to pre-empt, would probably have been fatal to his chance of success.

In Haju Mal v. Salig Ram (3) no mention was made of Niaz Ali v. Muhammad Ramzan (2) and Bishen Singh v. Ganda Singh (1) was definitely dissented from in the following terms :—

"With all deference we are unable to follow that ruling, which not only attributes to a Notification greater force than to a repealing Act, but proceeds upon the principle that, in the absence of a provision to the contrary, a Notification has retroactivity."

Bakhshi Tek Chand relies strongly upon this passage in support of his argument that in the present cases the Government Notification cannot deprive the plaintiff-appellant of a right which he possessed at the date of the sales and at the date of the institution of his suits and which has not been deteriorated by any voluntary act, either of the plaintiff or of the vendor. He points to section 4 of the Punjab General Clauses Act of 1898 which provides that, unless a different intention appears, repeal of an Act shall not affect any right acquired under the enactment repealed, and to section 2 (3) of the Punjab Pre-emption Act, 1913, which, while altering the procedure of pending suits and appeals from the date of the Act, left untouched rights acquired under the former Act. He claims that it is absurd that the present vendees should be placed by an order of the Executive Government under powers conferred by the Act in a better position than they would hold if the Legislature were to repeal the whole Act after suit and before decree.

Dr. Gokal Chand for the respondents replies that the language of section 8 (2) of the Act and of the Notification is plain and unambiguous that the Legislature has given the Executive Government power to declare that in any local area the right of pre-emption shall not exist, that the plaintiff's right to a decree has been perfectly legally and quite explicitly destroyed by the Notification of 6th May 1918 from that date and that Government must be taken to mean what it states. He has also referred us to the dicta of various learned Judges in the Fall Bakh cases of Sanwil Das v. Gur Parshad (4) and Dhann Singh v. Gurbakhsh Singh (5) (e. g., Chatterji, J., page 344, Clark, C. J., page 362, and page 439 and Rattigan, J., page 442, Punjab Record 1909) to the effect that the statutory qualifications of a pre-emptor must be retained until decree. These, however, were obiter in the particular cases where they were made and remarks indicating opinions to the contrary were recorded by Kensington J., (page 447) and Shah Din, J., (pages 453 and 457) two of the majority Judges in Dhann Singh v. Gurbakhsh Singh (5).

We find it difficult to believe that Government intended by the Notification under discussion to declare anything more than that in respect of sales transacted after the date of Notification there should be no right of pre-emption. Although Dr. Gokal Chand's demand is perfectly reasonable that the words used in the Notification should be allowed to speak for themselves; we feel ourselves unable to follow Bishen Singh v. Ganda Singh (1) and to uphold the orders of the lower Courts. The plaintiff claimed a right conferred by Statute to acquire the land in suit by sale in preference to the vendees, which right arose when the land was sold to the vendees (sections 4, 14 and 15, Punjab Act I of 1913) and he also was permitted by Statute (section 2.) to bring a suit to enforce that right. He brought a suit. The Trial Court held that he possessed the right at the time of the sale and at the moment when he filed his suit. In consequence of the vendee's denial of his right the plaintiff was not given a decree immediately, and on a date nearly seven months subsequent to the institution of the suit the Local Government under powers conferred by the Act declared that his right did not exist from that date. The Statute did not require him to preserve his right free from interference beyond his control up to the date of decree in his suit, and we do not think that the Court trying the suit was obliged to insist upon such preservation of the right.

MOHINDER SINGH & ARJE SINGH.

It was held in Ram Gopal v. Piari Lal (6) that where a plaintiff has lost, during the pendency of a suit for pre-emption, his right to pre-empt, the suit should be dismissed, and that ruling was followed in Atma Ram v. Devi Dyal (7). In the United Provinces, however, the right of pre-emption is not defined and secured by Statute and in Atma Ram v. Devi Dyal (7) the pre-emptor divested himself by gift, before obtaining a decree, of the proprietary right in the house from which he derived his title to sue, a situation differing conspicuously from that which we are considering.

The right in suit in Ram Gopal v. Piari Lal (6) was one restricted to co-sharers in the mahal and was based upon a provision in the wajib-ul-ars. During the pendency of the suit the original mahal was sub-divided into four other mahals, and the plaintiff ceased to be a co-sharer in the mahal comprising the land in suit. The learned Judge found that there was no authority on the question whether in a suit for pre-emption based on an agreement giving pre-emptive rights to co-sharers, the plaintiff must maintain his status as co-sharer up till the date of the decree, and they proceeded to decide the question upon principle. They held that there was no general principle of law or procedure which compelled them to look exclusively to the state of things which existed at the date of institution of the suit, and reversed the decree for pre-emption on the ground that the custom was one in favour of the co-sharers of the undivided mahal and no others and that the plaintiff had before decree become as much a stranger in the sense of the wajib-ul-ars as the defendant vendee. Sir Arthur Strachey, C. J., remarked in the course of his judgment:—

"In the absence of authority on the subject and in dealing with claims for pre-emption arising under the wajib-ul-ars, it seems to me that the only safe course is to see what mode of deciding the question would be most in furtherance of the contract or custom of pre-emption, and the principles upon which such a contract or custom is based."

Ram Gopal v. Piari Lal (6) was referred to in Dhanna Singh v. Gurbikksh Singh (5) by Shah Din, J., who dissented from its conclusions emphatically and considered that the decision was in disregard of the principles which underlie a customary right of pre-emption. He further gave it as his opinion (and we agree) that general principles deducible from the statutory provisions relating to pre-emption in the Punjab are in favour of the pre-emptor's cause of action, after it has accrued, not being affected by any contingencies arising after the date of sale, certainly a right conferred by Statute is not quite the same thing as a right derived from contract or based upon custom.

No doubt there may be cases where, having regard to all the circumstances and to the nature and origin of the particular right of pre-emption claimed, a Court may be justified in refusing to enforce a right unless it is maintained intact throughout the progress of the suit, but the usual method of dealing with a suit is what the learned Judges of the Allahabad Court have found it necessary to explain as not obligatory, namely, to decide the questions at issue according to the state of affairs existing when the plaintiff's cause of action arose.

In the present case we concede that the meaning of the Government Notification must be taken to be what is stated in plain words. But as indicated already we do not believe that it was framed with the intention that it should have greater effect than a repealing Act or for the purpose of causing the dismissal of all pending suits to enforce pre-existing rights of pre-emption and of rendering futile the expenditure of time and money incurred by plaintiffs who started with a sound cause of action. We hold that it was not necessary for the Courts below to dismiss the suits under appeal in consequence of the Notification of the 6th of May 1918, and that they should not have done so. In this conclusion we must be taken to differ, with all respect, from the learned Judges who, in Bishen Singh v. Ganda Singh () held in similar circumstances that the Trial Court had no alternative to dismissing the suit. We think that the Bench which decided Kaju Mal v. Salig Ram (3) was correct in thinking that the practical effect of such a decision was to make

JUDGMENT.

COURTS, J.—This is an appeal by the defendants against the decision of the District Judge of Patna. The plaintiffs and the defendants are admittedly agnates of one Nathuni Missir. The plaintiffs brought a suit for a declaration that the defendant No. 1 had renounced the world and had become a Sadhu and that thereby the plaintiffs had become entitled to a half share of the heritage, or in the alternative if it was found that the defendant No. 1 had not renounced the world the plaintiffs claimed one-third of the property. The suit was dismissed in the Court of first instance but on appeal to the District Judge the plaintiffs were declared to be entitled to joint possession of Nathuni's heritage along with the defendant No. 1. Against this decision the defendants have appealed.

The sole question for decision in the suit was whether the plaintiffs and the defendants were in fact agnates of Nathuni Missir, and the first question argued in appeal before us is whether a certain document on which the defendants relied was admissible in evidence or not. This document, which is Exhibit D, is a genealogy. It is admittedly a copy and part of it is probably a copy of a copy. The document was admitted without objection by the plaintiffs in the Court of first instance and it was relied on by the learned Subordinate Judge, who decreed the suit in favour of the defendants. On appeal to the District Judge he has held that, although this document was admitted without objection, still the plaintiffs were not estopped from contesting the document subsequently. In this view I am unable to agree. It has been held in a number of cases, Chimnaji Govind Godbole v. Dinkar Dhondev Godbole (1), Lakshman Govind v. Amrit Gopal (2) and

AHMAD v. BANO.

Kishori Lal Goswami v. Rakhal Das Banerjee (3) that when a copy of a document has been admitted in the Court of first instance without any objection, the Appellate Court is not entitled to allow any objection to be taken to its admissibility at the appellate stage. This is undoubtedly the correct view of the law. It is, however, contended that the learned District Judge has considered the question from another point of view and has held that, even if the document is admissible, it is not entitled to any value because the comparison of the copy with the original has been found by him to be unsatisfactory. Here, again, the learned District Judge appears to have fallen into an error. The document was admitted as secondary evidence, that is to say, it was admitted as being a true copy, and, in view of the decisions to which I have already referred, it was not open to the learned District Judge at the appellate stage to consider whether in fact the provisions of the section had been complied with or not when it was admitted without objection. The learned District Judge was, therefore, not entitled to consider the evidence which was offered subsequent to the admission of the document in regard to comparison with the original.

There are other points in this appeal but we have not heard arguments on them, because on this ground alone it is necessary to set aside the decree of the learned District Judge and to remand this appeal for re-hearing. The whole appeal is to be re-heard. Costs will abide the result.

DAS, J.—I agree.

JUDGMENT.—At first we dismissed this appeal in default, but shortly after we passed our order, Counsel for the appellant appeared and explained why he was late, and upon his application, to which the other side raised no objection, we re-admitted the appeal and heard arguments.

The appeal is from an order of the District Judge of Jhelum decreeing the plaintiffs' claim for possession of land alienated by the widow of Karam Tarar to her sister's son. The plaintiffs are sisters of Karam, deceased. The appeal is brought upon a certificate granted by the District Judge under section 41 (3) of the Punjab Courts Act. The question of custom involved is whether amongst Tarar Jats of Ohakwal sisters of a deceased proprietor can contest the validity of a Will executed by his widow in favour of her sister's son. Karam left no collateral and the lower Appellate Court was of opinion that the sisters were heirs in the absence of collaterals and that, therefore, they could contest the validity of the Will executed by Karam's widow who had only a life-interest.

A preliminary objection was raised by Mr. Sethi to the effect that the appeal was filed without a certificate on the 27th of March 1917 and that when the certificate was filed in this Court on the 2nd April the period of limitation for the filing of an appeal had expired. We find, however, that the application for the certificate was made on the 26th of March 1917 and that the certificate was granted on the following day.

A further objection was raised that the application for the certificate was made more than 30 days after the date of the decree of the lower Appellate Court. In his application Ahmad explained his reasons for not applying sooner and it was upon a translation of this application that the District Judge recorded his order granting the certificate, and we may, therefore, presume that he exercised his discretion in granting it beyond the period specified in the proviso to section 41. We accordingly overruled the preliminary objection.

Dr. Nand Lal admits that if the sisters are heirs they can contest the alienation and the only question, therefore, which we have to decide is whether they are heirs or not. The rulings cited in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, which Dr. Nand Lal has again cited in his argument before us, are not directly in point and do not in any way assist us. There is a passing remark in Jannat v. Abiulla (1) that sisters generally are not heirs, but we are not aware of any ruling of this Court or the Chief Court in which it has been definitely laid down that sisters are not heirs in the absence of all agnates. In Article 24 of Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law it is stated that sisters are usually excluded as well as their issue, but we understand this to mean that they are usually excluded by agnates however distant. Counsel has not been able to cite to us any ruling in which it was held that sisters are not heirs in the absence of all agnates. Article 28 of the Digest is to the effect that, subject to the exception thereunder mentioned, in the event of a deceased proprietor dying without heirs his estate ordinarily escheats to Government. In the exception certain instances are given in which it was held that a sister's son excluded the village proprietary body. In our opinion the onus is upon the person asserting it to prove that a sister is not an heir in the absence of any agnate. Karam belonged to a Muhammadan tribe of the Ohakwal Tahsil and the answer to question No. 68 of Mr. Talbot's Customary Law is to the effect that sisters and their sons can inherit if there are no daughters and no agnates within the fourth degree. If this be correct then much more do sisters inherit if there are no agnates at all. In Beg v. Allah Ditta (2), their Lordships of the Privy Council held that an entry in a riwaj-i-am was a strong piece of evidence in support of a custom. This ruling was considered by a Division Bench of the Chief Court in Wazira v. Maryan (3) where it was held, following Ohhuttan v. Hasari Lal (4), that statements in the riwaj-i-am when opposed to general custom can carry very little weight unless supported by instances. The answer to question No. 68 in Talbot's Customary Law of the Jhelum District is not supported by instances, but, in our opinion, it is not opposed to general custom, especially in a case when there are no agnates at all and, therefore, we follow the ruling of the Privy Council in Beg v. Allah Ditta (2) and hold that this entry in the riwaj-i-am is a strong piece of evidence in support of the plaintiffs' claim. It is not rebutted.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—In this case the plaintiff who is the appellant before us purchased the land in suit from one Mulchand Sahu in June 1917 and, according to his case, came into possession and was a few months later dispossessed by the defendant Matuk. He thereupon instituted the present suit claiming a declaration of his title and possession after ejection of the defendant Matuk.

The learned Munsif before whom the case came for trial found upon the facts that neither the plaintiff nor his predecessor Mulchand had in fact been in possession of the land at any period within 12 years antecedent to the suit and he dismissed the claim. The case put forward by the defendant Matuk and supported by Mulchand was that in the year 1903 Mulchand had transferred this very land in exchange for another piece of land to the defendant Matuk and that Matuk had been in possession of the land ever since. The plaintiff questioned the genuineness of that transaction and the defendant questioned the genuineness of the kabala executed in favour of the plaintiff in 1917. On the finding come to by the Munsif it did not become necessary for him in his opinion to decide any question about the genuineness of the title of either party.

The case then went on appeal to the District Judge and he considered that the oral evidence of the parties as to possession was not satisfactory on either side and he referred to certain discrepancies in the evidence which had been pointed out by the Munsif and apparently the view which the learned District Judge arrived at was that, in so far as the oral evidence went, although he nowhere says that it was of no value, nevertheless, was not such as without reference to probabilities and other circumstances arising in the case would be sufficient in itself to enable him to come to a satisfactory decision on the question of possession. He had no doubt, however, that the exchange transaction set up by the defendant in 1903 was not genuine, and in dealing with that part of the case he says "the land which is said to have been given in exchange is also said to have been the abandoned holding of Bulhu Kurmi and others," that is, that the land which Matuk is said to have given in exchange for the land in suit did not belong to Matuk at all. He then goes on "but action under section 97 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was not taken till 1917. Moreover, the date of the Ohithi" that is, the Ohithi which evidenced this transaction of 1903, "has certainly been altered, and though it is not possible to say that the real date was the inference to be drawn from the alteration must be hostile to the defendants-respondents." Now, that seems to me to be a distinct finding that upon the evidence before him which was put forward in support of the defendant's possession and title (I mean the defendant Matuk) the natural inference must be drawn that Matuk's possession was in fact not as long as he alleged and as it was necessary for him to allege in order to obtain a title by adverse possession. The inference drawn from this by the learned Judge seems to me to be that it was certainly not more than 12 years ago and must have been within 12 years that Matuk ever had anything to do with the land. Then he deals with certain huts and structures upon the land which had been dealt with by the Munsif as evidence in support of the defendant Matuk's possession and comes to the conclusion that no satisfactory inference could be drawn from their appearance as to how long they had been upon the land and, therefore, that part of the evidence was treated by him as being of really no assistance. He then further says: "the story of the exchange having failed" that is, the exchange by which Matuk claimed his title, "the possession of Matuk is probably much later than he asserts." The learned Judge then finds that in his opinion Matuk had entirely failed to prove possession for 12 years before the suit. Then on the question of the plaintiff's title he came to the conclusion that as Mulehand's previous title and possession were admitted by Matuk and as Mulehand admitted the execution of the kabala in favour of the plaintiff and as Mulehand had failed to prove that the kabala was void for any reason and as Matuk had failed to prove adverse possession for 12 years he, therefore, held that the appellant's claim should be decreed and he allowed the appeal.

From that decision the defendant appealed to this Court and the appeal was heard before a Single Judge. The learned Judge before whom the case came was of opinion that the findings arrived at by the learned District Judge in first appeal were not sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to a decree and he considered that the decision of the Full Bench of this Court in Shiva Prasad Singh v. Dira Singh (1) governed the case. He, therefore, allowed the appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

The reason why the learned Judge of this Court came to that conclusion was because the District Judge had held that the oral evidence of possession was not satisfactory on either side and he appears to have thought that in such a case it was not open to the learned District Judge who was the ultimate judge of fact to take into account either the probabilities of the case or any presumption that might arise in favour of possession remaining in the person who had proved his title. The Full Bench case to which I have referred did not lay down the proposition that in no case could the probabilities and presumptions be taken into account. The rule there laid down was that it is only in cases where there is no evidence of the plaintiff as to dispossession or, what amounted in the opinion of the Full Bench to the same thing, where the evidence is valueless, that the plaintiff fails to make out his case by merely proving that he had an antecedent title and possession, and it must not be considered that merely because where evidence was given by both sides and the learned Judge who had to determine the case had a difficulty upon that evidence or even considered that evidence not altogether satisfactory that in such circumstances he was not entitled to give weight to the probabilities of the case or to any presumption which might properly arise from the fact that the plaintiff had previously been in possession and had title. I think it would be extending the doctrine laid down in that case too far if we were to say that merely because the Judge had some difficulty in arriving at a conclusion upon the evidence or that he did not consider the evidence altogether satisfactory he was thereby precluded from looking either at the probabilities of the case as disclosed by other parts of the evidence or from the presumptions which might arise from the plaintiff's title.

What happened in the present case was that the learned Judge considered that although there was evidence on both sides it was not altogether satisfactory. He then dealt with the probabilities. He pointed out that from the defendant's own evidence an adverse inference must be drawn against him as to the actual date when this exchange transaction set up by him took place. The date had been altered and that I think was a very important point in assisting the learned Judge to come to a conclusion upon this vital matter in the case, namely, when did the defendant, Matuk, first have anything to do with this property. If you find him putting in a document in support of his claim intending thereby to shew that he had in fact been in possession of the property for over 12 years and you then find that the date of that document has been deliberately altered, I think a very strong presumption must arise against him. This is not a case where no evidence has been given. It is a case where both parties have spoken to their possession, although the actual oral evidence is such that the Judge had great difficulty in coming to a conclusion upon it. There were, however, as I said, the other circumstances in the case and there was the fact that the plaintiff's title was proved and the plaintiff's predecessor's possession was admitted, at all events, up to the period when Matuk first had anything to do with the property. There was the further point that the Judge entirely failed to believe the evidence put forward by Matuk and that was a matter which he was entitled to take into consideration just as their Lordships of the Privy Council did in the case of Runjet Ram Pandey v. Goburdhun Ram Pandey (2) where they observed: "It may also be observed that their Lordships are not disposed to give great credit to the evidence brought forward by the appellant, inasmuch as his case which rested upon the theory that he had acquired this property for himself, has been found to be wholly untrue." That was a case where their Lordships had difficulty in coming to a conclusion upon the facts of the case. In that case there was undoubtedly evidence and strong evidence upon both sides but in the contradictory state of the evidence they said that it was difficult to come to a conclusion which was satisfactory to the mind where the evidence was so conflicting and in that case they regarded the probabilities of the case and they further regarded the fact that the appellant's evidence upon another part of the story had been entirely disproved. This is not, in my opinion, a case in which there is no evidence or where, what amounts to the same thing, the evidence is absolutely valueless. There was evidence on both sides and I think the learned Judge was entitled to arrive at the conclusion he did by taking into consideration and weighing that evidence and the probabilities of the case coupled with the fact that the plaintiff originally or rather his predecessor was undoubtedly proved to have been in possession of the land. The result is that the appeal is allowed, and the plaintiff's suit is decreed with costs here and in the Courts below.

MULLICK, J.—I agree. The only point is whether the findings in this case bring it under the rule propounded in the Full Bench decision of Shiva Prasad Singh v. Hira Singh (1). In my opinion the findings are not sufficient to attract the operation of that rule.

ARLON & LAND CO. LTD, v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

Case referred by the Financial Commissioner, Burma, under section 51 (1) of the Indian Income Tax Act, 1918.

Mr. McDonnell, for the Applicants.

Mr. Higinbotham, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

ROBINSON, C. J.—This is a Reference by the Chief Controlling Revenue Authority under section 51 (1) of the Income Tax Act of 1918. Under that section power is given to this Court to decide questions which have arisen with reference to the interpretation of any of the provisions of this Act or of any rule thereunder. No power is given to this Court to deal with questions of fact by way of an appeal against decisions of the Revenue Authorities.

The learned Financial Commissioner begins his Order of Reference by saying that he entirely agrees with the Commissioner's order in considering that the real point for consideration is whether the purchase and sale of the property was the main object with which the Company was formed or whether the development of the property in order to earn a continuing profit year by year for the Company was the real object and the sale of land was only a subsidiary one to be considered in case of a particularly favourable offer. He was asked by Counsel for the Company to refer to this Court the question whether on the facts set out in the order of the Commissioner of Pegu and on the facts which appear on the documents placed before him the Income Tax Authorities are justified in interpreting the Act so that income shall include the profit made in this case on the re-sale of the property, or to put it in another way, whether the Commissioner was justified in treating it as a conclusion of law which appears from the documents filed with his order that the Company were carrying on a trade of selling land and that the profits made therein were taxable as income. He was clearly of opinion that any reference was unnecessary and that it should have been refused under the last part of section 51 (1), but because of some change in the new Bill the matter is referred.

On opening the case Mr. McDonnell for the Company stated that the whole question turned on what was the business of the Company and that, if it was the buying and selling of land, they would be liable to be taxed.

The question of what was the business of the Company is apparently a pure question of fact, and the matter is one which is for the decision of the Revenue Authorities and the Revenue Authorities alone. The learned Government Advocate thereupon raised the preliminary objection that this Court has no jurisdiction to hear the reference as it was solely made on a question of fact on which the decision of the Revenue Authorities was final.

We have been referred to certain recent decisions in England on this very point.

In the first case, Currie v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (1), Rowlatt, J. went into the question whether on certain facts Currie was carrying on a profession. He said: "I do not think that that is a question of fact in this case. I think I have all the facts before me, and it is a question of law. It is not a question of degree or anything of that sort, as was the case in the Photographer's case (Cecil v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (2))." That decision went up on appeal*, and Master of the Rolls said: "The first point to be considered was whether the question whether Mr. Currie was or was not carrying on a profession was a question of law or fact." He held that it was a question of fact and that, if the Commissioners came to a decision on fact without applying any wrong principle, then their decision was final. "Mr. Justice Rowlatt had thought that the facts were clear, and that it was, therefore, a question of law. He did not agree that that was so, and that did not appear to agree with Mr. Justice Rowlatt's own judgment in Cecil v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (2)." Lord Justice Scrutton said that "he must consider the appeal from the point of view that if there were evidence from which the Commissioners could have found that the two gentlemen concerned were not carrying on professions, that was final. The Commissioners were the Judges of fact, and he was not."

Again in Cape Brandy Syndicate v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (3) Mr. Justice (1) (1920) 36 T. L. R. 185; 89 L. J. K. B. 860; 122 L. T. 621; 1 K. B. 801.

NABIJAN C. SAHIFAN.

Rowlatt said: "Now in those circumstances the Special Commissioners have held that they carried on a trade, and I think it is a question of fact, and I do not think that by giving me all the evidence the Commissioners can make me determine the question of fact. Nor, indeed, can they give me authority to do so because they cannot give me authority if I do not possess it by law. I think it is a question of fact and a question of degree, which generally is a question of fact. I need not say anything more than that, I am not prepared to say that there was no evidence before the Commissioners. I think it is just one of those cases where there was evidence. I can conceive people deciding the other way. I do not say which way I should decide myself. But I certainly think there were materials on which they could find as they did." On appeal* Lord Sterndale, M. R., said: "Two points were raised, the first a question of fact, viz., whether the appellants were carrying on a business," and later he says: "The first question was one simply of fact."

The circumstances of these two cases are very similar to the case of the Albion Land Company, and I think there can be no doubt that the Revenue Authorities having considered the facts stated orally and in documents came to a decision as to what was the business of this Company. That was a simple question of fact, and on that, as it appears to me, their decision was final. It is not necessary for us, and we have not, in my opinion, power to decide whether their findings of fact were correct since they do not involve any question regarding the interpretation of any of the provisions of this Act.

We had been referred to three cases decided in the Court of Exchequer, Scotland, wherein apparently the learned Judges did consider matters such as those involved in this reference. Two of those cases were considered by Mr. Justice Rowlatt in Currie's case (1), and, if they do support the argument that this is a question of law and not a question of fact, we must take it that they have not been followed by the Court of Appeal and that they should not be followed by us.

Mr. McDonnell urged that the question was whether the profits made by this Company were income within the meaning of the Act. That is an entirely different matter, and one that has not been referred.

It is admitted that the sole point for decision is what was the business of the Company. Was it buying and selling land? There is no difference between this question and the question whether on certain facts established Mr. Currie was carrying on a business.

The decision is a decision on a question of fact. I am unable to see any reason for supposing that the Revenue Authorities have applied any wrong principles in deciding this question, and, therefore, I would hold that this Court has no jurisdiction to decide the question referred, and that the Reference must be returned to the Chief Controlling Revenue Authority as incompetent.

JUDGMENT.

COURTS, J.—The plaintiffs in this case are the heirs of one Shaikh Wahid. The defendant No. 2 is his widow. The plaintiffs brought the suit for recovery of possession of their share of the land after ejection of the defendants first party to whom the widow had sold the land. The suit was dismissed in the Court of first instance but on appeal to the District Judge this decision has been set aside and the suit has been decreed. The reason why the learned District Judge has decreed the suit is that the widow was holding the land in lieu of dower, that as she had no right to transfer the entire property to the defendants first party they have no title, and, consequently, the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree for ejection.

This decision is undoubtedly wrong. The position is, as has been laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Ali Bakhsh v. Allahdad Khan (1), where they observed in a similar case that "the right is one which the widow secures as a creditor for her dower and it is one to continue holding until her debt is satisfied. Such a right is property and prima facie in the absence of any law or contrast to the contrary it is property which is both heritable and transferable." The present case is on all fours with the case of Abdulla v. Shams-ul-Haq (2), in which it was held "where a Muhammadan widow is in possession of property belonging to her deceased husband 'in lieu of dower' it is competent to her to sell it without necessarily selling her right to receive her dower. Such a transfer conveys to the transferees the right to remain in possession during the widow's lifetime or until the widow's dower or the proportionate part thereof corresponding to the property transferred is satisfied." This is clearly the correct view of the law. I would accordingly set aside the decision of the learned District Judge and would decree this appeal with costs. The plaintiffs' suit will stand dismissed.

Lower Burma Land and Revenue Act (II of 1876), s. 56 (a)—Sale in arrears of land revenue—Fraudulent sale—Sale caused by one co-owner—Remaining co-owner's rights, whether lost—Declaratory suit—Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts.

A sale for arrears of land revenue obtained fraudulently must be considered a private sale, inasmuch as it has the appearance of a sale for arrears of revenue but is, in its essence, a private alienation. [p 638, col. 2.]

Nawab Sidhee Nuzur Ally Khan v. Rajah Ojoodhyaram Khan, 10 M. L. A. 540; 5 W. R. P. C. 83; 1 Suth. P. C. J. 635; 2 Sar. P. C. J. 193; 19 E. R. 1076, relied upon.

A co-owner of land cannot be allowed to use the machinery of the Revenue Sale Law to defraud other co-owners, and if he does so the Civil Courts are competent to declare that the result of his conduct is not to place a fraudulent purchaser in a better position than a buyer at a private sale. [p 638, col. 2.]

Where one of the co-owners of land causes it to be sold fraudulently for arrears of land revenue and buys it himself in the name of his son at a nominal price, the remaining co-owners are entitled to have it declared by a Civil Court that they have not lost their rights in consequence of the sale, but that all that has been actually sold is the interest of the defaulting co-owner. In such a case the Civil Court is not asked to determine the validity of the revenue sale or to set it aside and, therefore, its jurisdiction to grant the declaration sought for is not ousted. Second appeal from the decision of the Divisional Judge, Tenasserim, reversing a decree of the Additional Judge of the Sub-Divisional Court, Amherst.

Mr. Dantra, for the Appellants.

Mr. Kyaw Htoon, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiffs were co owners with first defendant of certain undivided ancestral land. They sued for a declaration of co ownership and other relief alleging that the first defendant Ma Za had fraudulently caused the land to be sold for arrears of land revenue and had bought it herself in the name of her son, the second defendant, for the revenue due and costs. The Trial Court dismissed the suit holding that under section 56 (a) of the Lower Burma Land and Revenue Act the Civil Court had no jurisdiction. On appeal the Divisional Court relying on the principle enunciated in Deonandan Prasad v. Janki Singh (1) and Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhury v. Salimullah (2), held that, as it was not sought to set aside the revenue sale, and the interests of Government were in no way affected, the Civil Courts had jurisdiction to grant the declaration sought.

Under section 56 (a) of the Land and Revenue Act read with the preceding section no Civil Court may exercise jurisdiction as to questions as to the validity of a sale under section 47 of the Act. The land in suit was sold under section 47. The sole point for decision, therefore, is whether in view of the provisions of section 56 (a) the Civil Court has jurisdiction to grant the declaration sought. In both the cases cited by the Divisional Court the sales, it was sought to impugn, were under the Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act (XI of 1859).

The case of Deo Nandan Prasad v. Janki Singh (1) is not quite on all fours with the present but is a valuable authority, as it is throughout assumed by their Lordships of the Privy Council that a Civil Court has power to set aside a revenue sale on the ground that it has been obtained by fraud entirely irrespective of the provisions of section 33 of the Land Revenue Sales Act.

The facts in Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhury v. Salimullah (2) are similar to those of the suit under appeal.

The proprietors of a revenue paying estate deliberately made default in the payment of Government land revenue with the object that the land might be sold free of the interests of the tenure-holders under them and that they might realise the full value of the property undiminished by the incumbrances of the holders of the subordinate interests, and fixed the purchase and the price before the sale took place.

The plaintiff, a tenure holder, endeavoured to prevent the sale by deposit of the arrears of land revenue, but without success.

The tenure-holders appeal to the Commissioner to reverse the sale but were again unsuccessful.

They then filed a suit in Court for a decree to set aside the sale or in the alternative for a declaration that, as the sale had been brought about by a conspiracy between the proprietor and the purchaser the latter had not acquired the rights and privileges of a purchaser at a sale for arrears of revenue.

It was not alleged in the appeal before the High Court that the sale was invalid by reason of any irregularity in its conduct.

The provisions of the Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act regarding the jurisdiction of the Civil Court are not quite identical with section 56 (a) of the Lower Burma Land and Revenue Act. Section 33 provides that no sale for arrears of revenue shall be annulled by a Court of Justice, except on the ground of its having been made contrary to the provision of the Act, and then only on proof that the plaintiff had sustained substantial injury by reason of the Act and specifies a time within which a suit must be filed.

In the Burma Act there is no provision for annulment by a Civil Court. The wording "no Civil Court shall exercise jurisdiction as to questions as to the validity of a sale," is wider than that of the corresponding section of the Bengal Act.

In the case of Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhury v. Salimullah (2) a suit to annul the sale would apparently not have lain under section 33 of the Land Revenue Sales Act. The Calcutta High Court nevertheless granted a decree declaring that the purchaser at the revenue sale acquired merely the status of a private purchaser, because the sale had been obtained by fraud. It does not seem to have been suggested that the Court had no jurisdiction to pass such a decree.

The Privy Council decision in Nawab Sidhee Nuzur Ally Khan v. Rajah Oodhyaram Khan (3) referred to in Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhury v. Salimullah (2) is to my mind ample authority for the view taken by the learned Divisional Judge in the present appeal.

Their Lordships held that, where a sale under the Revenue Law had been fraudulently obtained, the sale must be considered as a private sale.

Here plaintiff's case was that the first defendant had taken advantage of the provisions of the Revenue Law to have land, of which she was only a part owner, fraudulently sold to her representative at a nominal price.

It is not alleged that the actual conduct of the sale was irregular.

The Court is not asked to determine the validity of the revenue sale or to set it aside.

What it is asked to do is to declare that the co-owners have not lost their rights in consequence of the sale, but that all that has been actually sold is the interest of the defaulting co-owner.

In other words that the purchaser is placed in the same position as a private purchaser.

In view of the authorities to which reference has been made I do not think there is any reason to doubt that a Civil Court has jurisdiction to make such a declaration, where a revenue sale has been obtained by fraud. The sale has the appearance of a sale for arrears of revenue but is, in its essence, a private alienation.

A co-owner of land cannot be allowed to use the machinery of the Revenue Sale Law to defraud other co-owners, and if he does so the Civil Courts are competent to declare that the result of his conduct is not to place a fraudulent purchaser in a better position than a buyer at a private sale.

The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

The landlord can still elect to treat him as a trespasser and sue him in ejectment. [p. 640, col. 1.]

Letters Patent Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Walmsley, dated the 10th February 1919, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 811 of 1917, reported as : O Jpd, Cas. 314, reversing that of the District Judge, Tipperah, dated the 31st March 1917, reversing that of the Munsif, Comilla, dated the 24th July 1916.

Babu Upendra Kumar Ray, for the Appellants.

Babus D. L. Khastgir and Biraj Mohan Mojumdar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of Mr. Justice Walmsley in a suit for ejectment. The disputed land is claimed both by the plaintiffs and the defendants as tenants under the same landlord. On the 10th October 1912, the defendants executed a kabuliyat in favour of the landlord in respect of a defined area. On the 12th January 1914 the plaintiffs executed a kabuliyat in favour of the same landlord, also in respect of a defined area. The case for the plaintiffs was that the land in dispute was comprised within the boundaries of their tenancy and that the defendants had unlawfully kept them out of possession thereof. The defendants resisted the claim on the ground that the land was comprised within the ambit of their tenancy and that as their tenancy was earlier in point of time the plaintiffs had acquired no valid title thereto. The Court of first instance came to the conclusion that the land was comprised within the tenancy of the defendants and dismissed the suit. Upon appeal the District Judge came to the conclusion that the land was comprised not within the tenancy of the defendants but within the tenancy of the plaintiffs and accordingly decreed the suit. On second appeal to this Court it was contended that by virtue of the terms of the kabuliyat of the defendants they had acquired a good title to the disputed land as tenants even though it was situated beyond the ambit of their tenancy. In support of this position reliance was placed upon the following clause in the kabuliyat: "If the lands in my possession be surveyed at the instance of the landlord I shall abide by the same and I shall take settlement at the rate then prevailing of all excess lands of whatever kind, found to be in my possession as a result of that Survey, whether lying inside or outside the boundaries mentioned in the kabuliyat and shall also pay the rent at the aforesaid rate for the period during which lands in excess of the lands mentioned in the kabuliyat have been enjoyed secretly."

COLLECTOR OF RANGOON v. ABDUL RAHMAN SIRCAR.

The contention of the defendants-respondents is that the effect of this clause is to entitle them to encroach upon the adjoining waste of the landlords and thereby to create a tenancy in their own favour in respect of such lands, even against the wish of the landlord. In our opinion, this contention cannot possibly be sustained. It was pointed out by this Court in the case of Ishan Ohandra Mitter v. Raja Bawranjan (1), that if a tenant encroaches upon the adjoining waste of his landlord, the landlord is entitled to treat him either as a trespasser or as a tenant. If the landlord treats him as a trespasser, the landlord is entitled to sue him in ejectment within 12 years from the date when he becomes aware of the encroachment. If the landlord treats him as a tenant, then he becomes liable to pay additional rent. The object of the clause in question was to make the tenant liable to pay additional rent for additional area, should it be discovered upon measurement that he had secretly taken possession of such land as was not comprised within the ambit of his tenancy. The clause did not entitle him to annex the adjoining land and retain possession thereof against the wishes of the landlord. We are unable to hold that anything had happened between the 10th October 1912 and 12th January 1914 which made it impossible for the landlord to grant a tenancy in respect of the disputed land to the plaintiff.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the judgment and decree of Mr. Justice Walmsley set aside and those of the District Judge restored. This order will carry costs both here and before Mr. Justice Walmsley.

Stamp Act (II of 1899), s. 35—Document bearing one anna stamp held to be bond—Deficiency in stamp duty—Document, whether to be taken as unstamped or insufficiently stamped—Fiscal act—Interpretation.

For revenue purposes a document should not be considered as wholly unstamped, when as a matter of fact it bears a stamp, though of a wrong kind. [p. 641, col. 1.]

So long as the Government has received the value for its stamp, it is immaterial for the purpose of calculating the stamp duty due under the proviso to section 35 of the Stamp Act what is the nature of the stamp that has been used on the document. [p. 641, col. 1.]

The law ought to be interpreted as simply as possible, and when a document is stamped though wrongly and inadequately it is to the ordinary person insufficiently stamped, but not unstamped. [p. 641, col. 2.]

Where a document, intended to be a promissory note, and bearing a one anna stamp, is held to be a bond, for the purpose of calculating the deficiency in stamp the document should not be considered as wholly unstamped but only as insufficiently stamped. [p. 641, cols 1 & 2.]

Reference under Stamp Act, section 50; 15 M. 259; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 532 and Reference under Stamp Act, section 46, 8 M. 87; 3 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 61, not followed.

The Government Advocate, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under section 61 of the Indian Stamp Act by the Collector of Rangoon to record a declaration that a document stamped with a one anna stamp which was in reality a bond was liable to a duty of Rs. 2-8-0 and a penalty of Rs. 25. The document was intended apparently to be a promissory note but was attested and not payable to bearer or order.

The Additional Judge of the Small Cause Court rightly held that the document was a bond and impounded it.

The Judge also correctly assessed the duty to which it was liable as Rs. 2-8-0.

Making allowance for the value of the adhesive one anna stamp already on the note the Judge proceeded to levy Rs. 2-7-0 as deficient duty and five times its value as a penalty under section 35.

Under that section as the deficiency multiplied by ten was above Rs. 5 the Judge was bound to levy a penalty of ten times the deficient duty.

The wording of the first proviso to section 35 is "any such instrument not being an instrument chargeable with a duty of one anna or half an anna only, or a bill of exchange or a promissory note, shall, subject to all just exceptions, be admitted in evidence on payment of the duty with which the same is chargeable, or, in the case of an instrument insufficiently stamped, of the amount required to make up such duty, together with a penalty of five rupees, or, when ten times the amount of the proper duty or deficient portion thereof exceeds five rupees, of a sum equal to ten times such duty or portion."

The Judge, who levied the penalty, was obviously of opinion that credit must be given for the value of the one anna stamp improperly affixed and that the instrument must be treated as improperly stamped and not one as unstamped.

I am asked by the Government Advocate to hold on the authority of the Madras case reported as Reference under Stamp Act, section 50 (1) to hold that in calculating the stamp duty the one anna stamp ought not to be taken into calculation.

The case follows the previous decision of the same Court in "Reference under Stamp Act, section 46, (2)." In the former case a promissory note (which, as in this case, was held to be a bond) was written on hundi paper with an impressed label of two annas affixed.

A Full Bench of the High Court held that the stamp the document bore was not a stamp which was proper for such an instrument, and that the instrument should have been treated as unstamped.

No reason whatever was given for this decision and I do not feel bound to follow it in a reference under section 61 of the present Act.

I confess I do not see why for revenue purposes a document should be considered to be wholly unstamped, when, as a matter of fact, it bears a stamp, merely because that stamp happens to be of the wrong kind.

The proviso to section 35 already quoted makes allowance for the value of the stamp in the case of insufficiently stamped documents.

So long as the Government has received the value for its stamp, it is to my mind immaterial for the purpose of calculating the stamp duty due under the proviso what is the nature of the stamp that has been used on the document.

From a common sense point of view a duty of one anna has been paid, and the total stamp duty leviable being Rs. 2-8-0, there is a deficiency of Rs. 2-7-0.

The law ought to be interpreted as simply as possible, and when a document is stamped, though wrongly and inadequately, it is to the ordinary person insufficiently stamped, but not unstamped.

The amount at issue is not large but in view of the wording of section 35 proviso (a) I am not prepared to record a declaration that the whole duty of Rs. 2-8-0 and penalty of ten times that amount must be levied, when the document bears a one anna stamp and there is no reason to suppose it was not stamped bona fide under the belief that it was a promissory note.

I declare that the document in question ought not to have been admitted in evidence without the payment of a penalty of Rs. 24-6-0.

A copy of this declaration together with the instrument impounded will be sent to the Collector under section 61 (3).

Bengal Alluvion and Diluvion Regulation (XI of 1825), s. 4, interpretation and application of—River-bed property of, landlord—Accretion—Landlord and tenant, rights of.

Held, by the Full Bench :—Clause 1 of section 4 of Bengal Regulation XI of 1825 applies whether the river, out of the bed of which accretions have been formed, is the private property of an individual or the property of the Crown.

Per Dawson Miller, C. J.—The section applies in all cases where the tenant claims, as an increment to his tenure, lands gained by gradual accretion from the recess of the river, the property of his landlord, and, except in the case of a claim by the superior landlord, the section is not confined to lands which are the property of the State. [p. 647, col. 2.]

Clause 1 of section 4 applies both to the case of a superior landlord, who holds from the Crown, and to the case of the holder of a subordinate estate or tenure holding from a landlord intermediate between himself and the Crown, and to be limited in each case to accretions from the lands of the person from whom he holds and to whom revenue in the one case and rent in the other is payable. In the case of a superior landlord the person from whom he holds is the Crown and no one else. In such a case it is only where the Crown is the proprietor of the accreted lands that the section comes into operation. To permit a landlord to acquire in this manner a proprietary right in the land of his neighbour, with whom he has no relationship such as that of a tenant to his landlord, would be going outside the scope and intention of the section and permitting what, in effect, would be confiscation of another man's land. This consideration, however, does not apply where the claim is by a tenant against the land of his landlord, a claim which by the proviso to the first clause of the section is limited to a right of property similar to that possessed by the tenant in the tenure to which the land may become annexed, and which, by the same proviso, carries with it the liability to pay an increase of rent. [p. 648, cols. 1 & 2.]

Per Mullick, J.—The Regulation does not provide for islands in a large and navigable river the bed of which is the property of an individual or those in a small and shallow river the bed of which is not the property of an individual. [p. 648, col. 1.]

As for proprietary rights in accretions, clause 4 read with clause 1 provides for a small and shallow river the bed of which belongs to an individual and clause 1 for a large and navigable river the bed of which does not belong to an individual. There is no provision for a large and navigable river of which the bed is private property. [p. 648, cols. 1 & 2.]

With regard to the rights of tenure-holders and raiats, clause 1 deals with rivers of all classes and is subject to no words of limitation or restriction. Therefore, an accretion thrown up along the frontage of a raiati holding on the bank of any river the bed of which belongs to his landlord would be an increase to the holding and would be held as such. [p. 648, col. 2.]

The Regulation is not exhaustive. It is subject to the rules of equity and justice. [p. 648, col. 2.]

In India the presumption is that the bed of a large and navigable river belongs to Government, which occupies here a position which is fundamentally different to that which it occupies in England. Here Government is the owner of the soil of the country and has all the rights of a proprietor. The bed of a navigable river is not the public domain in the same full sense as in a country where all land which is not private property vests in the public and is held by Government as a mere trustee. If in these circumstances it is not inequitable to give the adjacent proprietor and raiyyat land which has accreted out of the river-bed and is the property of another, why should it be inequitable to give a raiyyat an interest in a river-bed belonging to his landlord which has accreted to his holding and for which he will pay rent. In both class of rivers the proprietor will pay Government revenue for the accretion, and compensate himself by taking rent from his tenants. There is no question of any confiscation or taking away. [p. 649, col. 2]

The ordinary rule of conveyancing is that a grant or lease of land abutting on a river by a person who is in a position to part with the soil is presumed to pass half the adjacent bed of the river without any reference to the instrument of grant; even where there is no grant the lessee or tenant is entitled to claim the benefit of the presumption. In the absence of contract or proof of a re-formation in situ, an occupancy raiyyat in India would also be entitled to claim the benefit of this presumption. [p. 649, col. 1; p. 650, col. 1.]

Per Jwala Prasad, J.—Clause 1 of section 4 is a general one and applies to all kinds of rivers, and lays down the principle upon which the rights to the lands thus gained should be determined. [p. 650, col. 2.]

Though the primary object of the Regulation was to provide rules for determining disputes between the riparian proprietors, yet it has, as a matter of fact, dealt with the rights not only of proprietors but also of subordinate tenures. In fact, the Regulation seems to deal with disputes of all kinds, as is expressly declared by clause fifth of section 4. It applies not only to disputes between the riparian proprietors but also to cases where no riparian proprietor is concerned and the dispute is between the proprietor and his tenant on the same side of the river. Appeal against the decision of the Sub-Judge, First Court, Monghyr, dated the 29th January 1919, confirming that of the First Munsif, Bagusarai, dated the 13th May 1918.

FACTS appear from the following Order of Reference made by Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad and Mr. Justice Das on the 22nd March 1922.

Das, J.—The plaintiffs, who are the respondents before us, are the landlords and the defendants the tenants. The suits out of which these appeals arise were suits for recovery of possession of certain lands. These lands formed the bed of the river Gandak and came out of the water only recently. The plaintiffs' case is, that the lands which are the subject-matter of the dispute belong to them and that, though they could not exercise any proprietary title over them while they were covered with water, they are now entitled to them as the water has receded. The defendants did not dispute the proprietary title of the plaintiffs, but they based their claim upon section 4 of Regulation XI of 1825. Their case is that they are entitled to hold these lands as an accession to their holdings.

The lower Appellate Court pointed out that the defendants did not dispute the case of the plaintiffs that the bed of the river belonged to them and, being of opinion that the lands were not formed by slow and gradual accretion of the river within the meaning of clause 1, section 4, of Regulation XI of 1825, decreed the plaintiffs' claim. On appeal to this Court, it was argued that the lower Appellate Court was under the impression that, in order to bring a case within clause 1 of section 4 of the Regulation, it was necessary to establish that the accretion was imperceptible, and that, as that view can no longer be maintained in view of the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Srinath Roy v. Dinabandhu Sen (1), the decrees passed by the lower Appellate Court could not be sustained. We assented to the argument urged on behalf of the appellants and we remanded the case to the lower Appellate Court to return its finding to this Court on the issue, "Have the lands in suit been gained to the holdings of the defendants by gradual accretion from the recess of the river Gandak as contemplated by Regulation XI of 1825?" The lower Appellate Court has answered the question in the affirmative. On the finding arrived at by the lower Appellate Court which, it may be pointed out, is a finding of fact and, therefore, binding on us in second appeal, the appellants are entitled to succeed.

It was, however, argued by Mr. Hasan Imam that, it being admitted that the bed of the river belongs to the respondents there is in fact no case to be tried under clause 1, section 4 of the Regulation. He relies upon the decision of the Judicial Committee in Loper v. Muddan Mohun Thakoor (2) and on the decision of this Court in Brahmanand Singh v. Durd Bahadur Singh (3). The appellants, on the other hand, rely upon the decision of this Court in Puri Dass v. Kanhu Behera (4). There is clearly a conflict between the decisions of this Court. It was laid down in Puri Dass v. Kanhu Behera (4) that section 4 of the Regulation was not limited in its application to a river the bed of which is the property of the Crown. That was a case where the plaintiffs claimed to be in possession of the land in dispute as an accretion to their raiyyati holdings. The landlords who were the defendants maintained that the river out of the bed of which the accretions were alleged to have formed being their private property, section 4 of the Regulation did not apply. Their argument was, that section 4 of the Regulation applied only to a case where the bed of the river was the property of the Crown. The learned Judges took the view that there was no authority in support of the contention put forward on behalf of the landlord and they came to the conclusion that, notwithstanding the fact that the bed of the river was the property of the landlord, the tenants could still claim title to the lands which formed the bed of the river as an accretion to their raiyyati holdings. This view was not accepted in Brahmanand Singh v. Durd Bahadur Singh (3). It was pointed out in the latter case that the decision of the Judicial Committee in Loper's case (2) was an authority for the proposition that section 4, clause (1) of the Regulation applied to cases of gradual accretion from public domain or territory, e. g., river or sea belonging to the State, and did not refer to land confiscated from another's private property, and that section 4 had no application where the accreted land in dispute was shown to have re-formed on its identifiable site. It was, however, not necessary to decide the exact point in Brahmanand Singh v. Durd Bahadur Singh (3). I was a party to the decision in Brahmanand Singh v. Durd Bahadur Singh (3) and I adhere to the view which I expressed in the case. There being a clear conflict between the two decisions to which I have referred, it seems to me that the matter must be referred to the Full Bench for its decision. The point which I desire to refer to the Full Bench is this; Does clause 1, section 4 of Regulation XI of 1825 apply to a case where the river out of the bed of which the accretions have formed is the private property of an individual and not the property of the Crown?

JWALA PRASAD, J.—I agree.

Messrs. H. Imam and O. O. Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT OF THE FULL BENCH.

MILLER, O. J.—The only question for determination in these appeals is, whether the appellants, who are the tenants of raiyyati holdings abutting on the river Gandak, are entitled to possession, as an increment to their holdings, of certain lands adjacent thereto, which have been gained by gradual accretion from the bed of the river, or whether the respondents, their landlords, who have the proprietary interest in the bed of the river as well as in the appellants' holdings, are entitled to this possession.

The determination of the question must depend upon the construction to be placed upon the first clause of section 4 of Bengal Regulation XI of 1825, known as the Bengal Alluvion and Diluvion Regulation. It is the appellants' case that the Regulation entitles them to a raiyati interest in the lands of their landlords, acquired in the manner stated upon payment of additional rent. The respondents, on the other hand, contend that the Regulation has no application except in cases where the bed of the river out of which the lands have emerged is the property of the State.

“4. First. When land may be gained by gradual accretion, whether from the recess of the river or of the sea, it shall be considered an increment to the tenure of the person to whose land or estate it is thus annexed, whether such land or estate be held immediately from Government by a Zamindar or other superior land-holder, or as a subordinate tenure by any description of under-tenant whatever.”

There is a proviso to the clause to the effect that the interest so acquired in the accreted land shall not be greater than that held by the person in possession of the estate or tenure to which it may become annexed, and that the holder shall not be exempt in respect of the accreted land from assessment of revenue payable to Government, nor, in the case of a subordinate tenure under a superior landlord, shall the under-tenant of whatever description be exempt from payment of any increase of rent to which he may be justly liable.

The suits out of which the appeals arise were instituted by the respondents, as landlords, claiming to recover possession from their tenants of the lands in question. The tenants relied upon the Regulation, and claimed to retain possession, subject to the payment of an additional rent.

The Munsif before whom the suits were tried passed a decree in favour of the landlords on the ground that there had been no gradual accretion within the meaning of the Regulation. He was of opinion that to bring it within the section the accretion must be by gradual, slow and imperceptible means, and, further, that to permit the tenants to acquire an interest in the lands of their landlords would be destructive of the rights of private property and contrary to the decision of the Judicial Committee in Lopra v. Muzhun Mohun Thakoor (2).

On appeal to the Subordinate Judge the Munsif's decision was affirmed and the appeal dismissed.

On second appeal to this Court the learned Judge before whom it was heard held that the view that the accretion should be imperceptible in order to bring it within the Regulation could no longer be maintained in face of the decision of the Judicial Committee, in Srinath Roy v. Dinabandhu Sen (1), a ruling which has been followed by this Court in Lachmi Narayan Lal v. Maharaja Kesho Prasad Singh (5). They accordingly remanded the case to the lower Appellate Court, with certain directions as to the principles to be applied, for a finding on the issue, “Have the lands in suit been gained to the holdings of the defendants by gradual accretion from the recess of the river Gandak as contemplated by Regulation XI of 1825”. That issue was answered by the lower Appellate Court in the affirmative and when the case came back to this Court for final disposal the only question which remained for decision in the appeal was that which I have stated at the beginning of this judgment. The learned Judges who heard the appeal considered that there was a conflict of opinion on the point in the decisions of this Court in Puri Dass v. Kanhu Behari (4) and the more recent case of Brahmanand Singh v. Dunda Bahadur Singh (3).

In my opinion both those cases were rightly decided. In the former the dispute was between raiyats, who claimed the land as an accretion to their holdings, and the transferees of their landlords in whom the bed of the river was vested, and it was held that, in such a case, section 4 clause first of the Regulation was not limited in its application to a river the bed of which is the property of the Crown. In the latter case the dispute was between neighbouring proprietors. The lands which originally belonged to the plaintiffs had become diluviated, and had, subsequently, by a further change in the river's course, re-formed in situ on the boundary of the defendants' land. It was there held, following the decision in Lopez's case (2), that the defendants could acquire no interest under the Regulation to lands belonging to a private individual and not to the Crown. There are, however, certain observations in the judgment of Mr. Justice Das in that case which might lead to the inference that in no case could the section have any application unless the bed of the river was Crown property. The proposition thus broadly stated was not necessary for the determination of the question then before the Court. The dispute there was not between a landlord and his tenant as in the earlier case of Furi Dass v. Kanhu Behera (4), and as here, but between neighbouring proprietors, one of whom claimed the accreted land as an increment to his Zemindari although the proprietary rights in the bed of the river from which the land emerged belong to the other. The facts in that case were similar to those in Lopez v. Muddun Mohun Thakoor (2) and the principle laid down in Lopez's case (2) applied with equal force to the facts in that case. In both cases the dispute was between neighbouring proprietors neither of whom held his interest through or under the other, and in both cases it was found that the ownership of the accreted lands had all along been, not in the party to whose land the accretions had become attached, nor in the Crown from whom he held, but in the other proprietor.

On a perusal of the first clause of the fourth section of the Regulation it appears to me to apply clearly both to the case of a superior landlord who holds from the Crown, and to the case of the holder of a subordinate estate or tenure holding from a landlord intermediate between himself and the Crown, and to be limited in each case to accretions from the lands of the person from whom he holds and to whom revenue in the one case and rent in the other is payable. In the case of a superior landlord the person from whom he holds is the Crown and no one else. In such a case it is only where the Crown is the proprietor of the accreted lands that the section comes into operation. To hold otherwise, and permit a landlord to acquire in this manner a proprietary right in the land of his neighbour, with whom he has no relationship such as that of a tenant to his landlord, would be going outside the scope and intention of the section and permitting what, in effect, would be confiscation of another man's land. This consideration, however, does not apply where the claim is by a tenant against the land of his landlord, a claim which by the proviso to the first clause of the section is limited to a right of property similar to that possessed by the tenant in the tenure to which the land may become annexed, and which, by the same proviso, carries with it the liability to pay an increase of rent. In Lopez v. Muddun Mohun Thakoor (2), as already indicated, the claim was by a superior landlord holding immediately under the Crown and claiming as an increment to his estate a portion of the former bed of the river which belonged not to the Government from whom he held, but to a neighbouring Zemindar from whom he held nothing. We, therefore, find in the judgment in that case an emphatic repudiation of the suggestion that the Regulation authorised the confiscation or destruction of any private person's property, and a declaration that the gain which an individual proprietor might acquire under the Regulation could only occur in "that which was part of the public territory, the public domain not useable in the ordinary sense, that is to say, the sea belonging to the State, a public river belonging to the State." It must be borne in mind that in thus limiting the operation of the Regulation their Lordships were considering only the claim of a superior landlord to the lands of his neighbour through whom his title was not derived, and not the case of a subordinate tenure-holder claiming against his immediate landlord.

It is contended, however, on behalf of the respondents that the interpretation placed upon the Regulation in Lopez's case (2) clearly lays down the broad proposition that it applies only to the sea or public rivers belonging to the State. I agree that this is so in cases where the claimant is a superior landlord holding under the Crown, but I cannot believe that it was the intention of their

KHUBI MAHTON v. LACHMI DAS.

Lordships in that case to lay down a broad general proposition applying to a state of affairs which was not then under consideration, nor can I find anything in the section itself which would limit the rights of subordinate tenure-holders, or under-tenants, to cases in which the accreted lands formed part of the public domain. Other cases were referred to on behalf of the respondents in support of their contention, and in which language similar to that used in Lopez's case (2) appears, and where it is stated that the right by accretion is limited to gains from that which was not previously private property. See Ramanath Thakoor v. Chundernirain Chowdhry (6), Mohini Mohun Doss v. Juggobundoo Bore (7), Dwarkanath Roy Chowdhry v. Dinobundhoo Singh (8), Juglish Chunder Biswas v. Chowdhry Zuhoor-ul-Huq (9). It is sufficient to say that in each of those cases the dispute was between rival proprietors and in none of them was the right of a tenant against his landlord under consideration.

On the other hand, in Attimoolah v. Shaikh Sabeeboollah (10) it was held that a kourusee jotedar, with a right of occupancy has a right to lands which accrete to his jote and the Zamindar cannot take them away and settle them with other parties. In Bhuggobut Pershad Singh v. Doorg Bijoy Singh (11) it was held that as between himself and the Zamindar a raiyat is entitled to any accretion to his holding formed by the recession of the river, and the fact of his being a mere tenant-at-will does not entitle the Zamindar to turn him out of the accretion whilst he retains, as tenant, the original holding. In Gaurhari Kaiburto v. Bhola Kaiburto (12) decided in 1894, by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court, it was also held that a raiyat who had a right of occupancy was entitled to the benefit of section 4, clause (1) of the Regulation as against the defendant who claimed to be in possession by virtue of a settlement from the landlord; and in Mahadeo Pershad v. Mathura Tanti (13), decided in 1909, it was again held that the fourth section of the Regulation applied in favour of a tenant against his landlord. In none of those cases does it appear that the ownership in the bed of the river was in the Crown. Certainly, no argument was urged in any of them based upon a distinction between public and private rivers. Finally, in 1918 in Gobinda Hota v. Kristapada Singha Babu (14) it was held by a Bench of the Calcutta High Court that the lands which have gradually accreted to a mukarari holding forming a chur in a small shallow river cannot be claimed by a Zamindar, the proprietor of the bed of the river, as a portion of his khas patti but belong to the tenant subject to the payment of additional rent in respect thereof. The proprietary right to the chur no doubt existed, and by clause (4) of the section continued in the Zamindar but the tenant's right also accrued under the first clause of the section to which the fourth clause is subject.

It is contended by the learned Counsel for the respondents that where the superior landlord acquires by gradual accretion a proprietary interest, as against the Government, in a portion of the bed of the river as an increment to his estate, his tenant, to whose tenure or holding the land is annexed, also acquires, as against his landlord, the same interest in the accreted lands as he possessed in his tenure or holding. The landlord acquires against the Crown; the tenant acquires against his landlord and the under-tenant, if there be one, also acquires against the intermediate proprietor from whom he holds. If there is no confiscation by the tenant of his landlord's property in such a case, it is difficult to appreciate how there can be confiscation or destruction of his property merely because at some earlier period the landlord had acquired from the Crown a proprietary interest in the river bed from which the land subsequently emerged.

In my opinion the section applies in all cases where the tenant claims, as an increment to his tenure, lands gained by gradual accretion from the recession of the river the property of his landlord, and, except in the case of a claim by the superior landlord, the section is not confined to lands which are the property of the State. I would allow the appeals in each case with costs to the appellants here and in the Courts below.

MULLICK, J.—In my opinion the appellants are entitled to hold the lands in suit as accretions to their ancient occupancy holdings and I am still of opinion that the case of Puri Dass v. Kanhu Behera (4) was correctly decided. Indeed, nothing was decided in that case which could possibly have affected the decision in Brahmanand Singh v. Dund Bahadur Singh (3), and I have been unable to discover why it was at all cited; for in this latter case, the contest was between two rival proprietors and the judgment proceeded on the ground of re-formation in situ, though, if the river was small and shallow, the same result might have been arrived at by an application of clause (4), section 4 of Regulation XI of 1825.

But in the present case the question of the correctness of the decision in Puri Dass case (4) does arise directly and it is necessary to determine whether clause (1) of section 4 enables an occupancy raiyyat to claim a raiyyat's interest in an accretion formed out of a river-bed which is the property of his landlord.

Now, the law of increments gained by the formation of islands is contained in clause (3) of section 4 as regards a large and navigable river the bed of which is not the property of an individual and in clause (4) as regards a small and shallow river (as distinguished from a large and navigable river) the bed of which is the property of an individual.

It will be observed that the Regulation does not provide for islands in a large and navigable river the bed of which is the property of an individual or those in a small and shallow river the bed of which is not the property of an individual.

It will also be observed that while clauses (3) and (4) determine the right of proprietorship, they are subject to the provisions of clause (1) in respect of the assessment of revenue and the rights of tenants.

As for proprietary rights in accretions, clause (4), read with clause 1, provides for a small and shallow river the bed of which belongs to an individual and clause

1 for a large and navigable river the bed of which does not belong to an individual. There is no provision for a large and navigable river of which the bed is private property.

With regard to the rights of tenure-holders and raiyyats, clause (1) deals with rivers of all classes and is subject to no words of limitation or restriction. Therefore, in my view, an accretion thrown up along the frontage of a raiyyat holding on the bank of any river the bed of which belongs to his landlord would be an increase to the holding and would be held as such. Under the concluding proviso of clause (1) of the Regulation as originally enacted the raiyyat was liable to pay increased rent but since its repeal that liability has been re-imposed by Section 52 of the Bagal Tenancy Act.

It is necessary to add that the Regulation is not exhaustive. It is subject to the rules of equity and justice. Therefore, land gained from the river-bed by re-formation in situ or otherwise will, if it can be identified, belong to the owner of the bed; except when otherwise expressly prescribed by the Regulation. This rule will preclude a tenant from acquiring a right of tenancy in an accretion from a river-bed which was not the property of his landlord before emergence.

In the present case it is not known whether the land is re-formation of land which was formerly in the direct possession of the landlord. All that is known is that the bed was the property of the landlord before it emerged, and the question is whether the appellants can claim a right of tenancy in the accretions either under clause 1 or under some general principle of equity and good conscience.

Now, the main argument against the appellants is that there are certain observations in Lopez v. Muddun Mohun Thakoor (2) which indicate that in the opinion of their Lordships of the Privy Council clause (1) of section 4 of Regulation XI of 1825 applies to rivers the beds of which are the public domain and to no other.

I am altogether unable to accept this argument. Their Lordships in that case were dealing with a dispute between two rival proprietors of estates; one claiming a sand bank as an accretion to his permanently settled estate and the other as a re-formation in situ; there was no question of the rights of the raiyats; the river was the Ganges; and it is clear that the observations of their Lordships were intended to apply only to the special facts before them. The judgment pointed out with emphasis that the Statute was subject to the general principles of alluvion and diluvion and it settled the law in one important point, upon which there was at that time great conflict of opinion, by ruling that Regulation XI of 1825 could not be used to confiscate the land of another who could show by means of signs or boundaries that it was the re-formation of his land. And although, in observing that there were no judicial decisions determining what would be the rule in England if there were existing certain means of identifying the original boundaries of the property, their Lordships seem to have overlooked the decision of Lord Chelmsford, L. C., in Attorney-General v. Chambers (15) which had been passed 11 years earlier, it seems to me that their Lordships assumed that the law of accretion was the same then in India as in England. The decision in Foster v. Wright (16) did not come till 1878 and though it dissented from Attorney-General v. Chambers (15) and rejected the doctrine of re-formation in situ, subsequent decisions seem to show a tendency to support the earlier view.

But whatever may be the position in England at the present day, it seems to me that in 1870 their Lordships intended to hold that the law was the same in both countries and if that was so it follows that their observations were applicable to every class of river. Their Lordships made no reservations or restrictions in respect of rivers the beds of which were not the public domain and they, in my opinion, accepted the undisputed proposition that the law of accretion in England was the same for all rivers, namely, the tidal and the non-tidal, and the navigable and the non-navigable. The judgment of the Privy Council in Thakurain Ritras Koer v. Thakurain Sarfaraz Koer (17) and of the Calcutta High Court in Dataram Nath v. Eshan Ukunder Law (18) seem to show that no difference has been effected in this respect by the Statute Law of India.

I do not think, therefore, that in this case Lopsz v. Muddun Mohun Thakoor (2) is an authority which assists the proprietor.

Moreover, on general principles, that is to say, the principles of equity and justice, assuming that clause 1 of Regulation XI does not apply to the case, I think the appellants are entitled to a decree. In India the presumption is that the bed of a large and navigable river belongs to Government, which occupies here a position which is fundamentally different to that which it occupies in England. Here, Government is the owner of the soil of the country and has all the rights of a proprietor. The bed of a navigable river is not the public domain in the same full sense as in a country where all land which is not private property vests in the public and is held by Government as a mere trustee. If, in these circumstances, it is not inequitable to give the adjacent proprietor and raiyat land which has accreted out of the river-bed and is the property of another, why should it be inequitable to give a raiyat an interest in a river-bed, belonging to his landlord which has accreted to his holding and for which he will pay rent. In both cases of rivers the proprietor will pay Government revenue for the accretion, and compensate himself by taking rent from his tenants. There is no question of any confiscation or taking away.

There is another rule also which applies to this case and which I think is based on equity and justice. The ordinary rule of conveyancing is, that a grant or lease of land abutting on a river by a person who is in a position to part with the soil is presumed to pass half the adjacent bed of the river without any reference to the instrument of grant; even where there is no grant the lessee or tenant is entitled to claim the benefit of the presumptions. I take it that, in the absence of contract or proof of a reformation in situ, an occupant raiyat in India would also be entitled to claim the benefit of this presumption. Therefore, in this case the rayats would be entitled to claim the accretions at least up to the limit of the middle line.

But as, in my opinion, clause 1 of section 4 of the Regulation is applicable, they will be entitled to the whole of the accretion up to the opposite bank of the river, as the whole river-bed which has been marked as plot No. 759 in the Cadastral Survey map has been entered as the property of the landlord.

It remains to observe that, in addition to the authorities cited in Puri Dass case (4), we have had the advantage of referring to Gobinda Hota v. Kristapada Singha Babu (14). Their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court in unmistakable terms disagreed with the view expressed in a previous decision of that Court and held that in a small and shallow river the landlord was entitled to the benefit of clause (1), section 4, of Regulation XI of 1825.

In the present case it has not been clearly found whether the river is small or shallow, or large and navigable. But in my opinion in either case the appellants are entitled to claim the lands as accretions to their occupancy holdings.

I agree, therefore, that the appeals should be decreed with costs.

JAWALA PRASAD, J.—I agree with the judgment delivered by my Lord the Chief Justice. The question involved in this case is not free from difficulty. The Court below has held that the lands in suit have been gained to the holding of the defendants by gradual accretion from the recess of river Gandak as contemplated by Regulation XI of 1825. The plaintiffs are the proprietors of the defendants' holdings. They are also the proprietors of the bed of the river and consequently of the lands in dispute which have gradually come out of the river in front of the defendants' holdings by gradual recess of the river and have become fit for cultivation. If Gandak was a small and shallow river, as contemplated by clause (4) of section 4 of Regulation XI of 1825, the bed of which belongs to the plaintiffs, the lands in question would belong to the plaintiffs as proprietors thereof "subject to the provisions stated in the first clause" of the present section (section 4). In Gobinda Hota v. Kristapada Singha Babu (14) their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court interpreted the words in clause (4), quoted above within inverted commas, as preserving the rights of the tenant to whose holding the lands were gained by gradual accretion from the recess of the river. Their Lordships held that, although the proprietor of the bed of the river will continue to be the proprietor of lands thus gained from the recess of the river, those lands shall be considered "an increment to the tenure of the tenant" he being liable to pay additional rent to the proprietor. In this view the lands in question would be an increment to the holdings of the defendants but the river in question, according to the finding of the Court below, is not a small and shallow river. Says the learned Subordinate Judge, "In the present case we are concerned with the accretion re-formed from river Gandak, which is more or less a navigable river and in which boats ply, as is admitted on behalf of both the parties. Of course, it is not like river Ganges, yet it is large and deep enough for plying of boats. It is also subject to annual floods only varying in degree in its severity in each year". The river in question is, therefore, a large and navigable one. Clause (3) of section 1 deals with chars or islands "thrown up in large and navigable rivers, the bed of which is not the property of an individual". But here the bed of the river Gandak belongs to the plaintiffs. Therefore, this clause does not apply. Clause (2) deals with cases in which a river by a sudden change of its course may break through and intersect an estate without any gradual encroachment, which is not the case here. Therefore, this clause also does not apply.

Clause (1) of the section deals with lands gained "by gradual accretion whether from the recess of a river or of the sea". This clause is a general one and applies to all kinds of rivers, and lays down the principle upon which the rights to the lands thus gained should be determined. Under this clause the land gained "shall be considered an increment to the tenure of the person to whose land or estate it is thus gained, whether such lands or estate be held immediately from Government by a Zemindar or other superior landlord, or as a subordinate tenure by any description of under-tenant whatever". The defendants under this section will, therefore, be entitled to claim the lands as an increment to their holding.

It has, however, been contended that the Regulation does not apply to lands which come out of a river whether gradually or by a sudden change of its course where the bed of the river belongs to an individual. It is contended that the Regulation, particularly clause (1) of section 4, applies only to the lands gained from rivers which are the property of the public or the Crown. A reference has been made to the preamble to the Regulation. The preamble, however, gives the reason for the rules "for the general information of individuals as well as for the guidance of the Courts of Justice" being enacted "in consequence of the frequent changes which take place in the channel of the principal rivers that intersect the provinces immediately subject to the Presidency of Fort William and the shifting of the sands which lie in the beds of those rivers" whereby "churs or small islands are often thrown up by alluvion in the midst of the stream, or near one of the banks, &c., and the lands gained from the rivers or the sea by the means above-mentioned are a frequent source of contention and affray". This may be the initial reason of enacting the rules, but the rules seem to deal with all kinds of rivers, navigable or non-navigable, large or small, deep or shallow. Clauses (1) and (2) of section 4 deal with lands gained by gradual accretion from the recess of all kinds of rivers or the sea. Clause (3) deals with large and navigable rivers, the bed of which is not the property of an individual. Clause (4) deals with small and shallow rivers the beds of which belong to an individual.

It is then said that the Regulation deals with the rights of riparian proprietors. No doubt, section 2 declares that the rights of the riparian proprietors of contiguous estates divided by a river shall be determined by such a clear and definite usage as may be established. Section 3 seeks to provide rules in the subsequent sections for determining the claims and disputes relative to lands gained by alluvion or by dereliction of a river or the sea when no legal usage referred to in section 2 is established. From this it is argued that the rules in section 4 are meant to apply to disputes between the riparian proprietors, and not to the case in hand where no riparian proprietor is concerned and the dispute is between the proprietor and his tenant on the same side of the river. The contention does not seem to be sound, for, though the primary object of the Regulation was to provide rules for determining disputes between the riparian proprietors, yet it has, as a matter of fact, dealt with the rights not only of proprietors but also of subordinate tenures. In fact, the Regulation seems to deal with disputes of all kinds, as is expressly declared by clause fifth of section 4, which says that "In all claims and disputes respecting land gained by alluvion or...dereliction of a river or the sea, which are not specifically provided for by the rules contained in this Regulation, the Courts of Justice, in deciding upon...claims and disputes, shall be guided by the best evidence they may be able to obtain of established local usage, if there be any applicable to the case, or if not, by general principles of equity and justice." Thus, cases which have not directly come under the express rules of the Regulation have been decided on the principles of equity and justice, for instance, Ehageerattie Dabee v. Greesh Chunder Chowdhry (19) and Sheogoolam Teenaree v. Fageera Misser (20). Even if none of the rules in section 4 applies to the present case, it has to be determined on the principles of equity and justice, as was done by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Nogender Chunder Ghose v. Mahomed Hsoff (21). The plaintiffs, no doubt, can claim the lands which come out of river Gandak as their own, inasmuch as there is nothing in principle or in the Regulations which would take away or destroy their rights in such lands, whether the lands be formed in the midst of the river as an island or be formed on the banks of it by gradually silting up or recession of the river; but if the lands have been gained by gradual accretion from the recess of the river to the holding of the plaintiffs' tenants, there is, on the other hand, nothing in the Regulation or on the principle of equity and justice, in the absence of any custom or contract to the contrary, to prevent the plaintiffs' tenants (the defendants in the case) from claiming the land as an increment to their holding. The proprietorship of the lands in question, no doubt, will continue with the plaintiffs who are the owners of the bed of the river.

For these reasons, I agree with the view taken by the learned Chief Justice, though, as already observed, I confess that the point is not free from difficulty.

JUDGMENT.—Maung Po and his wife were the owners of two parcels of land which they mortgaged to a Chetty as security for the repayment of a loan. Appellant, Maung Po Ngwe, executed the mortgage-deed as surety. Subsequently, he paid to the Chetty the sum of Rs. 3,400 in part payment of the amount due under the mortgage. By an agreement with Maung Po, he was given possession of one of the two parcels of land (the one which forms the subject-matter of the present suit) with liberty to enjoy the rents and profits thereof in lieu of the interest accruing due on the Rs. 3,400. Later, he paid off Rs. 2,600, the balance that was then due under the mortgage to the Chetty, and he no doubt then acquired, under section 140 of the Indian Contract Act, all the rights which the Chetty had against Maung Po. Subsequently, he brought a suit against Maung Po to recover the sum of Rs. 2,600, the amount of the second payment that he had made to the Chetty. He did not include in his claim the Rs. 3,400, and thus he is not now competent to bring a suit to recover that money. The suit he did bring was compromised, and a consent-decree was passed in terms of the compromise. The terms were that there should be a decree for Rs. 3,000 with Rs. 150 for costs, and Maung Po Ngwe agreed that he would not be able to file any contribution suit against the defendants for the amount paid up by the plaintiff on behalf of the defendants to the M. S. M. M. Firm at Toungoo due on the mortgage-deed executed by Ko Po and himself for the principal sum of Rs. 5,000, bearing interest at Rs. 1-10 per cent. per mensem, and which mortgage-deed was filed in the case by him. That is to say, he then deliberately abandoned all the rights which he had acquired under section 140 of the Indian Contract Act. The position then was that he had a decree for Rs. 3,000 and costs, and he was in possession of a parcel of land with liberty to enjoy the rents and profits in lieu of interest on Rs. 3,400 with the further agreement that, if Maung Po should not re-pay the Rs. 3,400, he could call upon him to convey the land outright to him. The compromise was made on the 11th December 1918, and on the 19th February 1919 Maung Po conveyed the land in suit to the respondent, Yacooob Ally, who also obtained possession of the land. Po Ngwe then brought a suit under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act and re-took possession. Yacooob Ally now sues for possession. The suit was dismissed by the First Court but decreed by the learned Divisional Judge, and the present appeal is brought from that decision.

The first point urged is that Po Ngwe is still entitled to all the rights of the Chetty mortgagee. In face of the compromise decree in which those rights were clearly and distinctly given up, we are unable to hold that he has any such rights as a mortgagee.

In the next place, it is urged that under the terms of the agreement made between him and Maung Po he is entitled to a charge on the property on the ground that there was an agreement to sell coupled with payment of the purchase price and delivery of possession. As to this, we are unable to hold that the facts justify the claim. The agreement merely was that he should take possession and enjoy the rents and profits in lieu of interest. If, later, Maung Po refused to pay or was unable to re-pay the Rs. 3,400, Po Ngwe would be entitled to demand that the land be sold to him. There was no unqualified agreement to sell the land, and Po Ngwe has never sought to reduce that agreement into being.

Reference has been made to the case of Maung Po Maung v. Maung Kaing (1) in which the provisions of section 55 (6) (b) of the Transfer of Property Act were applied. With that decision we are unable to agree. In that case there was an actual sale which was invalid by reason of there being no registered conveyance. The money had been paid and possession had been given. Here, as we have pointed out, there was no such sale, and to treat the agreement that was entered into in the present case as a contract of sale and to hold that it gave a charge on the property would, in the words of the judgment of the learned Judges in Lilchand Motiram v. Lakshman Sahadu (2), which was referred to in the Burma case, be overriding the plain provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. See also Kurri Veerareddi v. Kurri Bapireddi (3) and Muthu Gounden v. Chellappa Gounden (4).

Section 55 lays down the rights and liabilities applying between the buyer and the seller of immoveable property. Section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act lays down that a contract for sale of immoveable property does not of itself create any interest in or charge on such property. In the present case, putting it at its highest, there could be no more than a contract for sale, and not an actual sale, that was invalid for want of formalities.

We are next asked to treat appellant's position as that of a usufructuary mortgagee in possession and to hold that on this ground he is entitled to a charge on the property. We do not think it can properly be said that he was a usufructuary mortgagee, seeing that he had deliberately abandoned his rights as a mortgagee. If the transaction could be treated as one that was intended to be a usufructuary mortgage, that could not be converted into a charge unless it could be valid as a mortgage. This view was taken in the case of Ma Ben Lon v. Maung Po Lu (5) where it was held: "It must, therefore, be held that section 100 of Transfer of Property Act does not enable a mortgage to be converted into a charge, if it cannot operate as a mortgage by reason of non-compliance with the formalities prescribed by the law."

Lastly, it is urged that Yacooob Ally had notice or must be deemed to have had notice, of the possessory rights of Po Ngwe. This point was not, however, raised before, but even if it had been, as Po Ngwe had taken no steps to legalise his position by duly registered deeds, we cannot impute notice to Yacooob Ally. Had he made enquiries as to incumbrances on the land, he would have learnt that the Chetty's mortgage had been satisfied and was no longer binding on the land in favour of any person. He would have been assured by his vendor that the land was unencumbered and he could not have referred to any registered documents as there were none. Po Ngwe was in possession under an oral agreement which, no doubt, gave him certain rights as against Maung Po. Those rights he never sought to enforce, and, this being so, he has acquired no legal title to the land, and we are unable to hold that he is entitled to retain possession as against Yacob Ally, the purchaser for value by a registered deed.

The appeal will, therefore, stand dismissed with costs in all Courts, the decree of the lower Appellate Court being confirmed.

Hindu Law—Adoption—Bombay Presidency—Widow, right of, to contest adoption made by her husband—Jains—Adoption—Ceremony, nature of.

Per Macleod, C. J.—Amongst Jains an adoption is more a secular than a religious ceremony, and is not looked upon in the same way as amongst the regenerate classes. [p. 655, col. 2.]

First appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Belgaum, in Suit No. 8 of 1918.

Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. N. Koyajee, for Respondent Nos. 1 to 3.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff in this case is the widow of one Malgauda who died of plague on the 29th November 1915 and sues to recover possession of her husband's property against the first defendant who claims to be the adopted son of Malgauda. Various objections have been raised to the adoption, first, that Malgauda, having lost his brother Appu a few days previous to the date of the adoption, was in mourning and was, therefore, incapable of performing any religious ceremony; secondly, that the adopted son was the son of Malgauda's sister, and, therefore, could not be adopted; thirdly, that the adoption did not take place at all, although it had to be admitted that an adoption deed was executed and registered.

On the 14th December 1915 the plaintiff made a petition to the Mamlatdar to have her name inserted in C and D Registers since her husband had died a fortnight back. In that petition she said that there were factions in the village, and therefore, the village officers might enter any other name. But, on the 6th January 1916, she made a petition to the Collector admitting the adoption and requesting the first defendant's name to be entered in the Revenue Registers in place of the deceased Malgauda.

On the 7th January 1916 she was examined in connection with her petition and Varsa proceeding. She admitted the whole story which she now denies in the suit. The passing of orders on this petition was unfortunately delayed, so that the plaintiff, for some reason or other, made up her mind to dispute the first defendant's adoption.

On the 6th June 1916 she made a petition to the Collector saying that her husband did not adopt according to caste rites and customs, and that he could not adopt that boy according to Shastras. But she did not deny the fact that her husband had adopted the first defendant.

She was examined on 14th June 1916 when she pleaded that her previous statements had been made under coercion and threats, and for the first time she alleged that the first defendant was not present when he was alleged to have been adopted.

At the outset, we are met with the question whether a widow could be allowed to dispute an adoption made by her husband.

In Bhau Adgauda Patil v. Narasagauda Taiya Patil (1) the plaintiff claimed as the adopted son of one Adgauda. He had been adopted by Adgauda's widow. The defendant was the son adopted by Adgauda in his lifetime. Mr. Shah at page 1275* says:

"Assuming, without deciding, that the adoption of defendant No. 1 by Adgauda was invalid, the question is whether Sitabai, the widow of Adgauda, could make another adoption to her husband during the lifetime of the boy adopted by her husband. The point is one of first impression. No reported precedent on the point has been cited to us: and it must be considered in the light of the power which the widow has in this Presidency to adopt, in the absence of any prohibition, expressed or implied, by her husband. It seems to me clear that the widow is bound by the act of her husband and to accept all the implications of an adoption by him, valid or invalid. In spite of the liberal interpretation of her powers to adopt in this Presidency, I do not think that the Hindu Law contemplated, and certainly it has not provided, that the widow could practically ignore and supersede her husband's act of adoption. There is no authority for it: and I think that the general effect of the Hindu Law of adoption is against such a power. Even an invalid adoption may become effective under certain conditions: and the wife—or rather the widow—cannot go against her husband's wishes so unequivocally expressed or treat the adoption by her husband as non-existent."

And at page 127c* the learned Judge concludes:—

"It may appear somewhat anomalous that the widow should not be allowed to treat as non-existent an adoption by her husband which is invalid. But I do not think that there is anything anomalous in the widow being required to accept the act of adoption by her husband with all its implications at least so far as she herself is concerned."

It seems to me that an adoption by the husband whether valid or invalid would stand on much the same footing as a Will, so that it would be considered as an implied prohibition against the widow adopting after the death of her husband. It was contended for the appellant that those remarks of the learned Judge were obiter, but they were directly in point, as they dealt expressly with the widow's power to adopt the plaintiff against the adoption by her husband, and if it could be said that the husband had impliedly prohibited an adoption by his widow by his having adopted in his lifetime, it would necessarily follow that the validity of the plaintiff's adoption by the widow was directly in issue.

It does not seem necessary, therefore, to consider the other points which were raised in this case. But with regard to the factum of the adoption, all the evidence seems to point to the fact that it actually did take place, and that the suggestion by the widow seven months later that the adopted boy was not in Belgaum when it was alleged he was adopted, must be considered as a desperate attempt to get rid of the first defendant's claim to succeed to Malgauda. There are several witnesses who deposed that they were present at the adoption and that the first defendant was adopted. If the plaintiff really thought that the first defendant was not present, she would have made that allegation at once instead of waiting for seven months when she felt the necessity, if she wished to succeed to her husband's estate, of proving some fact which would put an end to the claim of the first defendant.

On the question whether amongst Jains the adoption of a sister's son is invalid, no doubt there is no judicial decision to the effect that Jains do not observe the same law as the regenerate classes. Therefore, if the question had to be decided in this case evidence would have to be led to prove the custom that the adoption of a sister's son amongst Jains is acknowledged.

Then, on the question whether Malgauda could not have adopted owing to his being in mourning we have been referred to no direct authority on the question. But it is argued that as Malgauda was in mourning, he was not competent to perform any religious ceremony, and, therefore, could not adopt. But the evidence certainly points to the fact that amongst Jains adoption is not looked upon in the same way as amongst the regenerate classes, and that adoption is really more a secular than a religious ceremony. The appeal, therefore, must be dismissed with costs.

of this Court. Mr. Justice Shah observes at page 1276*: "It seems to me clear that the widow is bound by the act of her husband and to accept all the implications of an adoption by him, valid or invalid." I am bound to respect this opinion as coming from a learned Hindu Judge. I do so the more readily because we are in this case dealing with an adoption by a Hindu of his sister's son; and it is matter of common knowledge that in the Bombay Presidency adoptions of daughter's sons and sister's sons are not uncommon. For this proposition we have the high authority of Mr. Mandlik who in his Vyavahara Mayukh, Part II at p. 493, observes:

"I must note that the existence of a time-honoured custom, allowing the adoption of a dauhitra (daughter's son) or bhagineya (sister's son) is testified to in distinct terms by the Dvaita-Nirnaya and the Vyavahara Mayukh and also impliedly by Krishna Bhatta. I have made special inquiries on the subject, and I have no hesitation in stating that in this Presidency such adoption are common, and not the slightest taint attaches to them on account of such relationship."

Special usages in favour of adoptions of daughter's sons and sister's sons have, moreover, been judicially recognised in some of the districts of this Presidency. I need only refer to the judgments of Candy, J. and Fulton, J. in Manjunath v. Kaveribar (2).

For these reasons, I agree in holding that it is not competent to the plaintiff, who is the widow of Malgauda, to seek to set aside the adoption made by her husband.

Although the doctrine laid down in section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code relating to res judicata may be rightly applied in certain proceedings in execution arising out of the same judgment so as to put an end to litigation and may possibly be applied in certain cases where separate suits have been brought, raising points which have already been decided in execution cases fought between the same parties, still, the special rules laid down in the explanations to that section which go behind the ordinary doctrine of res judicata, ought not to be applied generally in execution cases. JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This is an appeal on behalf of the defendant No. 1 from a decision of Mr. Justice Ross dated the 27th of May last year. The plaintiffs are the proprietors of a plot of land measuring 2 bighas 2 dhurs of which the defendant No. 2 and apparently the defendant No. 3, for there is some doubt about it, were the tenants or, at all events, the defendant No. 2 was the original tenant in January 1914. The tenants sold the land to the defendant No. 1 under a kabala but it appears from the terms of that kabala that the whole holding less 12 kanwas alone was sold under that kabala. The purchaser, therefore, was not the transferee of the whole holding but transferee of a portion of the holding. Before the date of this transaction, namely, on the 18th of September 1913, the plaintiff as landlord obtained a decree for rent against the defendant No. 1's vendors or their predecessor in title or, at all events, against the existing tenant at that time and on the 16th April 1914 the land was put up to sale in execution of that decree and purchased by the plaintiff. The decree obtained by the landlord, for some reason which has not been explained, was treated as a money-decree only, but, nevertheless, the land was sold and purchased by the landlord who, on the 4th August in the same year, actually got delivery of possession of the land. Subsequently, the defendant No. 1, Prithi Mahto, the transferee, took proceedings under O. XXI, r. 90, Civil Procedure Code, for setting aside the sale and he produced his kabala under which he purchased the land in support of his application to show that he had an interest in the land. Now I pause here for a moment to point out that the interest asserted by the defendant No. 1 at the time of his application under O. XXI, r. 90 was an interest in a portion of the holding only, and, therefore, so far as the plaintiff was concerned, there appears to have been no reason why he should take the point that the holding was non transferable because, even if he succeeded in proving the point, nevertheless, a transfer of a portion only of the holding would be binding as against him, provided that the original holder or occupier had not abandoned possession of the whole holding. Eventually, the application of the defendant No. 1 under O. XXI, r. 90, proved successful and the sale was ordered to be set aside. He, however, had some difficulty in getting possession and further proceedings were taken, first, under section 144 Civil Procedure Code and, subsequently, under O. XXI, r. 101, but it would appear that, although the defendant No. 1 had been in possession at some time between the date of his kabala in September 1913 and August in the following year when the plaintiff got possession by an order of the Court, still from the latter date up to the time of this suit it seems, although it is not absolutely clear from the judgments, that the plaintiffs themselves had been in possession of this land. Indeed, in the plaint, amongst other things, the plaintiffs prayed for confirmation of their possession and that in fact is one of the reliefs granted by the learned Munsif which was affirmed both by the lower Appellate Court and by the Judge of this Court. I mention this because in one portion of the Munsif's judgment it would appear that he found upon the evidence of the plaintiffs' witnesses that the defendants were in fact in possession of the whole holding. It seems, however, that in arriving at that finding what he really was discussing was the original possession of the defendants up to sometime in August 1914.

The plaintiffs claimed that possession of the property in suit may be confirmed and that a perpetual injunction may be issued upon the defendant first party restraining him from getting possession over the property in suit or from recovering mesne profits, and further asked for that relief after finding that there was no custom of transferability in the mauzah in which the property is situated and that the original tenants had in fact abandoned the property in suit.

Various defences were raised in the suit, and, amongst others, it was contended that the suit was barred by reason of the provisions of section 11 read in the light of the fourth Explanation to that section of the Civil Procedure Code. It was contended that the question of non-transferability which, if established, would put an end to the defendants' claim could not now be raised because in the proceedings under O. XXI, r. 90, either no such point had been taken by the landlord, or if it had not been taken then it could not be taken now because it might have been taken then. It was, therefore, contended that the present suit was barred by res judicata. The Munsif, with regard to this question came to the conclusion that the point had really never been taken at all or decided by the execution Court in the proceedings under r. 90 of O. XXI and, therefore, held that the point not having been raised or decided, there was no bar to the plaintiffs raising the point now. He did not deal in terms with the fourth Explanation to section 11 but possibly he had in mind the result of certain cases which have been decided both in Madras and Allahabad, where it has been laid down that, whatever may be the extent to which an analogous doctrine to that laid down in section 11 may be applied in execution cases, still the Explanations, as for example Explanation 4 and Explanation 5 can have no application to proceedings of that nature so as to bar the plaintiffs in a subsequent suit from raising points which have not been determined in the previous execution proceedings. When the matter came before the District Judge, although a question was raised based upon the doctrine of estoppel, no question was raised as far as appears from the learned Judge's judgment upon the point which has now been argued before us in this appeal, and there is nothing to show that the point in fact was taken before the learned District Judge. Had it been taken it would have been open to the appellant before us to-day to bring some evidence or some proof that the point had in fact been argued and that the learned Judge omitted to deal with it. But it would appear, on reading the judgment of the learned District Judge, that the point was never taken and, therefore, one must assume that it was abandoned. Now, when the matter came before the Judge of this Court, that point, which I may say is the only point which has been argued before us to-day, and other points were urged. The learned Judge dismissed the appeal and in dealing with the point I have just referred to, he pointed out that it should not succeed because for obvious reasons it had not been taken before the learned District Judge, and, therefore, the appellant ought not to be allowed to revive it in appeal before him. With that part of the learned Judge's judgment I entirely concur and that in itself would be sufficient to lead us to dismiss this appeal. I further think, however, that although the doctrine laid down in section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code relating to res judicata may be applied, and rightly applied, in certain proceedings in execution arising out of the same judgment so as to put an end to litigation and may possibly be applied in certain cases where separate suits have been brought raising points which have already been decided in execution cases fought between the same parties, still I do not think that the special rules laid down in the Explanations to that section which go beyond the ordinary doctrine of res judicata ought to be applied generally in execution cases. The High Court at Allahabad in the case of Kalyan Singh v. Jagan Prasad (1) held that "if a judgment-debtor does not take exception to the amount erroneously set forth in an application for the execution of a decree as being the sum due, he is not prevented by the principle of res judicata from doing so on a subsequent application for the execution of the same decree". It was argued in that case that, by reason of Explanation 4 to section 11 of the Code, the judgment-debtor not having taken the point in the first application for execution of his decree was barred from taking the point in a subsequent application. The Court who delivered the judgment in that case, consisting of the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Rafiqur, refused to accept this contention and refused to apply the principle laid down in Explanation 4 to section 11 to cases of that nature. Again, in Madras in the case of Nityananda Gantayet v. Gajapathi Vasudeva Devu (2) the Court refused to apply the law of res judicata as laid down in Explanation 3 of section 13 of the Code of 1882, which is now Explanation 5 of the present Code, to a case where the plaintiff had been awarded by a decree possession of land together with mesne profits and applied in execution for delivery of the land and for some profits but was not awarded mesne profits by the executing Court. In fact, that Court made no reference to it in its decision and when the plaintiffs subsequently applied for mesne profits they were met with the objection arising under what is now Explanation 5 of section 11, and the Madras High Court refused to entertain the argument based upon that Explanation in such a case. I see no reason to differ from the principles laid down in those cases and, therefore, on this ground also I think that this appeal should be dismissed. The respondents are entitled to their costs of this appeal.

If it has been proved that a sale by a widow having a limited interest has benefited the estate by the payment of debts which were binding on it, although the amount paid may not amount to the whole of the consideration money received for the property sold, the Court, when it sets aside the sale, will direct payment to the alienee to the extent of the benefit received by the estate, and it must follow that if the consideration money for the sale is found intact at the death of the widow, the estate has benefited to that extent, so that if the reversioner after the widow's death wishes to have the sale by her set aside, he can only succeed if he restores the money.

Second appeal from the decision of the Joint Judge, Ahmedabad, in Appeal No. 126 of 1917, modifying a decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Umreth, in Civil Suit No. 128 of 1915.

Mr. M. K. Mehta, for the Appellants.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, for Respondent No. 6.

JUDGMENT.—There is only one question which arises in these two second appeals with regard to the direction of the Court below that defendant No. 4 should receive back the total sale price of Rs. 793 which he paid for the land which Sarasvatibai sold to him without any legal necessity, as has now been proved. It has been found as a fact that the whole of this amount of Rs. 799 came to the hands of the executors of Sarasvatibai after her death.

The appellants contend that as the sale must be set aside as having been made by the widow without legal necessity, the defendant is bound to hand back the property, while they can retain the purchase price as belonging to the widow's estate. There does not seem to be any direct authority on this question, although, we think, the principles of equity provide the only answer the Court should give. If it has been proved that a sale by a widow having a limited interest has benefited the estate by the payment of debts which were binding on it, although the amount paid may not amount to the whole of the consideration money received for the property sold, the Court, when it sets aside the sale, will direct payment to the alienee to the extent of the benefit received by the estate, and it must follow that if the consideration money for the sale is found intact at the death of the widow, the estate has benefited to that extent, so that if the reversioner after the widow's death wishes to have the sale by her set aside, he can only succeed if he restores the money. It would be different if it could not be proved that the purchase money was still intact in the estate. But in this case we are bound by the finding of fact by both the Courts below, that the purchase money came to the hands of the executors. Therefore, it was only right that the fourth defendant, having been directed to hand back the property which he purchased, should be entitled to the price he paid for it. Both the appeals fail and must be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

PIGGOTT, J.—It is impossible to understand the questions raised by this first appeal without going back to the facts of a previous litigation, determined by a decree of this Court, dated the 20th of March 1914, and a subsequent compromise. One Ghazanfar Husain Khan, a Shia gentleman residing at Jaunpur, executed, shortly before his death, a deed of endowment by which he constituted a trust for public purposes of a charitable and religious nature and appointed three trustees for the management of the said trust. The heirs-at-law of the deceased founder of the trust brought a suit against the trustees contesting the validity of the entire transaction. The eventual result was that the deed of endowment was declared invalid and the heirs-at-law of Ghazanfar Husain Khan were found to be the rightful owners as regards the larger part of the property affected by the deed of endowment but the deed was affirmed in respect of a certain portion of the property affected. The trustees filed an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council and obtained from this Court the necessary certificate entitling them to maintain such an appeal. While this was pending, however, a compromise was effected between the parties to that litigation, that is to say, between the heirs-at-law of Ghazanfar Husain Khan on the one side, and the trustees under the deed of endowment on the other. Virtually, the parties agreed to abide by the division of the disputed property effected by the decree of this Court. There remained, however, for determination the question of the liability of the trustees for costs of the litigation and also for the mesne profits claimed by the plaintiffs in that suit. The trustees were of opinion that they could not meet these claims and could not save any portion of the trust property without making alienations of the said property. They disposed of the matter by selling a small portion of the trust property to the plaintiffs and mortgaging the remainder with possession for a certain number of years. The net result of the transaction was that the whole of the property covered by the trust passed for the time being into the hands of the heirs-at-law of Ghazanfar Husain Khan, but subject to this condition that, after the stipulated period the bulk of the property which (according to the decision of this Court) had been made the subject-matter of a valid endowment, returned to the trustees to be used for the purposes set forth in the deed of trust. This litigation having been thus concluded, the present suit was instituted on the 20th of September 1917. The plaintiffs are two gentlemen belonging to the Shia community residing at Jaunpur. They claimed to sue as beneficiaries under the trust, in a representative capacity, on behalf of all the other members of their community in that place who were equally interested with themselves in the administration of the trust. They have not obtained the permission of the Advocate-General, or of the proper officer appointed in this behalf in these provinces, to entitle them to maintain their suit under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure; but they have obtained from the Trial Court permission under Order I, rule 8, of the Civil Procedure Code, to maintain their suit in a representative capacity. The allegations made in the plaint are of a most serious character and the object of the suit, on the very face of it, was to reverse the whole result of the previous litigation and, if possible, to recover for the purposes of the public trust in question the whole of the property covered by Ghazanfar Husain Khan's original deed of endowment. According to these plaintiffs, the trustees appointed by that deed of endowment had been guilty of a series of breaches of trust, all the more objectionable in character because they had been cloaked by a pretence of honest zeal in the support of the endowment. It was suggested that the trustees were from the first in collusion with the heirs of Ghazanfar Hussain Khan; that they did not honestly defend the suit brought by the said heir, either in the Trial Court or in this Court; that the compromise which they eventually entered into was a dishonest one and that, in any case, the alienations effected by sale and mortgage in accordance with the terms of that compromise were outside the power of the trustees and the making of them constituted a breach of trust on the part of the latter. The Trial Court has, in effect, held that the plaintiffs are not entitled to re-open any of the questions determined by this Court's decree of the 20th of March 1914 and that there seems no reason for re-opening those questions. It has come to a clear finding in favour of the trustees, that they were not in collusion with the plaintiffs in that litigation and that they defended the interests of the trust zealously and to the best of their ability. As regards the compromise, however, the Court below has come to the conclusion that the trustees could not lawfully alienate by sale or by mortgage any portion of the trust property without the sanction of some competent Court of civil jurisdiction, such sanction being necessary to represent and replace the permission of the Qazi required by the ancient principles of Muhammadan Law. It has further been found that none of the orders passed by this Court, either the decree itself or the subsequent order upon the compromise, amounts to the granting of such permission. Upon the question raised, whether or not it was competent for himself to grant such permission retrospectively, the learned Subordinate Judge has doubted whether he could give such retrospective sanction, but has held that on the materials before him he could find no adequate grounds for doing so. The result has been that the greater portion of the plaintiffs' suit has been dismissed, but that they have been granted a decree which simply declares that the alienations of the trust property effected by way of sale and mortgage by two documents dated June the 14th 1915, executed in accordance with the compromise, are invalid. We have before us a petition of appeal by the plaintiffs, in which they challenge that portion of the decree of the Trial Court which has gone against them upon a great variety of grounds. It would seem, however, that these plaintiffs have found themselves in difficulties over the maintenance of this litigation upon which they had seen fit to enter ostensibly for the benefit of the entire community of which they are members. They have not found it possible to take the steps required by the rules of this Court in order to enable their appeal to be effectively prosecuted. They have not caused to be translated or printed any papers or documents on the record for the information of this Court and for the use of their Counsel. The result is, that the learned Counsel representing the plaintiffs-appellants has very properly and very candidly admitted to us to day that he is not in a position to argue this appeal because his clients have not furnished him with proper materials for doing so. We do not think it is necessary for us to go into this matter further. We have read so much of the judgment of the Trial Court as involves questions of law which are challenged in the plaintiffs' memorandum of appeal and on the materials before us it is quite sufficient for us to say that we find no valid reason for interfering with the decree of the Court below on any of the grounds taken by the plaintiffs.

We have, however, before us a petition of cross-objections filed by the defendants trustees under O. XLI, r. 22 of the Code of Civil Procedure which contains one or two pleas going to the very root of this litigation. We have had the advantage of hearing these pleas satisfactorily argued on both sides and we have come to the conclusion that they must prevail and that the suit before us ought to have been entirely dismissed. The actual result of that suit as it stands is obviously most unsatisfactory. A certain deed of sale and a certain mortgage have been declared invalid. The trustees themselves, as parties to the deed of compromise, are probably not entitled to take any action upon this declaration in the way of challenging the right of the vendee or of the mortgagee in possession, even supposing that they feel inclined to do so. There is nothing in the decree of the Court below which lays the trustees defendants under any legal obligation to take any action of any sort or kind, and there is no operative portion of the decree of which the successful plaintiffs can take out execution in order to obtain any result whatsoever. The consequence is that we have before us a decree which, without some further litigation, can lead to no practical consequences. Now, this result has really been brought about by the frame of the plaint and the nature of the reliefs therein claimed. Those reliefs have obviously been framed in order to avoid the operation of section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure. We entertain the gravest doubts whether a suit of this nature is maintainable at all, by two persons in the position of these plaintiffs, without previous action taken under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The proper view of that section seems to be that it is intended to be an exhaustive statement of the law applicable to suits based upon any alleged breach of any express or constructive trust, created for public purposes of a charitable or religious nature. It must be remembered that sub-section 2 of this section contains a provision introduced for the first time into the Civil Procedure Code of 1908. The express prohibition (subject only to a proviso which does not concern us here) of any suit claiming any of the reliefs specified in sub-section (1) in respect of any such trust therein referred to, except in conformity with the provisions of that sub-section was not to be found in the Code of Civil Procedure as it stood before the year 1908. It may be contended that it is perfectly possible, as the plaintiffs in the present case have attempted, to evade the provisions of section 92, sub-section (1), by judiciously framing the reliefs sought so as to avoid the operation of that sub-section. Even if the point is to be looked at from a purely technical point of view, it would seem that some effect must be given to the words of clause (h) of the sub-section, which refer to the granting of such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require. It seems very difficult to hold that the relief by way of declaration regarding the invalidity of the sale and mortgage in question in this suit could not have been brought within the provisions of section 92, sub-section (1), clause (h) above referred to. We are content, however, to dispose of the matter by carrying the question one step further. In their effort to avoid the provisions of sub-section (1) the plaintiffs have sought relief by way of a series of declarations. The declarations sought by them, and certainly the only declarations actually decreed in their favour, are, as we have already pointed out, of such a nature that they are not calculated to produce any effect whatsoever unless it be as a stepping stone to a fresh litigation. The position thus arrived at is contrary to the general principles governing the proper exercise of the discretion of a Court in the matter of granting relief by way of declaration, even if it is not covered by the express provisions of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. It is idle to contend that in the present suit the plaintiffs, assuming their allegations of fact to be true, could not have obtained effective relief by asking for the removal of these trustees, the appointment of other trustees, the vesting of the trust property in the new trustees so appointed, the taking of accounts from the defaulting trustees and perhaps the settling of a scheme for the management of the trust. Of course, any trustees guilty of such gross breaches of trust as those alleged in this plaint would presumably be liable to be removed; but even if it was considered, after enquiry, desirable that the present trustees should continue in management of the trust property, the Court would have been entitled upon a suit framed under section 92, sub-section (1), not merely to declare these transfers void, but to replace the trustees in possession of the property. If it be suggested on behalf of the plaintiffs that they are not affected by the proviso to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act because they could not, in the suit as brought, seek further relief than a mere declaration, being forbidden to do so by the provisions of section 92, sub-section (1) of the Civil Procedure Code, it seems a sufficient answer to say that they ought to have availed themselves of those provisions and brought their suit in conformity with the same. For these reasons we are satisfied that the cross-objections must prevail. We dismiss the plaintiffs' appeal and, on the objections of the transferee defendants, we set aside the decree of the Trial Court and dismiss this suit altogether, with costs against the plaintiff throughout, including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

WALSH, J.—I agree, and I agree in substance with the learned Judge's decision. He is probably right in the conclusions which he has come to with regard to Muhammadan Law. Where he seems to have gone wrong is just this. The plaintiffs were in a dilemma. If the act of the trustees in entering into the compromise was a breach of trust because it offended against the general principle of the Muhammadan Law, which is the only reason which the learned Judge gives, he having found all the other allegations in their favour, the plaintiffs could not sue in respect of it except under section 92. If, on the other hand, it was not a breach of trust, the plaintiffs had no cause of action in respect of the compromise, so that, in either event, the plaintiffs were bound to fail.

I agree that suits with regard to trusts relating to public charities must either be brought under section 92 or they cannot be brought at all. The Court has to look at the substance and not the form. It is easy to see that the relief in this case was carefully framed so as not to come within the reliefs specified in section 92 and, obviously, a Court would not lend itself to a dodge of this kind adopted by a litigant for the purpose of evading ancient and salutary provisions. As far as I can see, the main difficulty about section 92 is to bring certain classes of claims, which persons are forced to make, within its terms. A person who wants to keep out of it is clearly acting mala fide.

Babu Monmathonath Ganguly, for the Appellants.—The present proceedings are barred by res judicata by reason of the fact that the respondent did not proceed with his objection case which he had previously filed. Refers to Mungul Pershad v. Grija Kant (1). Then again the period of limitation for an application like the present being 30 days under Article 165 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act, the proceedings are clearly barred by limitation. See Ratnam Aiyar v. Krishna Dass (2). And lastly, my grievance is that the Executing Court has wrongly altered the decree. As an Executing Court it had no power to amend the decree. If any amendment was necessary, it could only be done by the Court which passed the decree.

Dr. Jadunath Kanailal, for the Respondent, was not called upon to reply.

G. I. P. RY. CO. v. JITAN RAM-NIRMAL RAM.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendants against a decision of the Additional District Judge affirming a decision of the Subordinate Judge. The respondent in the present appeal, sometime ago, instituted a suit for declaration of his title to, and for possession of, the land included in the present execution case. Now the suit was compromised and a decree was passed and the present appellants took out execution in respect of that decree and certain plots were seized. The present respondent made an objection but on the 11th December 1915 when the objection was brought on, apparently what happened was that the present respondent said that he would not proceed with the case. We cannot find that there was any decision with regard to the objection or any actual determination on the point.

Three questions are urged before us on behalf of the appellants, firstly, it is stated that these proceedings are barred as the matter is res judicata by reason of the dismissal of the respondent's objection on the 11th December 1915. We think this point is not well-founded having regard to the fact that there was no decision with regard to the objection and no actual determination thereon. Secondly, it is urged that under the provisions of Article 165 of the Indian Limitation Act the present proceedings, which have been treated as an application under section 47, Civil Procedure Code, are barred. The learned Additional District Judge points out that Article 165 applies only to applications under O. XXI, r. 100 and with this view we agree. Then, thirdly, it is stated that the Executing Court has wrongly altered the decree with regard to a particular plot. Now it does not appear that this point was raised in the lower Appellate Court although it was raised in the First Court. But reading the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, it seems to us that all that he has done is to construe the decree and not in fact to alter it. This point accordingly fails and the appeal must stand dismissed.

A cross objection has been preferred on behalf of the respondents, and it is urged before us that the learned Additional District Judge has not considered the cross-objection that was raised by the present respondents before him. But he does refer in his judgment to the cross-objection with regard to certain strip of land. Then he goes on to say: "very little has been said against this decision on the merits. The map prepared by the Commissioner and the facts set forth by the learned Subordinate Judge seem to me to be conclusive." Now, we think that there is no doubt that in this portion of his judgment he was dealing not only with the contentions raised by the present appellants but also with the cross-objection that was raised before him by the present respondent. This being so, although he has only dismissed the appeal and has not expressly dismissed the cross-objection, we think that he did consider the cross-objection and came to a conclusion with regard to it.

The cross-objection accordingly fails.

We make no order as to costs.

A Railway Company becomes a bailee under sections 151, 152 and 161 of the Indian Contract Act of 1872 and are common carriers under the Carriers Act, and would be liable for the loss, destruction or deterioration of any consignment either wholly or in part of any goods consigned to them, and they are required to deliver the goods so consigned to the consignee in the condition in which they were consigned to them. [p. 665, col. 2.]

This ordinary liability of a Railway Company under sections 72 to 76 of the Railways Act is intended to be limited by the special agreement between the Company and the consignor embodied in Risk-Notes A and B, and the consideration for limiting the liability of the Company is the reduction of the ordinary tariff rate. [p. 665, col. 2.]

The Railway Company under the Risk-Note is, therefore, liable only for the loss of one or more complete packages due to the wilful neglect of its servants, transport agents or carriers employed by them. [p. 666, col. 1.]

The Risk-Notes A and B fulfil the conditions for rendering a contract valid, and, therefore, the parties are bound by the contract embodied in the Risk-Notes. [p. 666, col. 1.]

Application against decrees passed by the Subordinate Judge, Gaya, exercising powers of a Small Cause Court Judge.

Messrs. Kulwant Sahay and Kailaspati, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act against a decree passed by the Subordinate Judge of Gaya, exercising the powers of a Judge of the Small Cause Court, against the G. I. P. Railway Company for compensation on amount of loss of a complete package out of a consignment of 16 bales of cotton yarn under R. R. No. 6047-11, invoice No. 1 on the 5th June 1920, delivered to the Railway for carriage by goods train and to be delivered to the plaintiff at Gaya. The consignor, at the time when the goods were made over to the Railway Company at Madan Mahal, signed what is known as Risk-Notes A and B. Under the Risk-Note the consignor paid a special reduced rate instead of the ordinary tariff rate chargeable for such a consignment and in consideration thereof he agreed that the Railway Company shall be "free from all responsibility for any loss, destruction, deterioration of, or damage to, the said consignment, from any cause whatever except for the loss of a complete consignment or of one or more of complete packages forming part of a consignment, due either to the wilful neglect of Railway administration, or to theft by or to the wilful neglect of its servants, transport agents or carriers employed by them, before, during, and after transit over the said Railway or other Railway lines working in connection therewith."

The Risk-Note B further provides that the term "wilful neglect mentioned therein shall be held not to include fire, robbery from running train or any other unforeseen event or accident."

The effect of the Risk-Notes A and B is to limit the ordinary liability of the Railway Company under sections 72 to 76 of the Indian Railways Act, (Act IX of 1890). The Railway Company becomes a bailee under sections 151, 152 and 161 of the Indian Contract Act of 1872 and are common carriers under the Indian Carriers Act. To state briefly, the Railway Company would be liable for the loss, destruction or deterioration of any consignment either wholly or in part of any goods consigned to them, and they are required to deliver the goods so consigned to the consignee in the condition in which they were consigned to them. This ordinary liability under sections 72 to 76 of the Act is intended to be limited by the special agreement between the Railway Company and the consignor embodied in Risk Notes A and B, and the consideration for limiting the liability of the Railway Company is the reduction of the ordinary tariff rate. Such an agreement has been saved by clause (2) of section 72, which says:—

G. I. P. RY. CO. v. JITAN RAM NIRMAL MAL.

"An agreement purporting to limit that responsibility (of clause 1) shall, as far as limitation, be void, unless it is in writing signed by or on behalf of the person sending or delivering to the Railway administration the animals or goods, and is otherwise in a form approved by the Governor-General in Council."

The Risk Notes A and B fulfil the conditions for rendering the contract valid, and, therefore, the parties are bound by the contract embodied in the Risk-Notes. The Railway Company under the Risk-Note is, therefore, liable only for the loss of one or more complete packages due to the wilful neglect of its servants, transport agents or carriers employed by them. The plaintiff, therefore, in order to succeed in an action for compensation for the loss or deterioration of the goods consigned to the Railway must set forth all the particulars constituting the wilful neglect or default of the Railway Company, which occasioned the loss or deterioration as is required by O. VI, r. 4 of the Civil Procedure Code. The plaintiff is further required to substantiate by evidence the case of wilful neglect or default on the part of the Railway Company and its servants. In other words, the onus of proving wilful neglect and default of the Railway Company and thereby fixing the liability upon it must necessarily rest upon the plaintiff. No doubt without the Risk-Note the plaintiff need not have proved beyond the loss or deterioration of his goods and the onus would have been entirely upon the Railway Company under sections 72 to 76. This view has now been settled by a string of authorities: Shro Barat Ram v. Bengal and North Western Railway Company (1), East Indian Railway Company v. Nilkanta Roy (2), Agent, East Indian Railway Company v. Adolhya Prasad (3), East Indian Railway Company v. Nathmal Behari Lal (4), Magan Lal Purohotan v. Bombay Baroda and Central India Railway Co. (5), Bombay Baroda and Central India Railway Co. v. Ambalal Sewak Lal (6).

(6) Rail. Cas. 48.

The distinction between a case instituted under sections 72 to 76 of the Indian Railways Act, and that based upon the Risk Notes A and B has been dealt with in almost all the aforesaid authorities. In the case of East Indian Railway Company v. Kanak Eshary Haldar (7), it was held that the cases under sections 72 to 76, viz., Surendra Lal Ohaudhuri v. Secretary of State for India in Council (8), and Sesham Patter v. Moss (9), do not apply to the case arising under the Risk Notes A and B. The facts of the present case appear to be exactly similar to those in Toonya Ram v. East Indian Railway Company (10), where a decision such as that arrived at by the Small Cause Court Judge in the present case was set aside upon the ground that the onus was wrongly placed upon the Railway Company instead of upon the plaintiff. The Judge of the Small Cause Court in the present case appears to be under a misapprehension of the scope of the plaintiff's suit. In the plaint no charge was laid against the Railway Company of wilful neglect or wilful default which occasioned the loss of the package in question. Far less was there any circumstance or fact disclosed in the plaint constituting wilful neglect or default such as is enjoined by O. VI, r. 4 to be stated in a suit based upon wilful neglect or wilful default. That the Judge was under a misapprehension is also apparent from the entire absence of the words wilful neglect or wilful default in his judgment. He does not come to any finding that the loss of the plaintiff's goods was due to the negligence of the defendant Company; in fact, he does not refer to any evidence on behalf of the plaintiff bearing upon the loss of the goods due to the negligence of the defendants. He simply says—

"From the statement of Ram Prasad it appears that the loss was caused at Madan Mahal which is a station of the second defendant."

He further admits that the goods were covered by the Risk Notes A and B, but he wrongly holds that these Notes would not exonerate the Railway Company in case of a loss of a complete consignment, and this shows that the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court perhaps did not read the Risk Note (Exhibit B) which deals with the loss of a complete consignment or a complete package. He has treated the case as if it was under sections 72 to 76 of the Indian Railways Act and consequently he has fallen into the common error of throwing the onus upon the defendant instead of upon the plaintiff. This very point has been dealt with in the cases quoted above, and there is no authority to the contrary.

I wonder whether the cases cited above were placed before the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court, or his attention was ever directed to the distinction between the cases under sections 72 to 76 of the Indian Railways Act, and the Risk Notes A and B.

In terms of the order passed in the case of Toonya Ram v. East Indian Railway Company (10), I hold that the decree passed by the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court against the Railway Company is wrong in law and ought to be set aside under section 25 of the Provincial Small Causes Act.

The Rule is accordingly made absolute. In the circumstances of the case, there will be no order as to costs, each party bearing its costs throughout.

Specific performance of contract for sale—Decree—Execution—Defendant, whether can execute decree—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 2 (3), effect of.

A decree for specific performance of a contract to sell property is capable of being executed by the defendant as well as by the plaintiff, so where, in such a case the plaintiff refuses to take the sale-deed, and pay the consideration money, the defendant is entitled to come to Court and ask for the payment to him of the consideration money for the purchase on his tendering a sale-deed. [p. 668, col. 1.]

First appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge, Surat, in Darkhast No. 51 of 1921.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. B. Dave, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in Suit No. 264 of 1919 in the First Class Subordinate Judge's Court at Surat obtained a decree for specific performance of a contract to sell immoveable property. The following order was passed :

"It is ordered that defendant No. 1 do execute to the plaintiff a sale-deed in respect of the property, the subject-matter in suit, for Rs. 7,200. In default on his part, the plaintiff do apply for execution of the same. The plaintiff do deposit in the Court Rs. 6,449 being the balance of the purchase-money due at the foot of the agreement, the subject-matter of this suit. On his doing so, the plaintiff do take possession of the house, the subject-matter of this suit after the execution of the necessary sale-deed. But he is not to take possession before that. The defendant No. 2 do take Rs. 4,741-8-0 out of the said Rs. 6,449, and he do give over the balance to defendant No. 1. The documents lying in Court of defendant No. 2 (three mortgage-deeds) be given to the plaintiff. The plaintiff do also take the agreement given in writing to defendant No. 2 by the plaintiff and defendant No. 1."

The second defendant was the mortgagee from the first defendant. It also appears that the same property was the subject-matter of Civil Suit No. 217 of 1919 filed by one Ismail against the present defendants, the present plaintiff not being a party, and it appears that in that suit, after the decree in Suit No. 264 of 1919 had been passed, Ismail got a decree directing the defendants to give him possession of the suit property on Ismail's paying them Rs. 4,000.

In consequence of the decree in Suit No. 217 of 1919, the plaintiff was not anxious to get a sale deed from the defendants. The defendants were anxious to get the money which had been deposited in Court, and were perfectly willing to give the plaintiff a sale-deed. The defendants consequently took out

CHATUR BHUJ S. GOBIND RAM.

Darkhast No. 51 of 1921. The plaintiff opposed any action being taken on the Darkhast on the ground that the defendants were not decree-holders as defined in section 2 (3) of the Civil Procedure Code, so that they had no right to file the Darkhast. This contention was overruled by the First Class Subordinate Judge who directed that the plaintiff should get a sale-deed which the defendants were willing to pass, and should get possession. The defendants should get the money as decreed in their favour on passing the deed and giving possession. If the plaintiff refused to take the deed and possession within a reasonable time, defendants were to be at liberty to apply to the Court for such orders as they were entitled to.

Now, it seems to me on general principles, leaving aside altogether the dealings between the defendants and other parties, that the decree for specific performance was capable of being executed by the defendants as well as by the plaintiff. If this were not so, it would follow that if a plaintiff who has obtained a decree for specific performance, refuses to take the sale-deed and pay the consideration money, the defendant is left with no remedy whatever, while, owing to the decree passed against him, he would still be debarred from dealing in any way with the suit property. We think it is clear in such a case that a defendant would be entitled to come to Court and ask for the payment to him of the consideration money for the purchase on his tendering a sale-deed. We think the order made by the Judge in the Court below was a perfectly correct order and that the defendants came within the definition of decree-holder in section 2 (3), Civil Procedure Code. If the plaintiff in a suit for specific performance, after having obtained a decree, discovers or is apprehensive that the defendant cannot give him a good title, then it seems to me his proper course is to apply to the Court that passed the decree for a review, or, in the alternative, it may be open to him to file another suit against the defendant to set aside the previous proceedings. The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Antecedent debt—Pre-emption decree, money required for—Mortgage of ancestral property to pay off the decree—Ancestral property, liability of.

A pre-emption decree merely gives the decree-holder the option of acquiring certain property at a certain price. He is not thereby laid under any obligation to acquire that property. Consequently money required to satisfy such a decree is not an antecedent debt due from the decree-holder, and, therefore, if the decree-holder hypothecates joint ancestral property in order to take advantage of the decree, the hypothecation is not binding on the family property as having been made to pay off an antecedent debt. JUDGMENT.

PIGGOTT, J.—The plaintiffs, who are the appellants in this Court, sued Gobind Ram and his minor sons upon two mortgages of the 9th of September 1911 and the 25th of June 1912. The question in issue in the Court below and again in this Court was whether the joint ancestral property in the hands of Gobind Ram can be made liable for the whole, or for any part, of the consideration under these two deeds. The essential circumstances are as follows: On the 20th of July 1911 Gobind Ram had obtained a pre-emption decree entitling him to acquire certain property in a village called Loharra, on condition of his depositing a sum of Rs. 1,072, within a prescribed time. He borrowed this amount from the plaintiffs under the deed of September the 9th, 1911, by hypothecating under the said deed not only the share in village Loharra which he proposed to acquire, but also certain ancestral family property in his hands. He did not confine himself to raising the money necessary to acquire the property in Loharra under the pre-emption decree. He borrowed Rs. 1,246 more in order to pay off 2 promissory notes. He acknowledged the previous receipt of Rs. 82 for incidental expenses and other unspecified necessities and he was paid Rs. 1,100 in cash and on registration. The total consideration for this bond, therefore, comes to Rs. 3,500. Subsequently, there was an appeal in the pre-emption case and the result was that, in order to secure the benefit of the pre-emption decree, Gobind Ram had to pay a further sum of Rs. 750. For this purpose, he executed the second of the two mortgages in suit for a nominal consideration of Rs. 800 of which Rs. 45 was received in cash and Rs. 5 was set down as due on account of the interest on the older bond of September, the 9th, 1911. The Court below has held that the property acquired by Gobind Ram in village Loharra is liable for the full amount of the debt due under both mortgages according to their terms, and this finding is not challenged by the defendants. With regard to the remainder of the consideration, the finding is that two antecedent debts due under a promissory note, for a total sum of Rs. 1,246 were in fact paid up out of the consideration of Rs. 3,500 received under the bond of September the 9th 1911. Consequently, the whole of the property hypothecated under the deed, including the joint ancestral family property, has been made liable for this amount. To this part of the decree again, the defendants have submitted. The appeal before us is by the plaintiffs. They contend:

Firstly, that the joint ancestral family property ought to have been made liable at least for the two sums of Rs. 1,072 and Rs. 750 applied to the satisfaction of the pre-emption decree. Secondly, that the sum of Rs. 1,100 paid in cash at the registration of the older deed was, in fact, borrowed in order to pay off the antecedent unsecured debts and was applied to that purpose. On the first point, there is one authority of this Court, the case of Nathu

v. Kundan Lal (1), which appears to support the contention of the plaintiffs. We do not think that this decision can be regarded as good law in view of the subsequent pronouncements of their Lordships of the Privy Council on the question of antecedent debt to which it is not necessary for us to refer in detail. When all is said and done, the pre-emption decree merely gave Gobind Ram the option of acquiring certain property at a certain price. He was laid under no obligation to acquire the property unless he chose. It seems to us that it would be very dangerous to hold that the money required to satisfy the pre-emption decree was an antecedent debt due from Gobind Ram on the date on which each of these mortgages respectively was executed.

On the second point, we have come to the conclusion that we cannot come to a decision without exercising our power under O. XLII r. 27 of the Civil Procedure Code to call for certain further evidence. We find that, as early in the trial of the suit as the 29th of January, 1919, the plaintiffs had made a full disclosure of their case regarding this item of Rs. 1,100. They mentioned the names of four creditors of Gobind Ram for whose satisfaction they allege the money to have been borrowed and who they allege to have been actually paid off by means of this money. The case was set down for hearing on the 20th of March 1919 and, on the 7th of March the plaintiffs applied for summonses to issue against the four creditors whom they had already named to the Court. Summonses were duly served but the witnesses in question did not present themselves before the Court at the hearing of the 20th of March 1919. The plaintiffs applied for an adjournment to enable them to summon these witnesses but were refused. We cannot agree with the Court below that there were any laches on the part of the plaintiffs in this matter. So far as appears from the record, they did their best to get these witnesses before the Court. We think this is a case in which the Court from whose decree the appeal before us is preferred has refused to admit evidence which ought to have been admitted. We accordingly send down the case to the Court below with directions to afford the plaintiffs a further opportunity of requiring the attendance of those four witnesses in such manner as they may think proper. The witnesses should be directed not merely to attend the Court to give evidence, but to bring with them any documents in their possession relating to the alleged transactions between them and Gobind Ram. When this evidence has been duly recorded the record should be returned and sent down for further hearing of the appeal to this Court on the earliest convenient date. The four witnesses in question are Bal Makand, Ganga Nath, Mansukh Ram and Jai Jai Ram mentioned in the Court's rubkar of the 29th of January 1919 and summoned at the trial under the plaintiff's application of the 7th of March 1919.

WALSH, J.—I agree. With reference to the case of Nathu v. Kundan Lal (1) which has been relied on, I find a difficulty in following the reasoning contained in the judgment.

Whatever else it may be, a condition providing that the payment of a sum of money shall depend upon enforcing or taking up a pre-emption decree is certainly not a debt. The transaction, no doubt, was antecedent, but it does not result in debt. There is no person to enforce it if the pre-emptor does not choose to act upon this plea. I entirely agree with what my brother has said that the passage in the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council Sahu Rim Chandra v. Bhup Singh (2) clearly shows that the decision in Nathu v. Kundan Lal (1) ought not any longer to be followed. "In truth" runs the opinion of Lord Shaw "to give true effect to the doctrine of antecedency in time there must be also real dissociation in fact." In Nathu v. Kundan Lal (1) and in the case before us, there is not only no such dissociation in fact, but there is the most intimate association. In the previous decision of this Court, reliance was placed in the judgment upon the fact that the condition of the decree had been actually complied with and the property had been acquired as the result of the money borrowed in the mortgage transaction which was in question. That seems to me to be exactly the vice against which the Privy Council have warned the Courts of India. On the other hand, it seems to me that the decision in Kapildeo v. Thakur Prasad (3) marks very clearly the other side of the dividing line, there being in that case an obligation incurred antecedent in time and dissociated in fact, either to take up the purchase at auction or to pay compensation for default.

N. H. & E. N.

Order accordingly.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLII, as amended by High Court—Appeal, second, memorandum of, unaccompanied by First Court's judgment—Presentation, validity of.

The presentation of a memorandum of second appeal to the Lahore High Court unaccompanied by a copy of the judgment of the Court of first instance, as required by r. 2 added by the High Court to O. XLII, of the Civil Procedure Code, is not a valid presentation.

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional Judge, Kangra at Dharamgala, dated the 31st May 1920, reversing that of the Tahsildar, exercising the powers of a Munsif, 3rd Class, Hamirpur, District Kangra, dated the 25th February 1920.

Lala Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Appellants.

Lala Jagan Nath, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal from an appellate decree of the 31st May 1920, and a preliminary objection is taken for the respondents that the appeal was not properly presented till after the expiry of the period of limitation.

The appeal was first presented on the 28th September 1920, the day on which the Court opened after the vacation. It was accompanied by copies of the lower Appellate Court's judgment and decree, but not by a copy of the judgment of the First Court, and it was accordingly returned to the appellant's Counsel, who filed it again on the 17th November with a copy of the First Court's judgment attached.

On the 17th October 1919 O. XLII of the Civil Procedure Code, relating to appeals from appellate decrees, was amended by the addition of rule 2, which provides that in addition to the copies specified in O. XLI, r. 1, the memorandum of appeal shall be accompanied by a copy of the judgment of the Court of first instance (P. G. Notification No. 4685 G., dated the 17th October 1919).

It is clear that the appeal in this case was not properly presented on the 28th September, as it was not accompanied by a copy of the judgment of the Court of first instance as required by r. 2 of O. XLII, Chunilal Jethabhai v. Dahyabhai Amulakh (1), which is cited on behalf of the appellants, does not help them.

There was no valid presentation of the appeal till the 17th November when the period of limitation had expired, and no reason is shown for admitting the appeal after the expiry of that period. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

A conveyance by way of gift as between Muhammadans may be by deed of gift simply, or by deed of gift coupled with consideration. If the former, unless accompanied by delivery of the thing given, so far as it is capable of delivery, it is invalid. If the latter, actual payment of the consideration must be proved and the bona fide intention of the donor to divest himself in presenti of the property and to confer it upon the donee must also be proved. Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Bareilly.

Mr. B. E. O'Connor and Dr. Surenbro Nath Sen, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Iqbal Ahmad and Mukhtar Ahmad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal on the part of two plaintiffs whose claim for possession of certain house property in the town of Bareilly has been dismissed by both the Courts below.

The plaintiffs claim the property under a deed of sale of the year 1916 executed by two persons, Abdul Latif and Abdul Hafiz. Their case is that the said vendors obtained the property by inheritance from their mother, Zohra Bibi, who again obtained the property by gift from her mother, Musammam Sakina Bibi. The deed of gift in question is dated the 2nd of June 1900, and was executed, not by Sakina Bibi herself, but by one Saiyid Ali Husain acting as her special attorney. The plaintiffs having been put to proof of their title, a number of issues were framed, and, as a matter of fact, both parties pressed upon the Courts below alternative and inconsistent pleadings to an extent which has served to cloud the plain issues in the case and to introduce elements of confusion which have led to the delay and trouble we have found in determining the appeal. When it was first argued before us, we decided that it was not expedient that we should proceed further without obtaining clear findings upon certain questions of fact. The findings on the issues remitted by us are substantially in favour of the plaintiffs-appellants, so far as they go; but as the case has been finally argued out after the return of the remand findings, we have come to the conclusion that the appeal cannot succeed.

The first question is whether Musammam Zohra Bibi held a good title to this property under the deed of gift of the 2nd of June 1900. We may pass over a number of questions which were raised in this connection and concentrate upon what is really the essential point in the case. The deed of the 2nd of June 1900 is unquestionably what is known in the Muhammadan Law as a hiba bil ewaz, or a gift for consideration. The authority of the special attorney, who executed the same, most definitely was to convey this house property in Bareilly to

MOHAN LAL V. MAHMUD HUSAIN.

Musammat Zohra Bibi as a gift, but for a consideration, that consideration being the surrender by Zohra Bibi of certain rights. It is not important to consider what those rights precisely were. The deed itself upon its wording carries out the intention expressed in the power-of-attorney, that is to say, it purports to convey the house property in return for the surrender of Musammat Zohra Bibi's rights. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Ohaudhri Mehdi Hasan v. Muhammad Hasan (1) have clearly laid down the law upon this point. A conveyance by way of gift as between Muhammadans may be by deed of gift simply, or by deed of gift coupled with consideration. If the former, unless accompanied by delivery of the thing given, so far as it is capable of delivery, it is invalid. If the latter, actual payment of the consideration must be proved and the bona fide intention of the donor to divest himself in presenti of the property and to confer it upon the donee must also be proved. The learned District Judge has found that there is no evidence that Musammat Zohra Bibi relinquished anything, or surrendered any rights, or, in short, returned any consideration for the conveyance in her favour purporting to be effected by this document. In view of this finding it seems scarcely necessary for us to go into the alternative question whether it is proved that possession passed, except in so far as that alternative question is involved in certain further pleas taken on behalf of the appellants. In the Courts below much reliance was placed by the plaintiffs upon the contention that they and their predecessors in-title had perfected a good title by adverse possession against Sakina Bibi and her heirs for twelve years and more from the date of the deed of gift. As a matter of fact, in the month of June 1900, the property was in the possession of certain lessees and remained in the possession of those lessees until the year 1913. There is no evidence that those lessees ever paid rent to Musammat Zohra Bibi. They appear to have paid rent to Muhammad Ehsan, son of Sakina Bibi, and, therefore, brother of Zohra Bibi. It is claimed on his behalf that he received that rent as owner; while the case for the appellants, when sifted out thoroughly will be found to rest upon the contention that Muhammad Ehsan received this rent as agent for Zohra Bibi. It seems sufficient to say that there is no real foundation for this plea, either in the findings of the Courts below, or in such evidence as has been brought to our notice.

The other point taken is that the heirs of Sakina Bibi are in some way or other estopped from denying, either the validity of the transfer in Zohra Bibi's favour, or the fact of her possession. This plea is based in substance upon certain words used in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court which are quoted in the first paragraph of the memorandum of appeal before us. Undoubtedly, the expression so quoted, taken by itself, lends some colour to the appellants' contention, although it may be noted that the expression used, namely, that the "family" had allowed the sons of Zohra Bibi to hold the property in suit as exclusive owners, is a dangerously vague one. Apart from this, however, the judgment of the learned District Judge requires to be fairly considered as a whole. When so considered, it seems clear enough that the lower Appellate Court intended to find, what it has found in express words in a later paragraph of the judgment, namely, that possession never passed to Zohra Bibi and that the evidence for the plaintiffs failed to prove anything more than that in the year 1913 the sons of Zohra Bibi had somehow come to be in effective possession of the house to this extent that they executed a fresh lease in favour of another tenant and managed to put their tenant into possession. This finding is not sufficient to support either the general plea of estoppel in the form in which it is taken in the memorandum of appeal, or any more explicit plea based upon the wording of section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act No. IV of 1882.

For these reasons, we dismiss this appeal with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 142—that in case of conflict of evidence possession goes with title, when arises.

Where the plaintiff while in possession has been dispossessed and is out of possession at the date of suit the onus is upon him to prove that he was in possession and was dispossessed within 12 years of the suit. [p. 676, col. 1.]

In cases coming under Article 142, although the plaintiffs' title is proved, the onus is not upon the defendant to show that the plaintiff lost his title by adverse possession on the part of the defendant. [p. 681, col. 1.]

It is now firmly settled beyond all probability of controversy that the plaintiff in an action for ejectment must not only prove his title but also his possession within 12 years of the suit. [p. 681, col. 1.]

Mirza Shamsheer Bahadur v. Munshi Kunj Behari Lal, 12 C. W. N. 273; 3 M. L. T. 212; 7 C. L. J. 414 and Shiva Prasad Singh v. Hira Singh, 62 Ind. Cas. 1; (1921) Pat. 305; 2 P. L. T. 487; 6 P. L. J. 478; 3 U. P. L. R. (Pat.) 81, referred to.

Where definite evidence of acts of possession is forthcoming there is no difference between the proof of possession in the case of jungle, waste or uncultivated lands and in that of cultivated lands. But whereas in the case of cultivated lands the plaintiff will fail if he does not prove his possession within 12 years, in the case of jungle or waste lands, if he proves his title, there is a presumption in his favour where, having regard to the nature of the land, possession cannot be expected to be proved by acts of actual user and enjoyment. If, however, the plaintiff asserts that he exercised acts of ownership upon the land and adduces evidence in support of such assertion, he cannot, where such evidence is disbelieved by the Court, turn round and rely upon any presumption, because the case set up by him negatives the existence of circumstances which would give rise to the presumption, and is inconsistent with it [p. 683, col. 2.]

Possession is not necessarily the same thing as actual user. The nature of the possession is to be looked for, and the evidence of its continuance must depend upon the character and condition of the land in dispute. [p. 681, col. 2.]

Where the rightful owner proves possession until the land goes under water or otherwise becomes wholly incapable of enjoyment in the usual modes, he is deemed to be in constructive possession until the land emerges out of water and becomes capable of enjoyment in the usual mode and he is actually dispossessed by the defendant. No such presumption, however, arises in the case of a wrong-doer. [p. 631, col. 2.]

In cases where the land is not incapable of enjoyment, but may produce some profit, though trifling in amount and only of occasional occurrence as is often the case with jungle land, it would be unreasonable to look for the same evidence of possession as in the case of a house or a cultivated field. All that can be required is that the plaintiff should show such acts of ownership as are natural under the existing condition of the land, and, in such cases, when he has done this his possession is presumed to continue so long as the state of the land remains unchanged unless he is shown to have been dispossessed. The presumption that in case of conflict of evidence, possession goes with the title, arises only where the evidence is equally strong on both sides and cannot be called in aid to give weight to evidence unworthy of credit any more than if no evidence at all had been given. [p. 682, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Birbhum, dated the 4th of September 1919, affirming that of the Munsif, First Court at Bolpur, dated the 30th of January 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy (with him Babu Sarat Chandra Mukherjee), for the Appellants. —The plaintiffs are the appellants. The appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of possession on declaration of plaintiffs' title thereto. The plaintiffs' case is that the land in suit was a khas patit land in the possession of the plaintiffs and that the defendants had excavated a tank on the land four or five years previous to the suit claiming the land to be within his patni mehal. The defendant not having given up possession the present suit has been brought. The First Court dismissed the suit holding that neither possession nor title has been made out by us. On appeal the learned District Judge has found our title but has dismissed the suit on the ground that we could not make out our possession within 12 years. Hence the present appeal. I submit the learned Judge has erred in throwing the burden of proof on us. It has been found that we have title to the land.

The defendant should make out adverse possession in his favour. Refers to Karan Singh v. Bakar Ali Khan (1), Radha Gobind Roy v. Inglis (2), Secretary of State for India in Council v. Rajah Ohelikani Rama Rao (3), Basanta Kumar Roy v. Secretary of State for India (4), Secretary of State for India in Council v. Vira Rayan (5), Ohintamani Pramanik v. Bridget Nath Kamila (6), Babu Kasturi Singh v. Rajkumar Bobu Bissun Pragas Narain Singh (7). The observations of the Judicial Committee in Basanta Kumar Roy v. Secretary of State for India (4), Secretary of State for India in Council v. Rajah Ohelikani Rama Rao (3), Karan Singh v. Bakar Ali Khan (1), and Radha Gobind Roy v. Inglis (2) are clearly in my favour. Whatever be the nature of the land, the burden of proof of title by adverse possession is on the defendant. Refers to Shiva Prasad Singh v. Hira Singh (8), McDonnell v. McKinty (9). In the present case the lower Appellate Court ought to have found when the discontinuance took place. Discontinuance of possession means abandonment of possession followed by the possession of another. I had possession and title. Therefore presumption would be in my favour. Refers to Dharm Singh v. Hur Pershad Singh (10), Mirza Shamsheer Bahadur v. Munshi Kunj Behari Lal (11). Grazing of cattle by the villagers would be consistent with my possession. There could be no ouster by the defendant by reason of this fact. The defendant must show that he had excavated the tank more than 12 years ago. This evidence has not been disbelieved by the lower Appellate Court. Three of the twelve plots were recorded to be in the possession of my predecessor. Apart from the question of law the Court of Appeal below has disbelieved the evidence adduced by the defendant. I submit the presumption that title follows possession being in my favour I ought to succeed on that ground.

Babu Sargat Chandra Roy Chowdhury (with him Babu Hemendra Nath Sen), for the Respondents.—As regards the question of limitation the plaintiff in his plaint stated that the tenants used to graze cattle on the land. He further says that the defendant has dispossessed him by excavating a tank thereon four or five years prior to the suit. Article 142 of the Indian Limitation Act contemplates the possession of the plaintiff. In other words the plaintiff is bound to prove his possession within 12 years. Refers to Mohima Ohunder Moosomdar v. Moheek Ohunder Neoghi (12). There it has been held that anterior possession by the plaintiff was not enough to shift the burden of proof on to the defendant. The question in such cases would be when the plaintiff was dispossessed. In the Madras cases the plaintiff's case was that he had acquired title by adverse possession. Those cases have no bearing at all to the present case. The case in Basanta Kumar Roy v. Secretary of State for India (4) does not apply. The findings of fact in the present case are concurrent on the question of limitation and title. No doubt the land has been described as khas patit land but that means that the land has not been settled with any tenant. "Patit" does not mean waste land. They must show that the land is not capable of physical possession and is not culturable. Refers to Mahomed Ali Khan v. Khaja Abdul Gunny (13). The plaintiff must prove some act of possession if the land is capable of physical possession. Otherwise the right would be lost. The whole question depends upon the character of the land. Simple assertion of the land being khas patit would not do. He must prove that the land was not capable of physical possession or that he had done some act of possession within twelve years. The observation in Secretary of State for India in Council v. Rajah Ohelikani Rima Rao (3) has no bearing to the present case at all.

[CHATTERJEE, J.—How does the question of Article 142 or Article 144 arise in that case?]

Because there the question was whether the Crown had a subsisting title to the land. There the plaintiff's case was that the title of the Government was lost by reason of the adverse possession by plaintiff. In the present case the principle of Radha Gobind Roy v. Inglis (2) applies. Refers to Basanta Kumar Roy v. Secretary of State for India (4), Thakur Singh v. Bhojeraj Singh (14), Dharm Singh v. Hur Pershad Singh (10). It has not been found in the present case that the plaintiff was in possession through the tenants who grazed cattle on the land. On the other hand the evidence as to the grazing of cattle has been disbelieved by the Courts below concurrently. The presumption of continuance does not apply. The question raised by the other side is purely academic. Further the chittas prove that the lands were in the possession of the defendant. I submit the findings of the lower Appellate Court are conclusive on the point. The learned Judge has rightly held that the onus of proof lies on them.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy, replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of possession of the land in dispute on declaration of plaintiff's title thereto. The plaintiff and the defendant are patnidars under the owners of Touzi Nos. 92 and 14, respectively, both the Touzis being situate in the same village. The plaintiff claimed the land as appertaining to Touzi No. 92 while the defendant claimed it as part of Touzi No. 14.

The Court of first instance held that the plaintiff had failed to prove both title and possession and dismissed the suit. The learned District Judge on appeal found that plaintiff's title was proved, but that he failed to prove possession within 12 years and accordingly dismissed the suit. The plaintiff has appealed to this Court.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant, first, that the title having been found to be with the plaintiffs the onus was upon the defendant to prove that the claim was barred by limitation by reason of adverse possession on his part. Secondly, that in any case, having regard to the nature of the land, the onus should have been placed on the defendant. Thirdly, that the evidence on both sides having been found to be unsatisfactory, there was a presumption that possession follows title.

With regard to the first contention, it is to be observed that plaintiff alleged that he was in possession of the land which was khas patit, and that the defendant excavated a tank on the land in spite of the objections of the plaintiff four or five years before the suit claiming the same as part of his patti mahal, and he was accordingly dispossessed from the land. The case, therefore, clearly was one under Article 142 of the Limitation Act. It is well settled that where the plaintiff while in possession has been dispossessed and is out of possession at the date of suit the onus is upon him to prove that he was in possession and was dispossessed within 12 years of the suit.

It is contended, however, on behalf of the appellant that some of the authorities show that where plaintiff's title is proved, the onus is upon the defendant to show that the plaintiff lost that title by adverse possession for 12 years on the part of the defendant. It is necessary, therefore, to examine the authorities on the point.

One of the earliest cases is that of Maharajah Koowar Baboo Nitrasur Singh v. Baboo Nund Loll Singh (15). In that case, it appears that decrees were made in the year 1816 in suits respecting disputed boundaries of certain mouzas in two Zemindaries, and the boundary line was determined. In 1845 a suit was brought by the representatives of one of the parties in the above suits to recover land alleged to be part of one of these mouzas which land it was admitted by the plaintiff that the defendant had been in possession of since the year 1834. It was pleaded in defense, first, that the land claimed was within the boundary declared by the decrees of 1816 to belong to the defendant; and, secondly, that the plaintiff or those under whom he claimed had been out of possession for upwards of twelve years and that the cause of action was consequently barred by Regulation III of 1793, section 16. Lord Justice Turner, in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee, observed that "the issue of possession is the first to be considered in this case, and that it is wholly independent of the boundary question. The appellant is seeking to disturb the possession admitted to have existed for about eleven years of defendants, who insist on a possession of much longer duration as a statutory bar to the suit. It clearly lies on him to remove that bar by satisfactory proof that the cause of action accrued to him (for that is the way in which the Regulation puts it) on a dispossession within twelve years next before the commencement of the suit, and, therefore, that he, or some person through whom he claims, was in possession during that period. No proof of anterior title, such as would be involved in the decision of the boundary question in his favour, can relieve him from this burden, or shift it upon his adversaries by compelling them to prove the time and manner of dispossession. The lands in question may have been part of Motzih Gopaulpore, and as such may have been enjoyed by his ancestor, and yet he may have lost, by lapse of time, his right to recover them. Their Lordships, therefore, proposed to consider, in the first place, what evidence there is that the appellant, or any person through whom he claims, was in possession of the lands in question at any time within twelve years next before the commencement of the suit."

In 1869, in the case of Rajah Sahib Ferhlaad Sein v. Maharaja Rajender Kishore Sing (16), the Judicial Committee affirmed the same principle. Their Lordships observed: "The appellant comes into Court admitting upon the face of his plaint that he is out of possession, and has been so for more than ten years: and the date which he assigns to his dispossession is the 20th of March 1851. Upon the issue as settled by the Court it lay upon him to establish that he was in possession up to that date, or, failing in that, that the date at which he or some former proprietor of Ramnuggur was last in possession is consistent with a right to institute this suit. Act No. VIII of 1859, section 32, shows, that the plaintiff is bound to satisfy the Court that his right of action is not barred by lapse of time."

In 1870, again, in the case of Beer Chunder Jobra v. Deputy Collector of Bhulloah (17) where the plaintiff brought a suit to recover immoveable property which was in the possession of the defendant since 1845 and at the time of the institution of the suit, it was held by their Lordships that, "it was essential for the appellant (the plaintiff in that case) to have proved two things—first, possession within twelve years before his suit, and, secondly, title to possession.....the onus of proof rests with the appellant."

The question again came up before the Judicial Committee in 1883 in the case of Mohima Chunder Mozoomdar v. Mohesh Chunder Neoghi (12).

There the plaintiffs had shown that they formerly were proprietors of the lands to which they alleged title, and from which they claimed to oust the defendants but they had been dispossessed or their possession had been discontinued some years before the suit was brought by them, and the land was occupied by the defendants who denied their title. The plaintiffs were found to be the rightful owners, but their Lordships observed that the question for decision was not "whether or not the title of the defendants was created just after the disturbance or otherwise, but when were the plaintiffs dispossessed or when did they discontinue possession....." "This is in reality what in England would be called an action for ejectment, and in all actions for ejectment where the defendants are admittedly in possession, and a fortiori where, as in this particular case, they had been in possession for a great number of years, and under a claim of title, it lies upon the plaintiff to prove his own title. The plaintiff must recover by the strength of his own title, and it is the opinion of their Lordships that, in this case, the onus is thrown upon the plaintiffs to prove their possession prior to the time when they were admittedly dispossessed, and at some time within 12 years before the commencement of the suit, namely, for the two or three years prior to the year 1875, or 1874, and that it does not lie upon the defendants to show that in fact the plaintiffs were so dispossessed." In the next year (1889) in the case of Mahammud Amanulla Khan v. Badan Singh (18), the Judicial Committee again held that if a claim comes within the terms of Article 142 adverse possession is not required to be proved in order to maintain a defense.

Lastly, in 1906 under Act XV of 1877 in the case of Rani Hemanta Kumari Debi v. Maharaja Jagadindra Nath Roy Bahadur (19) the Judicial Committee affirmed the same principle: Their Lordships observed: "The difference between the admitted possession and the period of limitation being so narrow (one year) the question of onus is important; and their Lordships adhere to the principle stated in the Privy Council case cited by the learned Judge in the High Court [Mohima Chunder Mozoomdar v. Mohesh Chunder Neoghi (12)] and hold that it is for the appellant, as plaintiff in a suit for ejectment, to prove possession prior to the dispossession which she alleges."

In all these cases it was clearly held that where the plaintiff has been dispossessed and the suit is one for recovery of possession the onus is upon the plaintiff to prove that he was in possession within 12 years of the suit.

It is contended, however, that a different principle has been laid down in some other cases, viz., Karan Singh v. Bakar Ali Khan (1), Radha Gobind Roy v. Inglis (2), Secretary of State for India in Council v. Raja Chetikan Ram Rao (3), Basanta Kumar Roy v. Secretary of State for India (4).

In Karan Singh v. Bakar Ali Khan (1) their Lordships in dealing with the contention that the plaintiff must prove that he was in possession within twelve years held that it was not correct under the Limitation Act IX of 1871. Their Lordships observed: "It would have been correct under the old law, under which the suit must have been brought within twelve years from the time of the cause of action, but under the present law it may be brought within twelve years from the time when the possession of the defendant, or of some person through whom he claims, became adverse to the plaintiff."

It was a case under Article 145 of Act IX of 1871 (see page 6 of the report) corresponding to Article 144 of Act XV of 1877 and Act IX of 1908, and there can be no doubt that the suit was dealt with by the Judicial Committee as coming under Article 145 of Act IX of 1871 because that Article deals with cases where the limitation runs from the date when the possession of the defendant became adverse to the plaintiff. Under Act XIV of 1859, the period of limitation for suits for the recovery of immovable property or of any interest in immovable property to which no other provision of the Act applied (there were no other provisions in the Act similar to those of Articles 143 or 145 of Act IX of 1871), was twelve years from the time when the cause of action arose. So that all suits, whether they came under Article 143 or 145 of Act IX of 1871, had to be brought under section 15 of Act XIV of 1859 within twelve years from the time when the cause of action arose. Under Act IX of 1871, for the first time, a distinction was drawn between, (1) suits for possession when the plaintiff while in possession has been dispossessed or has discontinued the possession, and (2) suits for possession of immovable property or any interest therein not otherwise provided for. In the first class of cases, the starting point was the date of the dispossession or discontinuance, and came under Article 143 (Article 142 of Act XV of 1877 and Act IX of 1908). In the second class of cases the starting point was the date when the possession of the defendant became adverse to the plaintiff (Article 145 of Act IX of 1871 and Article 144 of Act XV of 1877 and Act IX of 1908). Karan Singh's case (1) fell under Article 145 of Act IX of 1871, and the Judicial Committee was merely referring to the change in the law stated above. Their Lordships did not and could not have laid down that the law of limitation had been in any way changed so far as suits coming under Article 143 of Act IX of 1871 (Article 142 of the present Act) were concerned, as the reference to "twelve years from the time when the possession of the defendant became adverse to the plaintiff" unmistakably shows that their Lordships were dealing with cases under Article 144 (Article 145 of Act IX of 1871). It is unnecessary to further discuss this matter which is clear enough, but we may refer to the Full Bench decision in Mahomed Ali Khan v. Khaja Abdul Gunny (13), which was a case under Act IX of 1871, and where it was stated: "There is no doubt as to the general rule, that under the former Limitation Act the cause of action, and under the present law the event from which limitation is declared to run, must have occurred within the prescribed period, and that it lies on the plaintiff to show this. Accordingly, where the suit is for possession, and the cause of action is dispossession, it has more than once been held by the Privy Council that the plaintiff is bound to prove possession and dispossession within twelve years."

The case of Radha Gobind Roy v. Inglis (2) was also considered by the Full Bench in Mahomed Ali Khan's case (13). Wilson, J., observed: "We do not understand that case as establishing the broad proposition contained in the head-note, which would be in conflict with the earlier decisions of the same Tribunal."

In that case, their Lordships having disposed of the other questions which were raised say: "The question remains whether the disputed land had or had not been occupied by the defendant for twelve years before the suit was instituted, so as to give him a title against the plaintiff by the operation of the Statute of Limitation. On this question, undoubtedly the issue is on the defendant. The plaintiff has proved his title; the defendant must prove that the plaintiff has lost it by reason of his, the defendant's adverse possession." But the land in dispute in that case had formed part of the bed of a beel or lake; the title to the beel and its bed was found to be in the plaintiff, and he had been in possession so long as the land was covered with water. The beel gradually dried up, and the defendant occupied the land so formed. There was a controversy as to when the land dried up and the defendant occupied the land. It was found by the High Court that the land had been formed quite recently within six or seven years or at all events within less than twelve years before the suit and their Lordships held that, "if the High Court are right in that finding, of course the Statute cannot apply." The constructive possession of the rightful owner continued till within 12 years of the suit, and the defendant relied upon adverse possession for more than 12 years. The observations with regard to the onus of proof quoted above must be taken with the facts of the case.

Much reliance is placed upon the case of Secretary of State for India in Council v. Rajah Chelikkani Rama Rao (3). The disputed lands in that case formed part of islands which had formed in the bed of the sea within the territorial limits, and which, therefore, belonged to the Crown, and the lands were constituted a Reserved Forest under the Madras Forest Act (Madras Act V of 1882). The respondents claimed proprietary rights in the said lands, which were disallowed by the District Judge in a proceeding under the Act, holding that the title being originally in the Crown, the onus was upon the claimants to prove adverse possession for sixty years, and that they had failed to do so. The High Court was of opinion that it rested upon the Crown to show that the possession became adverse to the Crown within sixty years prior to the Notification under which the land was constituted a Reserved Forest. The Judicial Committee held that it was for the claimants to prove that they or their predecessors-in-title had been in adverse possession for sixty years.

The principle laid down is consistent with that laid down by the Judicial Committee in previous cases. The claimants in that case were in the position of plaintiffs, and they claimed a title to the property by adverse possession. Their Lordships observed: "In their Lordships' opinion objectors to afforestation thus preferring claims are in law in the same position as persons bringing a suit in an ordinary Court of justice for a declaration of right. To such a situation in the one case, as in the other, their Lordships think that Article 144 of the Limitation Act XV of 1877 (Schedule II) applies, the period of twelve years thereunder being, however, extended to a period of sixty years by Article 149. In an ordinary suit for a declaration it cannot be doubted that the onus of establishing possession for the requisite period would rest upon the plaintiff. In their Lordships' opinion the situation of a claimant under afforestation proceedings is the same upon this point. Reference may be made to Radha Gobind Roy v. Inglis

(2) decided by this Board." Referring to the view taken by the High Court that the Crown had to prove that it has a subsisting title by showing that the possession of the claimants commenced or became adverse within the period of limitation their Lordships observed: "Nothing is better settled than that the onus of establishing property by reason of possession for a certain requisite period lies upon the person asserting such possession. It is too late in the day to suggest the contrary of this proposition. If it were not correct it would be open to the possessor for a year or a day to say, 'I am here; be your title to the property ever so good, you cannot turn me out until you have demonstrated that the possession of myself and my predecessors was not long enough to fulfil all the legal conditions.' Such a singular doctrine can be well illustrated by the case of India, in which the right of the Crown to vast tracts of territory, including not only islands arising from the sea, but great spaces of jungle lands, necessarily not under the close supervision of Government officers, would disappear, because there would be no evidence available to establish the state of possession for sixty years past. It would be contrary to all legal principles thus to permit the squatter to put the owner of the fundamental right to a negative proof upon the point of possession."

"In so far as this negatives the duty resting upon the claimants to establish affirmatively their and their predecessors' possession for sixty years, their Lordships' opinion is, as stated, that this is erroneous. But, secondly, with reference to the 'subsisting title,' it appears to their Lordships that nothing further is needed than the acknowledgment of the undisputed fact that these islands formed in the sea belonged to the Crown. That fact is fundamental: until adverse possession against the Crown is complete, that is to say, is for the period of sixty years that fundamental fact remains, and that fact forms 'subsisting title.' And, thirdly, it is no part of the obligation of the Crown to fortify its own fundamental right by any inquiry into possession or the acceptance of any onus on that subject."

RAKHAL CHANDRA GHOSE v. DURGA DAS.

The title of the Crown to the land could not be disputed; the claimants set up a title by adverse possession, and there can be no question that it was upon the plaintiff who wanted a declaration of his title by adverse possession to prove that he acquired such a title by adverse possession for the statutory period. That is all that was laid down in that case, and the general observations made at page 201 must be taken with the facts of that case, in which the claimants stood in the position of a plaintiff seeking a declaration of his title to the property. Such a person, on the strength of possession for a short period, cannot throw upon the opposite party the burden of proving that he, the claimant, had not been in possession for the statutory period. We do not think, therefore, that that decision laid down any principle different from that laid down previously in a series of cases by the Judicial Committee.

It is to be observed that their Lordships, while dealing with the cases coming under Article 144, referred to Radha Gobind Roy v. Inglis (2), which clearly shows that the latter case also was treated as one falling under Article 144.

The case of Basant Kumar Ray v. Secretary of State for India (4) also does not help the contention of the appellants. There the land was diluviated, and parts of the diluviated land emerged during part of the year. It was held that the annual cultivation of such parts of diluviated lands as emerge during part of the year is not a dispossession of the owner of the lands within Article 142 of the Limitation Act, and that the constructive possession of lands while diluviated being in the true owner cannot be continuous adverse possession within Article 144 while it is diluviated during part of every year, and that no rational distinction could be drawn between the case where the re-flooding was seasonal, and Secretary of State for India v. Krihnamoni Gupta (20), where the lands were submerged for several years.

Their Lordships observed: "If, as their Lordships think, no dispossession occurred, except possibly within twelve years before the commencement of this suit, Article 144 is the Article applicable, and not Article 142. It is not easy to see, in the circumstances of a case such as this, how conduct insufficient to evidence dispossession of the plaintiffs can be used to evidence adverse possession available to the defendants: but, be that as it may, in their Lordships' opinion the defendants' contention resting on Article 144 fails on another ground."

This case, therefore, is no authority for the proposition that, in a case coming under Article 142, the onus is upon the defendant. Their Lordships were dealing with the question what constitutes dispossession in cases of diluviated lands coming out of water during part of the year, and the question of adverse possession having regard to the nature of the land, and the nature of possession exercised upon the land.

None of the four cases relied upon by the appellant, therefore, is any authority for the proposition contended on behalf of the appellant.

It is to be observed that Radha Gobind Roy v. Inglis (2) was decided in 1880, and that of Karan Singh v. Bakar Ali Khan (1), in 1882. Had those cases intended to lay down any different principle, the Judicial Committee in 1888 in Mohima Okunder's case (12), without even referring to those cases, could not have laid down the principle that the plaintiff in a suit for ejectment cannot succeed without proving possession within 12 years although his title is proved. They were not referred to evidently because they were cases falling under Article 144. Mohima Okunder's case (12), was expressly followed 18 years afterwards (in 1906) by their Lordships in Rani Hemanta Kumari Debi's case (19).

We do not think it reasonable to hold that the Judicial Committee in Secretary of State for India in Council v. Ramesh Chelikan Rama Rao (3) laid down any principle at variance with that enunciated so far back as 1860 in Mharajah Koorar Baboo Nitrasur Singh's case (15), and which was followed in all cases (where the plaintiff while in possession was dispossessed) up to 1903 Rani Hemanta Kumari Debi's case (19), i.e., for nearly half a century. Even leaving aside the earlier cases which were decided under the Regulations or Act XIV of 1859, (though as stated above, there was no difference in the law so far as cases coming under Article 142 are concerned) their Lordships laid down the same principle in Mohima Chunder's case (12), Mahammad Amanulla Khan's case (13), and Rani Hemanta Kumari Debi's case (19).

There is in fact no inconsistency in the decisions of the Privy Council because the decisions relied upon by the appellant, as stated above, show that they were cases not falling under Article 142 of the Limitation Act, and the contention of the appellant is based merely upon some general observations in some of the judgments detached from the context and the facts of the cases. So far as this Court is concerned, the principle laid down by the earlier Privy Council decisions, and in Mohima Chunder Mozoomdar v. Mohesh Chunder Neoghi (12) and Rani Hemanta Kumari Debi's case (19), and the Full Bench decision in Mahomed Ali Khan's case (13), has always been taken as settled law on the point, and we need only refer to the case of Mirza Shamsheer Bahadur v. Munshi Kunj Behari Lal (11) where Mookerjee and Casperes, JJ., observed: "It is now firmly settled beyond all probability of controversy, that the plaintiff in an action for ejectment must not only prove his title but also his possession within 12 years of the suit." A recent full Bench of the Patna High Court also, upon a review of the decisions on the point has taken the same view. See Shiva Prasad Singh v. Hira Singh (8).

We are accordingly of opinion that, in cases coming under Article 142, although the plaintiff's title is proved, the onus is not upon the defendant to show that the plaintiff lost his title by adverse possession on the part of the defendant.

The next question is, whether the onus of proof is upon the defendant having regard to the nature of the land, and this brings us to the question as to what the plaintiff has to prove in order to show that he was in possession within 12 years of the suit. As pointed out by Wilson, J., in the judgment of the Full Bench in Mahomed Ali Khan's case (13), possession is not necessarily the same thing as actual user. The nature of the possession is to be looked for, and the evidence of its continuance must depend upon the character and condition of the land in dispute. Where the land is incapable of actual enjoyment, as in the case of diluvion by a river, if the plaintiff shows his possession down to the time of the diluvion, his possession is presumed to continue so long as the lands continue to be submerged. The cases of Kally Churn Sahoo v. Secretary of State for India (21), [overruled by Secretary of State for India v. Krishnamoni Gupta (20) in so far as it held that there was constructive possession in favour of a wrong-doer], Mano Mohun Ghose v. Mothura Mohun Roy (22) Radha Gobind Roy v. Inglis (2), Rajkumar Roy v. Gobind Chunder Roy (23) (where, however, possession of the plaintiff was held to be proved) Secretary of State for India v. Krishnamoni Gupta (20) and Basanta Kumar Roy v. Secretary of State for India (4) illustrate the principle that where the rightful owner proves possession until the land goes under water or otherwise becomes wholly incapable of enjoyment in the usual modes, he is deemed to be in constructive possession until the land emerges out of water and becomes capable of enjoyment in the usual mode and he is actually dispossessed by the defendant. No such presumption, however, arises in the case of a wrong-doer.

In Basanta Kumar Roy v. Secretary of State for India (4) the Judicial Committee observed: "The Limitation Act of 1877 does not define the term 'dispossession', but its meaning is well settled. A man may cease to use his land because he cannot use it, since it is under water. He does not thereby discontinue his possession: constructively it continues, until he is dispossessed; and, upon the cessation of the dispossession before the lapse of the statutory period, constructively it revives. There can be no discontinuance by absence of use and enjoyment, when the land is not capable of use and enjoyment." Per Cotton, L. J., in Leigh v. Jack (24). It seems to follow that there can be no continuance of adverse possession, when the land is not capable of use and enjoyment, so long as such adverse possession must rest on de facto use and occupation. When sufficient time has elapsed to extinguish the old title and start a new one, the new owner's possession, of course, continues until there is fresh dispossession, and revives as it ceases."

In cases where the land is not incapable of enjoyment, but may produce some profit, though trifling in amount and only of occasional occurrence, as is often the case with jungle land, it would be unreasonable to look for the same evidence of possession as in the case of a house or a cultivated field. All that can be required is that the plaintiff should show such acts of ownership as are natural under the existing condition of the land, and in such cases, when he has done this his possession is presumed to continue so long as the state of the land remains unchanged unless he is shown to have been dispossessed. [See Mahomed Ali Khan v. Khaja Abdul Gunny (13)]. In Watson & Co. v. Government (25) Sir Barnes Peacock, O. J., referred to the "cutting or preserving the wood, gathering wax or wild honey collecting stick lac, etc.," as evidence of possession of jungle lands. In waste lands (and jungle lands also) possession may be exercised by grazing of cattle, putting up boundary marks or fences and the like.

The cases of diluviated lands or jungle or waste lands, however, are no exception to the general rule that a plaintiff who is dispossessed and brings a suit for recovery of possession must show that he was in possession within 12 years of the suit. The rule of law, as pointed out by the Judicial Committee in Rani Hemanta Kumari Devi v. Maharaja Jagadindra Nath Roy Bahadur (19), is that it is for the plaintiff in a suit for ejection to prove possession prior to the alleged dispossession, at the same time in this question of possession the initial fact of plaintiff's title comes to his aid with greater or less force according to the circumstances established in evidence.

Bearing the above principles in mind, we have to see what the plaintiff has proved in the present case. The land was asserted by the plaintiff to be khas patit formerly but it was admitted in the plaint that the defendant had excavated a tank on the land 4 or 5 years before the suit. The Court of first instance found that the tank was excavated more than 12 years before the suit. Upon that finding there can, of course, be no question of any presumption in favour of the plaintiff because he was ousted from possession 12 years before the suit by the excavation of the tank. The Court of first instance further found that, before the excavation of the tank, the land was under cultivation of certain persons (Hirina and Jala Majhis) with whom the land was exchanged by the defendant. Had these findings been affirmed by the Court of Appeal below, no question of onus of proof or any presumption could arise. The learned District Judge, however, while agreeing with the Munsif that the suit was barred by limitation, observes that the best evidence regarding excavation of the tank had not been produced by the defendant. It is not clear what he meant, because the excavation of the tank 4 or 5 years before the suit was admitted by the plaintiff in his plaint, and spoken to by his own witnesses. Probably, he meant that the excavation of the tank earlier, and the exchange of land, as set up by the defendant, was not satisfactorily proved, and that the evidence of possession on both sides prior to the excavation of the tank was unsatisfactory. It is contended on behalf of the appellant that in this conflict of evidence the Court ought to have presumed that possession went with the title. That presumption, however, can arise only where the evidence is equally strong on both sides. In Runjeet Ram Panday v. Goburdhun Ram Panday (26) the Judicial Committee observed: "Now the ordinary presumption would be that possession went with the title. That presumption cannot, of course, be of any avail in the presence of clear evidence to the contrary; but where there is strong evidence of possession, as there is here, on the part of the respondents,—opposed by evidence, apparently strong also on the part of the appellant,—their Lordships think that, in estimating the weight due to the evidence on both sides, the presumption may, under the peculiar circumstances of this case, be regarded; and that, with the aid of it, there is stronger probability that the respondents' case is true than that of the appellant." See also Dharm Singh v. Hur Pershad Singh (10), Babu Kasturi Singh v. Rajkumar Babu Bisum Pragas Narain Singh (7), Mirza Shamsheer Bahadur v. Munshi Kuni Behari Lal (11), (the word 'unsatisfactory' at page 280* is evidently a slip). The principle does not apply to a case where the evidence is equally unworthy of reliance on both sides, see Thakur Singh v. Bhogeraj Singh (14), Lala Singh v. Latif Hossein (27), Fakira Lal Sahoo v. Munshi Ram Charan Lal (28), (the observations with regard to waste or jungle lands are obiter).

The question was discussed by a Full Bench of the Patna High Court in the recent case of Shiva Prasad Singh v. Hira Singh (8), where it was held (overruling two decisions of that Court) that the presumption can be raised only where the evidence is equally strong on both sides and cannot be called in aid to give weight to evidence unworthy of credit any more than if no evidence at all had been given. The subject-matter of dispute in that case was cultivated land. In the Order of Reference the learned Judge expressed the opinion that the cases of submerged or jungle or waste land, the continuance of possession may be presumed if antecedent title and possession are proved. The observation has reference to land of such a nature that possession cannot be expected to be proved by acts of actual user and enjoyment and the learned Chief Justice referred with approval to the observations of Wilsor, J., in the judgment of the Full Bench in Mahomed Ali Khan's case (13), (with regard to jungle lands) that the plaintiff should show such acts of ownership as are natural under existing conditions and that where this has been done prior possession may be presumed to have continued until the plaintiff is shown to have been dispossessed.

In the present case, the plaintiff alleged that the land was waste but it was not the case of the plaintiff that no acts of ownership could be or were exercised upon the land.

The plaintiff adduced some evidence of possession, viz., grazing of cattle upon the land prior to the excavation of the tank by the defendant. The defendant adduced evidence to show that the land was under cultivation before he excavated the tank. According to both parties, therefore, acts of possession were exercised upon the land, now where definite evidence of acts of possession is forthcoming there is no difference between the proof of possession in the case of jungle, waste or uncultivated lands and in that of cultivated lands. But whereas in the case of cultivated lands the plaintiff will fail if he does not prove his possession within 12 years; in the case of jungle or waste lands, if he proves his title, there is a presumption in his favour where having regard to the nature of the land possession cannot be expected to be proved by acts of actual user and enjoyment. If, however, the plaintiff asserts that he exercised acts of ownership upon the land and adduces evidence in support of such assertion, he cannot, where such evidence is disbelieved by the Court, turn round and rely upon any presumption, because the case set up by him negatives the existence of circumstances which would give rise to the presumption, and is inconsistent with it.

In the present case, if the plaintiff had been able to show that neither party had exercised any act of possession, or that he had exercised such acts of ownership as were natural under the existing conditions, a presumption could have been raised in his favour on the question of possession of the land prior to his disposssession by the defendant's excavation of the tank. He attempted to prove such acts of possession, but the evidence was not accepted by the Courts below.

It is contended, however, on behalf of the appellant that the learned District Judge should not have held that "plaintiff's witness No. 1's statement that cattle of all villagers grazed on the disputed land, was consistent with the plaintiff's case as much as with the defendant's," and ought to have held that plaintiff's possession prior to the excavation of the tank by the defendant was thereby proved. But in that passage the learned Judge was merely commenting upon the statements of the plaintiff's witness No. 1 and what he meant was that "villagers" who are said to have grazed their cattle on the land were tenants under the patni taluks, of both the plaintiff and the defendant, both the taluks being in the same village. He did not find that the plaintiff's tenant grazed cattle on the land, because further on referring to the plaintiff's witnesses who all deposed to the same effect, he says: "The lower Court rightly disbelieved them as they were clearly not independent and disinterested witnesses." In these circumstances, we do not think that there was any presumption in favour of the plaintiff.

The appeal accordingly fails, and must be dismissed with costs.

Promissory-note, suit on—Consideration—Onus—Defendant, when entitled to succeed without proving want of consideration.

The ordinary rule is that in a claim to recover money lent, the defendant must prove absence of consideration if that is his case. [p. 686, col. 1.]

But in a case where consideration is denied in the written statement and the plaintiff goes into the witness-box, and the result of his cross-examination is such that he fails to establish the point which he set out to make, namely, that he gave the consideration and the Court is thus satisfied that he did not give the consideration, the defendant can avail himself of that and has a right to a decree. [p. 686, col. 2; p. 686, col. 1.]

First appeal from the decision of the Second Additional Subordinate Judge, Aligarh, dated the 23 d of August 1918.

Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, Dr. S. M. Sulaiman and Mr. Panna Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—These two appeals have been heard together and can conveniently be dealt with in one judgment. The plaintiff, Kunwar Muhammad Shafi Khan, claims, in the first case Suit No. 104 of 1918, the sum of Rs. 9,000 and interest, and, in the second case, the sum of Rs. 10,000 and interest against Kunwar Muhammad Moazzam Ali Khan, a young man, who, at the time of the transactions, had recently attained his majority. According to the statement of the plaintiff he is a man of independent means and a very remote relation of the defendant. The defendant has an elder brother, by name Kunwar Muhammad Makarram Ali Khan, who is dead, and is the grandson of Nawab Sir Faiyaz Ali Khan. He is a well known Rais of Pahasu in the Bulandshahr District. There is reason to believe that the grandsons are regarded as his expectant heirs, and the present recipient of his bounty. At the time of these transactions, the Nawab was a gentleman of about 65 years of age. The story as told by the plaintiff is, that he was approached by these two young men some time very early in July of 1915, with the request that he should lend them money. He stated that he was not on good terms with the family of the defendants, that these two young men had no property, no money, no business, nothing at all except their expectations from their grandfather. He stated that he did not know why these two young men wanted to borrow this sum of Rs. 18,000 and his only reason for making the loan was relationship. The exact relationship was that the grandfather's father's sister's daughter was the mother of the plaintiff. Although, he says, that the relationship between their family and his was such, and is even now, that is, in 1919, that he could not visit their house, his heart was moved by this extremely remote relationship for the two young men who were already under the care of their grandfather, that he advanced to them on no security at all a sum of Rs. 18,000. The story does not end there, because, on the 15th December 1915, again moved by relationship, he advanced, according to his story, the further sum of Rs. 20,000 to these young men. He was unable to tell the Court what possible legitimate use the young men could either have for the Rs. 18,000 and still more for the Rs. 20,000 alleged to have been borrowed after so short an interval. The Suit No. 104 was in respect of the one-half share of the promissory-note of the 9th of July 1915, which he sought to recover from the younger brother, the elder having drifted into bankruptcy. After that suit had been decided, an application was made that Suit No. 163 of 1918 should be decided before another Judge and Mr. Lal Gopal Mukerji, who had decided the first case, very readily assented to the circumstances surrounding the second promissory-note being investigated by another Judge, and consequently that second case was decided by Mr. Jagat Narain. The plaintiff, therefore, has had two opportunities of putting forward his claim. Both Courts have decided against him and when the judgments of both Courts are looked at, although they differ in form, yet, throughout both judgments, there runs a strong disbelief in the honesty and truth of the plaintiff. We shara that disbelief in honesty and truth, and we think both of these were most regrettable transactions for a man who put himself forward as a man of position to enter into with these young men.

The matter, however, must be carefully analysed and legal grounds must be shown for our view that both of these appeals must be dismissed. The plaintiff sued on a promissory-note. The defendant denied the execution, denied receipt of the consideration, and set up a story in paragraph 7 of the written statement, which we must accept as being regarded as a defence of fraud. The plaintiff went into the witness-box. At the moment the case opened, all that the plaintiff need have done was to have proved the execution of the document sued upon, and if he had obtained an answer by the defendant to an interrogatory that the document bore the defendant's signature, then all that he need have done was to have put in the document. But it happened to be necessary in this case that the plaintiff himself should go into the witness-box to prove that he actually saw the defendant put his name to the promissory-note in suit, and having commenced the story in the examination-in-chief and proved the execution, he asserted that he gave Rs. 18,000 in currency notes to these two young men. He was cross-examined on that matter and both Judges disbelieved in the first case that he had paid Rs. 18,000 to the young men, and, in the second case that he had paid Rs. 20,000. They did not believe that he had made a true statement about that matter. He swore that Rs. 18,000 and Rs. 20,000 were paid over. They certainly had extremely good grounds on which they could have come to that conclusion, because when he was asked if he kept account-books, he said that he did, "an account-book is kept at my place but not in a regular way. In my account-book, there is an entry of Rs. 18,000 having been advanced. The daily cash balance of my treasury is entered in the accounts. The sum which was lent was included in the cash balance. I cannot produce my accounts. The reason is that, in the first place, they are not in a regular form, and, secondly, because all public and private matters are entered in them and I do not want to disclose them." If any thing more were needed to satisfy a Court as to the untruth of the statement which the plaintiff took upon himself to prove, namely, the giving of the consideration, it is to be found in the story of the money. He says that he had, in July 1918, lying in his house this large sum of money. He says that, in December, he had also Rs. 20,000 lying in his house. It was not deposited in any Bank but was simply a dead weight in the house. From the evidence, it would appear that the amount was in Rupees, because, he says: "In order to carry the money to Delhi, I got the cash changed into notes. I do not remember from whom I obtained the notes." There was some evidence given to suggest that he himself was in debt and not likely to have so large a sum as Rs. 18,000 and then Rs. 20,000 lying idle at his house, available for a transaction of this kind. We agree entirely with the views expressed in the two judgments, and, though it is undoubted that the onus does lie upon the defendant, in cases of this kind, to prove that no consideration was given, nevertheless, if a plaintiff when, as in this case, consideration was denied in the written statement, goes into the witness-box, and if the result of his examination is such that he fails to establish the point which he set out to make, namely, that he gave the consideration and the Court it thus satisfied that he did not give the consideration which he alleges, the defendant can avail himself of that and has a right to a decree. This, in any (no ?) way, trenches upon the ordinary rule that the defendant must prove absence of consideration if that is his case. The result, therefore, is that both these appeals must be dismissed with costs including fees on the higher scale.

Sonthal Parganas Settlement Regulation (III of 1872), ss. 11, 25 A, application of—Certificate of publication of Record of Rights, effect of production of—Hindu Law—Joint family estate, impartible, incidents of—Jurisdiction, meaning of—Jurisdiction, want of—Decision when null and void—Documentary evidence, production of, at first hearing—Regulation (III of 1872), object and scope of—Operation of Record of Rights as between members of joint family.

Section 11 of Regulation III of 1872 bars every suit regarding any matter decided by any Settlement Court, except such suits as are brought to contest the finding or record of the Settlement Officer, where only the rights of Zemindars and other proprietors as between themselves are concerned, provided they are brought within 3 years from the date of the publication of the Record of Rights. [p. 689, col. 1.]

The production of a certificate of publication of a Record of Rights by the defendant raises a presumption that there was publication according to the procedure laid down in Regulation III of 1872, throwing the onus on the plaintiff to establish that there was no regular publication of the Record of Rights. [p. 691, col. 2.]

Under Hindu law the impartibility of an estate does not destroy its nature as a joint family property or render it the separate property of the last holder unless there is something equivalent to partition. But at the same time the other members of the family have no such property in it to enable them to challenge an alienation made by the holder of the estate either during his lifetime or after his death. [p. 697, col. 2.]

(n.s.) 276 (P. O.), referred to.

Jurisdiction means power and authority conferred on a Court to pronounce the sentence of the law or to award the remedies provided by law, upon a state of facts, proved or admitted, referred to the Court for decision and authorised by law to be the subject of investigation or action by that Court and in favour of or against persons who present themselves or who are brought before the Court in some manner sanctioned by law as proper and sufficient. [p. 699, col. 2.]

When want of jurisdiction of a Court is apparent on the face of the record, any judgment rendered by such a Court is null and void, incapable of ratification and subject to collateral impeachment. But a Court has jurisdiction to decide whether it has jurisdiction to entertain the suit and the decision of the Court that it has jurisdiction is final and conclusive in all collateral enquiries. Where, however, the want of jurisdiction is not apparent on the face of the proceedings but the absence of jurisdiction depends on a fact, in the knowledge of a party which he had an opportunity of bringing forward in Court, then, if he does not bring that fact forward but allows the Court to proceed with the judgment, he ought not to be permitted to impeach the jurisdiction of the Court in any collateral proceeding. [p. 699, col. 2; p. 700, col. 1.]

Obiter dicta.—The Civil Procedure Code compels the parties to produce all the documentary evidence of every description in their possession or power on which they intend to rely at the first hearing of the suit and provides that such evidence which should have been, but has not been, produced shall not be received at any subsequent stage of the proceedings unless good cause is shown to the satisfaction of the Court for the non-production thereof. This rule, however, was enacted to prevent fraud by the late production of suspicious documents and since no suspicion can attach to certified copies of public documents, they may be received in evidence though they have not been produced at the first hearing. [p. 691, col. 1.]

The policy of the Legislature in enacting Regulation III of 1872 was to have a complete Record of Rights and interests in land in the Sonthal Parganas and to exclude the jurisdiction of Civil Courts except in certain matters. The Regulation gives no scope for the view that the members of a joint family may allow the name of the karta to be recorded in the Record of Rights and yet claim to have an interest in the estate. JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—On the 14th August 1895, one Thakur Barham, in consideration of a large sum of money then due by him to the defendants and of a present advance of Rs. 3,959-7-3, executed a bond in favour of the defendants by which he agreed to pay to the defendants the sum of Rs. 1,25,000 with interest thereon at 13-annas per cent. per month, and secured this sum by a mortgage in their favour of an 8-annas of Tappa Patsunda in the Sonthal Parganas and an 8-annas of milik Kosapat Amdar in Bhagalpur. On the 15th September 1900, the defendants commenced a suit against Thakur Barham in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur to enforce the mortgage of the 14th August 1895, and on the 8th September 1902, recovered a mortgage-decree as against Thakur Barham for Rs. 2,57,600. Thakur Barham appealed to the Calcutta High Court and as a condition for stay of execution pending the disposal of the appeal, gave as further security another 2-annas of Patsunda. On the 16th December 1903, the Calcutta High Court dismissed the appeal of Thakur Barham. The defendants then commenced execution proceedings, and on the 5th October 1904, purchased the 10-annas of Patsunda and 8-annas of Kosapat at a Judicial sale held in execution of their mortgage-decree. The sale was duly confirmed and on the 21st December 1904, the defendants obtained delivery of possession of the properties purchased by them. Thakur Barham died on the 7th September 1905; and on the 7th April 1916, the plaintiffs, who claim to have had a joint interest with Thakur Barham in all the properties that stood recorded in the name of Thakur Barham including the mortgaged properties, instituted the suit out of which this appeal arises for redemption of the mortgage of the 14th August 1895, and in the alternative for possession. The learned Subordinate Judge, agreeing with the contentions put forward on behalf of the plaintiffs, has given them a decree for possession.

The case of the plaintiffs, as made in the plaint, is a simple one. They contend that they were joint with Thakur Barham and that the proceedings taken by the defendants against Thakur Barham cannot affect their right to redeem the mortgage. They also contend that Tappa Patsunda, being situate within the Sonthal Parganas, the Bhagalpur Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit or to sell the mortgaged properties. They accordingly ask for a decree for redemption and in the alternative, for a decree for possession with mesne profits. The defendants in their written statement rely upon the admitted fact that there was a Settlement of the Sonthal Parganas, including Tappa Patsunda, in 1905, and they contend that the present suit is barred by certain provisions of Regulation III of 1872. On the merits they say that the properties dealt with by Thakur Barham formed part of his impartible Zemindari and that the plaintiffs were not necessary parties to the mortgage action and have no right to redeem the mortgage. They also challenge the contention of the plaintiffs that the Bhagalpur Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the mortgage action.

The learned Subordinate Judge framed twenty-nine issues for trial between the parties, but, in my opinion, the questions that arise in the case are three in number; first, is the suit maintainable in view of section 11 and 25A of Regulation III of 1872; secondly, had the Bhagalpur Court jurisdiction to entertain the mortgage action, and lastly, was the Zemindari of which Thakur Barham was in possession, an impartible Zemindari, and, if so, have the plaintiff, in the events which have happened, any right to redeem the mortgage. The learned Subordinate Judge has decided all these questions in favour of the plaintiffs and has given them a decree for possession.

I will first consider the question whether the present suit is maintainable in view of section 11 and section 25A of Regulation III of 1872. In order to appreciate the arguments which have been advanced to us on the point it is necessary to remember that there was a Settlement of the Sonthal Parganas, including Tappa Patsunda, under the provisions of Regulation III of 1872 between 1903 and 1905, and that, in that Settlement, known as McPherson's Settlement, the defendants were recorded as owners of Tappa Patsunda. The certificates of publication of the Record of Rights were granted on various dates in May and June 1905, and it is alleged by the defendants that they were duly published in the villages in accordance with the rules laid down in the Regulation. On the 23rd May 1905 Gaja Barham for self and as guardian of the minors Nitia Nand and Pram Nand, Balbhaddar Barham and Jai Kishen Barham, presented a petition of objection in the Court of the Settlement Officer of Dunka in which they contended that Tappa Patsunda was the ancestral property of the objectors and that they had a right to get their respective names recorded in the Settlement Department in respect of 10-annas 8-pies share. Although Jai Barham's name does not appear in the petition of objection, as printed in the paper-book, it is clear from Mr. Allanson's order, dated the 24th June 1905, that he was a party to the proceedings. It will be noticed, therefore, that all the present plaintiffs were represented in the petition of objection which was rejected by Mr. Allanson, who succeeded Mr. McPherson as the Settlement Officer on the 24th June 1905. The learned Subordinate Judge says that this petition was filed before the completion of the Record of Rights. This is wrong. It was actually filed after the publication of the Record of Rights in respect of two hundred villages, and the decision of Mr. Allanson was pronounced after the publication of the Record of Rights in respect of the remaining villages.

On these facts it was argued that, in view of section 11 and section 25A of the Regulation, the present suit is not maintainable. Section 11 of the Regulation provides as follows:—"Except as provided in section 25A no suit shall lie in any Civil Court regarding any matter decided by any Settlement Court under these rules, but the decision and orders of the Settlement Courts made under these rules, regarding the interests and rights above-mentioned, shall have the force of a decree of Court."

Section 25A provides as follows:—"Where only the rights of Zemindars and other proprietors as between themselves are concerned a suit may, unless it is barred by section 11* of the Code of Civil Procedure, be brought in a Court established under the Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act, 1887, to contest the finding or record of the Settlement Officer, within three years from the date of the publication of the Record of Rights, or of the final order of the Revenue Court. But no such suit shall be brought in any Court after the expiration of three years from such date. If in any such suit it is found that the finding of the Settlement Officer is erroneous, the record shall be amended accordingly." It was contended on behalf of the defendants that the question in controversy between the parties was decided by the Settlement Officer in favour of the defendants and that section 11 of the Regulation operates as a bar to the suit. The plaintiffs replied that the rights involved in this suit fell within the class of rights mentioned in section 25A of the Regulation and that the present case, therefore, falls within the exception and not the prohibition of section 11. The defendants retorted that even then the suit is barred by limitation as it has been brought after the expiration of three years from the date of the publication of the Record of Rights.

Speaking with great respect, I think there has always been some confusion as regards the applicability of section 11 and section 25A of the Regulation. It was argued as though, when the rights of Zemindars and other proprietors as between themselves are concerned, the prohibition contained in section 11 does not operate. I read the sections somewhat differently. In my opinion section 11 bars every suit regarding any matter decided by any Settlement Court, except such suits as are brought to contest the finding or record of the Settlement Officer, where only the right of Zemindars or other proprietors as between themselves are concerned, provided they are brought within three years from the date of the publication of the Record of Rights. Section 11 provides that every decision and order of the Settlement Officer regarding the interests and rights of the parties shall have the force of a decree. Section 25A provides a procedure for avoiding the decree only when the question in controversy between the parties involves the determination of the rights of the Zemindars or other proprietors as between themselves. When the question in controversy between the parties does not involve the determination of such rights, the decree under section 11 cannot be avoided by a suit under section 25A but when the question in controversy does involve the determination of such rights, the decree under section 11 can be avoided by a suit under section 25A. In my opinion section 11 operates in every case to give to every decision and order of the Settlement Courts the force of a decree and section 25A enables a party affected by such decisions and orders to sue for setting aside such decisions and orders, provided the rights decided fall within the class of rights mentioned in section 25A. I have no doubt whatever as to the rights of the parties under the Regulation. Under section 14, the Settlement Officer has to give due notice to the people of a village for which he is about to prepare a Record of Rights, so that all persons interested may bring forward their claims either in writing or by verbal application, and he has to enquire into, settle and record all rights in, or claims to, the lands of a village of which he is preparing a Record of Rights, even though such claims or rights may not be urged by the parties interested. The parties then have an opportunity of representing their views to the Settlement Officer before the preparation of the Record of Rights. The decisions arrived at by the Settlement Officer in the course of such enquiry are decisions within the meaning of section 11 and operate as decrees of Court, and the only way in which such decrees may be avoided is by a suit under section 25A, provided the decision affects the rights of Zemindars and other proprietors as between themselves. But the Settlement Officer may himself set aside the decision in an appropriate proceeding under section 24 of the Act which makes it obligatory on the Settlement Officer, after he shall have made the Record of Rights for any village, to notify and publish the contents of such record to the persons interested by posting it conspicuously in the village and otherwise in such manner as may be convenient and which enables any person interested to bring forward in the Settlement Courts within a period of six months from the date of publication of such Record of Rights any objection he may desire to make to any part of such record. The section provides that any objection so made shall be enquired into and disposed of by a decision in writing under the hand of the Officer presiding in the Court. The decision arrived at under section 24 is, again, a decision within the meaning of section 11 and operates as a decree of Court, and the only way, again, in which such a decree can be avoided is again by a suit under section 25A provided the decision affects the rights of Zemindars and other proprietors as between themselves. Section 25 provides that after a period of six months from the date of the publication of the Record of Rights of any village, such record shall be conclusive proof of the rights and customs therein recorded, other than the rights mentioned in section 25A, except so far as concerns entries in such record regarding which objection by parties interested may still be pending in the original or Appellate Court, or may still be open to appeal. It follows from this provision that, where the rights dealt with in the Settlement proceeding are such rights as are mentioned in section 25A, the Record of Rights cannot be relied on as a bar to a suit which asserts a right contrary to the entry in the Record of Rights, for section 25 is quite clear that a Record of Rights is not conclusive proof of the rights mentioned in section 25A. But the decision which is the basis of the Record of Rights constitutes a bar to the suit under section 11. A distinction has been drawn in the Regulation between "the decision and orders" of the Settlement Court and the Record of Rights. The decision and orders have the force of a decree of Court, whereas the Record of Rights is conclusive proof of the rights and customs therein recorded other than the rights mentioned in section 25A. In my opinion when in any suit we are concerned with such rights as are mentioned in section 25A, and a decision of the Settlement Court is pleaded as a bar to the suit, all that we have to see is whether there is such a decision as is alleged by the defendants and it is wholly immaterial to enquire whether the Record of Rights was published in accordance with law.

* s. 13 of the Code of 1882.—[Ed.].

Now, the defendants have been recorded in the Record of Rights as the proprietors of Tappa Patsunda. The question was, as we have seen, directly raised by the plaintiffs before the Settlement Officer by their petition Exhibit O, dated the 25th May 1905. The Settlement Officer directly decided the question against the plaintiffs by his order, Exhibit F F, dated the 24th June 1905. In my opinion that order operated as a decree between the parties under section 11 of the Regulation. It is conceded that the rights decided by Settlement Officer fell within the class of rights mentioned in section 25A of the Regulation. It must, therefore, follow that the plaintiffs had the right to contest the finding of the Settlement Officer, provided they brought their suit within three years from the date of the publication of the Record of Rights. Is the present suit, then, a suit to contest the finding or record of the Settlement Officer?

In my opinion, it is not. It is sufficient to refer to the plaint to make good the point, that the suit is not a suit to contest the finding or record of the Settlement Officer. There is not a word about the finding or record of the Settlement Officer in the plaint, and there is nothing in the plaint, which either expressly or by necessary implication invites the Court to set aside such finding or record. In my view the present suit cannot be regarded as a suit under section 25A of the Regulation, and there being no challenge of the order of the Settlement Officer dated the 24th June 1905 that order operates as a bar to the present suit.

The learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the decision of a Settlement Court does not operate as a decree under section 11 of the Regulation, unless there is proof of the publication of the Record of Rights. I have dealt with this point, and all that I need say is that I am unable to concur in this view. It is impossible, in my opinion, to escape from the provision of section 11 that the decision and orders of the Settlement Courts shall have the force of a decree of Court. There is nothing in the language employed by the Legislature in section 11 to suggest that they shall have the force of a decree only on proof of the publication of the Record of Rights.

It was argued before us that the nature of a decree under section 11 is substantially equivalent to a plea of res judicata, and that it was for the defendants to establish the decree upon which they relied as operating as res judicata, and reliance was placed upon Nadiah Ohn Singh v. Ohunder Sikhur Sadku (1). I quite agree that it is for the defendants to establish the decree upon which they rely, but what is the decree under section 11? Not the Record of Rights, but the decisions and orders of the Settlement Courts.

It was then argued that the plaintiffs could not be expected to bring a suit to contest the finding or record of the Settlement Officer, since they do not admit that there is a Record of Rights relating to these lands. The argument completely ignores the provisions of section 25A which gives a party the right to contest not only the record but also the finding of the Settlement Officer, and it is conceded that the plaintiffs were aware of the finding of the Settlement Officer contained in the order dated the 24th June 1905. It was open to the plaintiffs to sue for setting aside the finding, but this course they did not adopt. In my opinion the decision of the 24th June 1905 constitutes a complete bar to the suit under section 11 of the Regulation.

I will now deal with the question whether the Record of Rights was published in accordance with law. In other words, I will assume that the suit is one under section 25A, and enquire whether it has been brought within three years from the date of the publication of the Record of Rights. The defendants filed certain extracts from the Record of Rights which did not contain the certificate of publication; but during the hearing of the case, they tendered in evidence the certified copies of the Record of Rights containing the certificates of publication. On the 23rd December 1918, the learned Subordinate Judge accepted these documents in evidence, but reviewing his own order later in the day, he came to the conclusion that he would not be justified in accepting these documents at that stage. He accordingly returned the documents to the defendants. The Civil Procedure Code, it is true, compels the parties to produce all the documentary evidence of every description in their possession or power on which they intend to rely at the first hearing of the suit and provides that such evidence which should have been but has not been produced shall not be received at any subsequent stage of the proceedings unless good cause is shown to the satisfaction of the Court for the non-production thereof. But it has been held in numerous cases that the rule was enacted to prevent fraud by the late production of suspicious documents and that no suspicion can attach to certified copies of public documents and that such copies may be received in evidence though they have not been produced at the first hearing. In my opinion the explanation offered by the defendants should have been accepted by the learned Subordinate Judge and that, in order to do complete justice between the parties, he should have accepted these documents in evidence. Having rejected them, however, he had no difficulty in coming to the conclusion that the internal evidence furnished by the documents themselves did not establish that there was due publication of the Record of Rights.

(1) 15 C. 705; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1034.

In this Court Mr. Hasan Imam tendered in evidence the documents containing the certificates of publication in respect of each village of Tappa Patandda. Mr. Ser, on behalf of the plaintiffs, very properly did not object to these documents going in, and they have been marked as Exhibits in the case. They bear the facsimile signature of Mr. McPherson, and the autograph signature of Mr. Hossain, who was the Assistant Settlement Officer. The learned Subordinate Judge has made a point of the fact that Mr. McPherson left India in April and that the publication, according to the certificates took place in May and June. That is true, but the rules framed under section 10 of the Regulation provide that the Settlement Officer or the Assistant Settlement Officer shall certify on the record the date of its publication. They are all certified by the Assistant Settlement Officer, and constitute important evidence on the point under investigation.

Under the Bengal Tenancy Act, the certificate of publication would be conclusive proof of publication. We have no such provision in the Regulation, but, in my opinion, the production of the certificate of publication by the defendants raises a presumption that there was publication according to the procedure laid down in the Regulation, throwing the onus on the plaintiffs to establish that there was no regular publication of the Record of Rights. The plaintiffs have, however, given no evidence on the point, whereas the defendants have called certain witnesses to prove due publication of the Record of Rights in accordance with law. It appears that Deonath Sahai (D. W. No. 12) and Dil Kishan Jha (D. W. No. 14) between them looked after the publication of the Record of Rights in all the villages. I have carefully considered their evidence and I am of opinion that the evidence establishes beyond reasonable doubt that there was actual publication of the Record of Rights in the villages.

I will shortly deal with the arguments employed by the learned Subordinate Judge for rejecting the case of the defendants as to publication of the Record of Rights. He makes a grievance that the plaintiffs' witnesses were not cross-examined on this point. In my opinion it is not the duty of any Counsel to unnecessarily get a point against him by cross-examination. As a matter of fact Bolaki Das (P. W. No. 2) was cross-examined on the point and he admitted that McPherson's Settlement did take place and that "all the tenants got perchd slips and according to the same the jamabandi was prepared". Then he complains of the paucity of evidence on the side of the defendants. He is of opinion that the defendants should have examined the amins, and Mr. DeCosta, the defendants' manager, and he thinks that the amins' diaries and the account-books of the defendants should have been produced, the former to show that the amins did in fact do the work which they purported to do, the latter to show whether any expenses were in fact incurred by the defendants in sending their officers to look after the publication of the Record of Rights. The Record of Rights, according to the certificates of publication, were published in May and June 1905, the defendants were giving their evidence in Court in December 1918. I am of opinion that it was unreasonable to expect them to produce in December 1918 the amins' diaries of May and June 1905 or their account books of that period. The evidence, in my opinion, is more than sufficient to establish the defendants' case on the point. That case on the certificates of publication is inherently probable, and that case was not contradicted in the witness-box by any of the witnesses examined on behalf of the defendants. In my opinion the defendants have established that there was due publication of the Record of Rights in May and June 1905. The present suit, regarded as a suit under section 25A, is clearly barred by limitation.

My decision on this point is sufficient to dispose of the appeal, but I think it just as well that I should deal with the other two points which have been argued before us. First, I will deal with the question of impartibility, as to which the onus is undoubtedly on the defendants. That the family is an ancient and a noble one admits of no doubt whatever. The history of the family will be found at page 244 of the District Gazetteer, Sonthal Parganas. It appears that one Deb Barham, a Khetaur Chief of Kharagpur, being driven out of that tract by the Rajput invaders, obtained a grant of Patsunda and Barkop from the Mughul Viceroy of Emperor Akbar. In 1687 the estate was divided between two of his descendants Man Barham and Ohandra Barham. Man Barham retaining Barkop while Patsunda was handed over to his younger brother Ohandra Barham. Thakur Barham is the lineal descendant of Chandra Barham. We have no authentic history of the mode of succession from Ohandra Barham to Sital Barham. Sital had three sons, Fateh Barham, Dowlat Barham and Ratan Barham. Permanent Settlement was admittedly concluded with Fateh Barham. Fateh Barham died in January 1811 and was succeeded by his only son, Tej Barham. Tej Barham died on the 30th January 1848 leaving four sons Tilak, Kirat, Rudra and Lashman, of whom the eldest Tilak was recorded in the Government records as the owner of the property. Thakur Barham was the only son of Tilak, and succeeded him to the exclusion of his uncles.

In my opinion the admitted history of the family makes the case of the descendants inherently probable. The founder of the family was a Khetaur Chief who, no doubt in return for such services as he was able to render to the Mughul, secured a grant of an extensive tract of land from the Mughul. It is permissible to infer that that which he secured as a Chief he intended to retain as a Chief. The next important event is the succession of Fateh Barham to the estate and the fact that Permanent Settlement was concluded with Fateh Barham to the exclusion of his brothers. It is admitted by the plaintiffs that Fateh Barham had two brothers, Dowlat and Ratan; but Tusi Jha, the first witness examined on behalf of the plaintiffs, says that they died minors during their father's lifetime, though in cross-examination he admits that his evidence on the point is hearsay. The learned Subordinate Judge says that the evidence of the plaintiffs shows that the two brothers "died during the lifetime of their father and that they left no heirs." This is wrong. There is no evidence on the side of the plaintiffs that they left no heirs. The defendants have given evidence that Dowlat and Ratan left sons whose descendants are still in existence; but the evidence on this point is weak, and I am not prepared to differ from the learned Subordinate Judge on this point. The fact that the Permanent Settlement was concluded with Fateh Barham is, therefore, not conclusive.

The succession of Tej Barham calls for no comment, since he was the only son of his father. Tej Barham, however, left four sons Tilak, Kirat, Rudra and Lashman. On the 13th November 1848, Tilak applied for registration of his name in the Government record and asserted that, though his father had left three other sons, he alone was entitled to have his name recorded as the malik of the Zemindaris and household goods left by his father. It is necessary to quote the exact language employed by Tilak in making the application. "According to the custom of the family and under Act X of 1800," he asserted, "your petitioner has been in possession and occupation of all the properties left by his father, considering them to be the jungle tari mahals, and, has been paying the Government Revenue for the same. It is apparent that on the death of a father, his eldest son becomes the malik of all the Zemindaris and household goods left by him, has a right to pass orders, and maintain his brothers and other heirs of the deceased." The learned Subordinate Judge says that the word "malik" means a manager, and that the petition, Exhibit 5, read as a whole, shows "that the estate was a joint concern and that after the death of Tej Barham his sons became equal co-parceners therein." It may be assumed that the estate was the family property of a joint undivided family in the sense that it had never been divided and that the succession thereto would be governed by the rules of survivorship obtaining in a joint Mitakshara Hindu family but an estate may be the family property of a joint undivided family, and yet be impartible. There is, however, nothing in the petition to suggest that the brothers of Tilak were equal co-parceners with him in the estate. On the contrary, there is an assertion, clear and unequivocal that Tilak was in possession and occupation of all the properties left by his father to the exclusion of his brothers and that he alone was entitled to have his name recorded in the Government records as the proprietor of the estate. The reference to Regulation X of 1800 puts the matter beyond all reasonable doubt. By Regulation XI of 1793, the estates of proprietors of land dying intestate were declared liable to be divided among the heirs of the deceased agreeably to the Hindu or Muhammadan Law. But a custom having been found to prevail in the jungle mahals of Midnapore and other districts by which the succession to the landed estates invariably devolved to a single heir without the division of the property, it became necessary for the Governor-General in Council to pass a Regulation to save such customs from the operation of Regulation XI of 1793. Regulation X of 1800 was accordingly passed, and it provided that Regulation XI of 1793 shall not be considered "to supersede or affect any established usage which may have obtained in the jungle mahals of Midnapore and other districts, by which the succession to landed estates, the proprietor of which may die intestate, has hitherto been considered to devolve to a single heir, to the exclusion of the other heirs of the deceased," and that "in the mahals in question the local custom of the country shall be continued in full force, as heretofore." The assertion of Tilak Barham in the petition was that he was in possession and occupation of all the properties left by his father to the exclusion of his brothers according to the custom of the family and under Regulation X of 1800. This, in my opinion, was equivalent to an assertion that the estate which belonged to his father, was an impartible estate, and had devolved on him as a single heir of his father.

This application was disposed of by a rubkari of the Collectorate, Exhibit TT, dated the 16th January 1894. The rubkari shows that notices of the application were duly issued, that there was no opposition from anybody, that the petitioner examined three witnesses who gave evidence to the effect that Tilak Barham had succeeded to the estate according to family custom and that his brothers were in receipt of maintenance from him and that the Court directed the name of Tilak Barham to be recorded in the Government Sherista. Exhibit 8 and Exhibit TT, in my opinion, strongly support the case of the defendants.

In September 1862 Tilak died, leaving three brothers and a son, Thakur Barham. If the property left by him was partible property then Kirat Barham, as the eldest male member of the family, would be entitled to take up the management of the estate. But, as a matter of fact, Thakur Barham, on the 14th January 1863, applied to have his name recorded in the Government Sherista in respect of the Zemindari which stood recorded in his father's name. He asserted in his petition, Exhibit UU, that his father had died leaving him as his only heir, and that he had taken possession of the estate of the deceased. He asked that the witnesses named by him might be examined in support of the case and his name duly recorded in the Government Sherista. Notices of this application were apparently served on the brothers of Tilak, and Rudar Barham, one of the brothers of Tilak, promptly presented a petition of objection on the 27th February 1863. In this petition Exhibit 8, he alleged that on the death of Tej Barw, all his sons came into possession of his estate, although the name of Tilak was recorded in the Government Sherista. According to him, the custom of the family was that "all the brothers unanimously get the name of one of them registered in the Government Sherista and the costs of maintenance, marriages and deaths, all the expenses of the three brothers are jointly defrayed from the usufruct of the said estate after the payment of Government Revenue." There was thus a direct challenge upon the title of Thakur Barham and on his right to have his name recorded in the Government Sherista in respect of the Zemindari. Thakur Barham replied to this petition by his petition, Exhibit 8 (a), dated the 26th March 1863. In this petition he asserted that his father, Tilak Barham, had succeeded to the estate according to the custom of the family and under the provisions of Regulation X of 1800, under which the eldest son becomes proprietor of all the properties left by his deceased father, and that the objection petition of Rudar Barham was not tenable inasmuch as he had accepted the petition on which Tilak Barham had succeeded in having his own name recorded. On the question of maintenance as to which his petition of the 14th January 1863 was silent and of which Rudar Barham had made a grievance, he said that he had not deprived Rudar of maintenance and that he was in receipt of it. It is impossible to escape from the conclusion that there is, in this petition [Exhibit 8 (a)], a definite assertion that the estate was an impartible one and that he had succeeded to it as the sole owner, subject only to the right of his uncles to receive maintenance from him. This position was accepted by the notes of Thakur Barw, as the fifth paragraph of the petition, and a statement signed by Rudar Barham at the foot of the petition, conclusively establish. That statement was as follows: "As Thakur Barham, the peti-tiner, has accepted the terms of the petition, dated the 16th November 1848, filed by Tilak Barham, upon which depended the proof of the allegations, contained in the objection petition, in respect of the costs of maintenance and of marriages and deaths, and has stated everything in this petition according to the custom prevailing in the family, I accept the contents of this petition and have no objection to the name of the petitioner being registered". I regard the petition of Thakur Barham, dated the 26th March 1863 and the statement signed by Rudar Barham at the foot of the petition as wholly destructive of the case of the plaintiffs. As I have said before, there is a definite assertion in the petition that according to the family custom and under the provisions of Regulation X of 1800, the eldest son becomes the proprietor of all the properties left by his deceased father. Rudar Barham in his statement at the foot of the petition says that Thakur Barham "has stated everything in this petition according to the custom prevailing in the family"; and he accepts the contents of Thakur Barham's petition. From his statement it would appear that his object in opposing the application of Thakur Barham was to get an admission from him as to his right of maintenance. There was that admission in the petition of Tilak Barham, and his brothers did not oppose his application. There was no such admission in the petition of Thakur Barham dated the 14th January 1863, and there was a prompt challenge upon his title. But in the petition of the 26th March 1863, Thakur Barham made it quite clear that he did not intend to repudiate the position adopted by his father, and they at once admitted the validity of the family custom which was the basis of Thakur Barham's claim. The learned Subordinate Judge says that the transaction does not show that the parties considered the estate to be impartible and that the estate was in fact recognised by them as joint. The learned Subordinate Judge is obviously under the impression that an assertion that an estate is the family property of an undivided family carries with it an admission that it is not an impartible estate. This is, of course, an erroneous view. I regard the documents in connection with Thakur Barham's succession to the estate as strong evidence in support

In 1878, the estate was brought under the Settlement operation which took place in pursuance of Regulation III of 1872, and Thakur Barham was recorded as the proprietor of the estate. It is argued by the defendants that, had the plaintiffs any proprietary interest in the estate, they would undoubtedly have been recorded in the Record of Rights to the extent of their interest in the estate. The learned Subordinate Judge dismisses the argument as wholly inadmissible. According to him, as the name of Thakur Barham stood recorded in the Government records as the proprietor of the estate, it is only natural that his name should be recorded in the Record of Rights. He also thought that the Record of Rights "was in consonance with the conception of a joint Hindu family." The argument employed by the learned Subordinate Judge completely overlooks the policy of the Legislature in enacting Regulation III of 1872 which was, as the learned Judges in Shankar Prasad Jha [Janaki Persad Jha] v. Babu Lil Jha (2) pointed out, "to have a complete Record of Rights and interest in land in the Sonthal Parganas and to exclude the jurisdiction of Civil Courts except in certain matters". Section 12 of the Regulation empowers the Settlement Officers to enquire into, to decide, and to record the rights of the Zemindars and other proprietors, and section 13 lays down that the Record of Rights to be prepared by a Settlement Officer shall show the nature and incidents of each right and interest held by each class of occupiers or owners in a village, or, if need be, of each individual owner, occupier or headman in a village. Section 14 requires the Settlement Officer to enquire into, settle, and record, all rights in, or claims to, the lands of a village of which he is preparing a Record of Rights even though such claims or rights may not be urged by the parties. The Regulation, in my opinion, gives no scope for the argument that the members of a joint family may allow the name of the karta to be recorded in the Record of Rights and yet claim to have an interest in the estate. The case just cited makes interesting reading. One Joyram died leaving three sons, Babu Lal, Surjee and Dinabandhu. Surjee died in 1303, leaving four sons who were the plaintiffs in the action. Their case was that the family properties remained in charge of their uncles, defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and they claimed a partition of the joint family properties. But the defendant No. 1 was recorded in the Settlement records as the proprietor of the estate, and he took the plea that the suit was barred under section 25A of the Regulation which, as we have already seen, enables a party prejudiced by the Record of Rights to bring a suit to contest the record within three years of the date of publication of the Record of Rights and which lays down that no such suit shall be brought after the expiration of three years from that date. The Court gave effect to the plea and dismissed the plaintiff's suit as regards properties in Sonthal Parganas. The decision is an authority for the view that the Record of Rights framed under Regulation III of 1872 operates as between members of a joint Hindu family just as completely as between strangers. In my opinion, it is impossible to take the view that the entry in the Record of Rights, to quote the language of the learned Subordinate Judge, "was in consonance with the conception of a Joint Hindu family."

The defendants have also relied upon a series of transactions into which Thakur Barham entered, by which he dealt with the estate as the sole owner thereof. The first is a statement, Exhibit M, made by Thakur Barham to Babu Surya Narain Singh in the course of a negotiation for a loan. He asserted that he was the sole proprietor of the entire 16 annas of Tappa Patsunda. The next in point of time is Exhibit O, the bond executed by Thakur Barham in favour of the defendants on 26th Kartik 1300, and the last is Exhibit DD, the bond executed by Thakur Barham in favour of the defendants of 30th Sava 1302. In each of the documents he asserted his sole and exclusive title to the 16 annas of Tappa Patsunda. It was the last-mentioned transaction that formed the basis of the mortgage-suit brought by the defendants against Thakur Barham, and there is evidence hat Gaju Barham, the father of the plaintiffs Nos. 3 and 4, was aware of the mortgage-decree that had been passed against Thakur Barham and that he was actually negotiating for a loan to pay off the defendants. That evidence will be found in the orders, dated the 28th April 1904 and 25th July 1904, respectively, of the Court executing the decree against Thakur Barham, in Exhibit 9, the affidavit of one Pheku Lal and Exhibit H, the deposition of Pheku Lal in those proceedings. It appears that about the time when the Court was about to pass orders for the sale of the mortgaged properties an application was filed for adjournment of the sale on the ground that the judgment-debtor was negotiating for a loan by which he proposed to pay off the decree-holders. The deposition of Pheku Lal in those proceedings makes it perfectly clear that Gaju Barham was one of the persons who was acting on behalf of Thakur Barham. Now it may be asked why Gaju Barham should make any endeavour to have the defendants' mortgage satisfied if in point of fact that mortgage conveyed no interest to the defendants? If, indeed, Thakur Barham were not the sole proprietor of the properties mortgaged the mortgage decree obtained by the defendants could not affect the interest of Gaju Barham, and one would not expect Gaju Barham to make a tour of the banking-houses in order to raise a loan on behalf of Thakur Barham. Gaju Barham, in my opinion, has no doubt that Thakur Barham was the sole proprietor of the estate which was an impartible one.

Then there is a clear admission by Musamat Kalabati, one of the plaintiffs in the action that "the estate Patwanda is an impartible estate and is placed in the hands of a single member who manages the property for the time being." See Exhibit Y, the petition dated the 1st of June 1906. Then there is some evidence of conduct in regard to Jai Kissen, another plaintiff in the present action, showing that, so far as he is concerned, he believed in the custom of primogeniture. Exhibit MM4 shows that Jai Kissen claimed a khoposh grant during the Settlement proceedings, a claim which was disallowed by the Settlement Officer. Now, in my opinion, an assertion that a person has a khoposh grant in the estate carries with it the admission that he has no proprietary interest in the estate; for, if the estate were an ordinary partible estate he would undoubtedly have a proprietary interest in it.

I now come to the oral evidence, and this is all in favour of the defendants. There is one circumstance in connection with the oral evidence which has escaped the attention of the learned Subordinate Judge. As the onus of the issue in regard to the question of impartibility was on the defendants, the plaintiffs asked for, and obtained, leave reserving to themselves the right to adduce rebutting evidence on this issue after the close of the defendants' case. This is clear from the order of the Court dated the 30th November 1918. The order of the 21st December 1918 shows that the plaintiffs declined to produce any rebutting evidence on the issue of impartibility. The result is that the evidence adduced on behalf of the defendants remains uncontradicted, although it was open to the plaintiffs after the close of the defendants' case to pledge their oath against the case set up by the defendants. The inference is irresistible that their evidence would have supported the case of the defendants on this point.

Pheku Lal, the first witness examined on behalf of the defendant, was the Patwari of Thakur Barham from 1281 to 1312. He is, therefore, in a position to say on whose behalf he made the collections. He says that Thakur Barham was the malik of the estate and that he made khoposh grants in favour of his uncles. Cross-examined as to the reason for the arrangement, he said that he heard from Thakur Barham that "such was the family custom and that accordingly the eldest member of the eldest branch became the malik and the others enjoyed the profits of some villages for their expenses". Bakshi Lal (P. W. No. 3) held a power-of-attorney from Thakur Barham, and he says that during the lifetime of Thakur Barham the plaintiffs had no concern with the estate and that Jai Kissen succeeded to the estate on the death of Thakur Barham according to family custom. It may be pointed out, in connection with this evidence that the Executive Authorities undoubtedly took the view that the estate was an impartible one and that on the death of Thakur Barham, Jai Kissen, as the eldest of the eldest line, succeeded to all that was left of the properties. Exhibit MM shows that, on Thakur Barham's death, under the orders of the Deputy Commissioner, the property of Thakur Barham was made over to Jai Kissen. Jai Kissen received the property and granted a receipt for it; but subsequently, in order to safeguard their interest in the civil suit, he joined with the rest of the plaintiffs in presenting an application asking that the property made over to Jai Kissen may be declared as made over to him and the other petitioners. That petition was obviously presented with a view to create evidence in their favour; but the fact remains that the Deputy Commissioner did make over the property to Jai Kissen and that Jai Kissen did receive it and grant a receipt for it.

Sowkhi Lal Singh (D. W. No. 5) was a mochar under Thakur Barham, and he says that according to the custom of the family the eldest son of the eldest line always succeeds to the estate. He also says that he heard of the custom from Thakur Barham, Rudar Barham, Maula Barham, Lal Barham, Jai Barham, and others: Jai Barham is one of the plaintiffs, and he did not think it necessary to contradict, in the witness box, the evidence of Sowkhi Lal. Sunder Chand Das, (D. W. No. 9) also gives evidence on this point, and he says that there were maintenance grants in favour of the younger members of the family.

Before concluding this part of my judgment, I think it necessary to refer to the evidence of two witnesses examined on behalf of the plaintiffs. Tulsi Jha (P. W. No. 1) admits that Thakur Barham used to be called Raja by every one and that the other members of the family were called Babus. He also admits that one member of the family has all along been called Raja, and the others Babus. He finally admits that Tappa Patsunda is known as a Raj and that it has never been partitioned. The importance of this evidence lies in the custom of gaddinashini to which it speaks which is an important consideration in any investigation relating to the question of impartibility. Bolaki Das (P. W. No. 2) is more definite. His evidence is as follows:

"There has all along been only one Raja for the whole estate at a time. Tilak Barham was the Raja before Thakur Barham. The eldest son of the eldest branch becomes the Raja, and this has all along been the family custom". This is clear, precise and definite, and completely supports the defendants' case.

It remains for me to consider the only pieces of evidence on which the plaintiffs rely. It is pointed out that in 1687 the estate then consisting of Barkop and Patsunda was divided between two of the descendants of the original founder of the family, and it is argued that the partition which admittedly took place in 1687 completely destroys the custom upon which the defendants rely. I am unable to agree with this contention. There are numerous instances to be found in the Law Reports where separate estates have been formed by the division of one entire estate; but it has never been held that that is a circumstance which decides the issue in favour of partitionability. We do not know the circumstances under which the division took place in 1687, but we do know that there never has been a partition since 1687 and that, to quote the language of Bolaki Das, "the eldest son of the eldest branch becomes the Raja, and this has all along been the family custom". I have considered all the evidence on this issue with great anxiety, and I have come to the conclusion that the defendants have established their case that the estate which was in the possession of Thakur Barham is an impartible one.

It was argued by Mr. Mollick on behalf of the respondents that, even assuming that the estate in the hands of Thakur Barham was an impartible one, the plaintiffs have sufficient interest in it to challenge the validity of the mortgage executed by Thakur Barham in favour of the defendants, and as a last resort, to redeem the mortgage. Now it is quite true that the impartibility of the estate did not destroy its nature as joint family property or rendered it the separate property of the last holder, unless there was something equivalent to partition which, I am satisfied, there was not. But what are the rights of the members of the joint family other than the holder of the estate? If this case were argued before the decision of the Judicial Committee in Sartaj Kuari v. Deorai Kuari (3) Mr. Mullik's argument would be conclusive but, in that case, it was held that the property in the paternal or ancestral estate acquired by birth under the Mitakshara Law is so connected with the right to a partition that it does not exist when there is no right to it. Mr. Mullik then argues that the decision in Sartaj Kuari's case (3) has been misunderstood by the Courts and that the Judicial Committee in Bajinath Prasad Singh v. Tej Bali Singh (4) has explained that decision. In dealing with Sartaj Kuari's case (3) the Judicial Committee in Bajinath Prasad Singh's case (4) said as follows: "Now what was decided was that in an impartible Raj there was no restriction on the power of alienation by the member of the family who was on the gaddi and was in possession, in respect that there was no such right of co-ownership in the other members as to give them a title to prevent such alienation. The right of the other members that was being considered was a presently existing right. The chance each member might have of a succession emerging in his favour was obviously outside the sphere of enquiry." It was argued, on this passage, that, though there is no right in the other members to prevent alienation during the lifetime of the holder making the alienation, that right comes into existence on the death of the holder. I am unable to see that the decision in Bajinath Prasad Singh's case (4) gives any support to the argument. The question involved in Bajinath Prasad Singh's case (4) was one of succession, and it was argued on behalf of the appellants on the basis of what was said in Sartaj Kuari's case (3) that there was no coparcenary which would give the succession to the respondent. Their Lordships pointed out that Sartaj Kuari's case (3) decided no question of succession but that it considered the rights of the other members "as a presently existing right." In my opinion, the argument is an impossible one, having regard not only to Sartaj Kuari's case (3) but also to Pittapur case [Sri Raja Rao Venkata Surya Mahipati Rama Krishna v. Court of Wards (5)]. I hold that the plaintiffs had no interest in the mortgaged properties at the time of the mortgage and were not necessary parties to the mortgage action and cannot be allowed, in this action, to redeem the mortgage.

The only other question left for determination is whether the Bhagalpur Court had jurisdiction to entertain the mortgage action brought by the defendants against Thakur Barham. The matter in dispute in that suit exceeded the value of Rs. 1,000 and the Civil Procedure Code was, therefore, applicable; see Maha Prasad Singh v. Ramani Mohan Singh (6). Section 19 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) provided that "if the immoveable property be situate within the limits of different districts the suit may be instituted in any Court, otherwise competent to try it, within whose jurisdiction any portion of the property is situate". The plaintiffs in their plaint alleged that one of the properties mortgaged was situate within the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur. This was not disputed by Thakur Barham in his written statement but he asserted, in the second paragraph of his written statement that the suit was "not fit to be entertained" by the Bhagalpur Court and that "it should have been instituted in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Officer of Godda, having power of a Sub-Judge". In the third paragraph, he gave his reasons for his assertion that Bhagalpur Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit. According to him, the Civil Procedure Code was not effective in the Sonthal Parganas, and, as one of the properties mortgaged was situate in the Sonthal Parganas, the Bhagalpur Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit. In the fifth paragraph of the written statement, he concluded without giving any reason therefor, that the Bhagalpur Court could not, in any circumstances, pass a decree so as to affect the property situate in the Sonthal Parganas. DWARKA PRASAD V. JAI BARHAM.

hearing of the suit the defendant did not appear and the learned Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion, on the pleadings, that he had complete jurisdiction to try the suit. On appeal to the Calcutta High Court, it was pressed on behalf of Thakur Barham that the decision of the Subordinate Judge as to his jurisdiction to entertain the suit was erroneous. The question was again argued on the pleadings and the High Court rejected the argument which was advanced on behalf of Thakur Barham. The direct attack on the jurisdiction of the Bhagalpur Court has accordingly failed. It has now been made the subject of a collateral impeachment in this suit.

As I have said before, the Bhagalpur Court had, under the Civil Procedure Code, general jurisdiction to try the suit but the plaintiffs rely upon section 5 of the Regulation III of 1872 which provided as follows:— "Till such time as a settlement of the whole or any part of the Sonthal Paragana shall be made under the rules hereinafter provided, and the said settlement shall be declared by Notification in the Calcutta Gazette to have been completed and concluded, no suit shall lie in any Court established under the said Act VI of 1871 in regard to any land or any interest in or arising out of any land or for the rents and profits of any land... except as hereinafter provided; but such suit shall be heard and determined by the officer appointed by the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal under section 2 of the said Act XXXVII of 1855 or by the Settlement Officers hereinafter mentioned, accordingly as the said Lieutenant Governor from time to time directs". This is followed by a proviso which does not affect the present case.

The first Settlement of the Sonthal Parganas known as the Woods' Settlement began in 1875 and was in fact concluded in 1879. The next Settlement known as McPherson's Settlement began in 1883. The mortgage suit was instituted in the Bhagalpur Court on the 17th of September 1880. But though the first Settlement was concluded in 1879, by a strange omission on the part of the authorities, no Notification has yet been issued declaring the Settlement to have been completed and concluded. It follows, therefore, that, in the special circumstances of the case, the Bhagalpur Court had no jurisdiction to try and determine the suit.

The question now arises, whether the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the mortgage action can now be impeached in this suit. Jurisdiction may be defined as the power and authority conferred on a Court to pronounce the sentence of the law or to award the remedies provided by law upon a state of facts, proved or admitted, referred to the Court for decision and authorised by law to be the subject of investigation or action by that Court, and in favour of, or against, persons who present themselves, or who are brought before the Court in some manner sanctioned by law as proper and sufficient. See Black on Jurisdiction, section 215. The rule is well established that when the want of jurisdiction of a Court is apparent on the face of the record, any judgment rendered by such a Court is null and void, incapable of ratification, and subject to collateral impeachment. But it is equally well established that the Court has jurisdiction to decide whether it has jurisdiction to entertain the suit, and that the decision of the Court that it has jurisdiction is final and conclusive in all collateral enquiries.

In this case, the question of jurisdiction was distinctly raised by Thakur Barham. The Court decided that it had jurisdiction to entertain the suit. That decision was made the subject of a direct attack in the High Court. The High Court upheld the decision of the Subordinate Judge. That decision should, on ordinary principles, be regarded as final and conclusive, so far as this suit is concerned.

But it was argued by Mr. Mullik, on behalf of the plaintiffs that the question was not raised in the form in which the plaintiffs have raised it in this suit. The basis of this argument is that section 5 of the Regulation was not specially pleaded as having ousted the jurisdiction of the Civil Court. It is true that there is no reference to section V of the Regulation in the written statement, but Thakur Barham did contend that, under no circumstances, had the Court any power to affect the property situate in the Sonthal Parganas by its decision. In my opinion the question was raised and finally decided and that decision is not open to impeachment in this suit.

JAUGAL SINGH v. GHULAM MAHOMED.

But if the question was not, in fact, raised, the plaintiffs are in no better position. As I have said before, but for the fact that the authorities forgot to issue a Notification declaring the settlement to have been completed and concluded the Bhagalpur Court had complete jurisdiction to try and dispose of the suit. The absence of jurisdiction in the Bhagalpur Court, therefore, depended on a fact which had to be proved, like any other fact in the case. In my opinion, when there is no want of jurisdiction in the Court to try a suit, that is to say, when the want of jurisdiction is not apparent on the face of the proceedings, but the absence of jurisdiction depends on a fact in the knowledge of the party which he had an opportunity of bringing forward in the Court, then, if he does not bring that fact forward but allows the Court to proceed with the judgment he ought not to be permitted to impeach the jurisdiction of the Court in any collateral proceeding. The question has often been debated in England in connection with the grant of a writ of prohibition, and the distinction between a latent want of jurisdiction, i. e., something becoming manifest in the course of the proceedings, and a patent want of jurisdiction, i. e. a want of jurisdiction apparent on the face of the proceedings, was pointed out by Lopes, L. J., in Fluckhart v. Morgan (7). In my opinion, the Bhagalpur Court had, on the face of the proceedings, complete jurisdiction to try and dispose of the mortgage action, and it is not open to the plaintiffs now, in this suit, to impeach that jurisdiction on the ground of the existence of a fact, which fact was never put forward in that suit.

I would allow this appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the Court below and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout.

The judgment will, by consent of parties, govern First Appeal No. 135 of 1919. The suit giving rise to First Appeal No. 135 of 1919 will accordingly stand dismissed, but without costs.

AD MR. J.—I entirely agree.

Specific Relief Act (1 of 1877), s. 22—Specific performance—Delay—Abandonment—Evidence.

Delay in bringing a suit for specific performance may, in certain cases, be evidence of abandonment or acquiescence, but, on the other hand, delay which does not amount to waiver, abandonment or acquiescence and in no way alters the position of the defendant, does not disentitle the plaintiff to sue for specific performance. [p. 704, col. 1.]

Kissen Gopal Sadaney v. Kally Prosonno Selt, 33 C. 633, relied upon.

The Court will decide in each case whether the delay on the part of the plaintiff was evidence of abandonment by him of his rights; and if the suit is within time and the delay is not so great as to induce the Court to hold that the plaintiff had forfeited his right, it will not refuse to grant the equitable relief claimed by him [p. 705, col. 1.]

First appeal from a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Lyallpur, dated the 25th February 1918.

Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., for the Appellants.

Dr. Mahomed Iqbal and Lala Niamat Rai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a first appeal arising out of a suit for the specific performance of a contract of sale executed on the 28th April 1915 by Wadhawa Singh, defendant No. 1, in favour of the plaintiff, Ghulam Mahomed. Under the contract the plaintiff agreed to sell the property in dispute in lieu of Rs. 7,000, out of which Rs. 100, were paid as earnest money, and the plaintiff undertook to get the deed of sale duly registered within one year and receive the remaining sale price, namely, Rs. 6,900. The following condition was entered in the agreement:—

"In case of breach of the agreement I will pay Rs. 1,000 as damages besides refunding earnest money. Moreover, I will be bound for specific performance of the contract. If the vendee breaks the agreement, he shall also be liable for payment of Rs. 1,000 as damages and the earnest-money will be forfeited. In case of breach of promise on my part the vendee shall be competent to recover the damages by means of a suit, and by compelling me for specific performance of the contract he will get a compulsory registration of the deed effected." From the above it is clear that a sale-deed was to be executed and completed by the 23rd April 1916; but no sale-deed, however, was executed in favour of the plaintiff, and, on the contrary, defendant No. 1, in October 1917, sold the property in dispute to defendants Nos. 2 and 3. Thereupon the present suit was instituted on the 29th October 1917, against Wadhawa Singh and the vendees, Jaugal Singh and Jiwan Singh. The plaintiff averred that the plaintiff had repeatedly requested defendant No. 1 to execute and complete the sale-deed in favour of the plaintiff, and to take the balance of the sale-money, but that defendant No. 1 always put it off on the pretext that he had no time; that, ultimately, on the 25th April 1916, he sent a notice to the plaintiff calling upon the latter to get the sale effected and have the sale-deed registered; that the said notice, dated the 25th April 1916, was received by the plaintiff on the 27th April 1916; that on the 28th April 1916 the plaintiff took the purchase-money to Lyallpur, but defendant No. 1 did not come; that the plaintiff remained there for three days continuously waiting for defendant No. 1, but he did not turn up; and that, finally, the plaintiff sent a notice to the defendant on the 1st May 1916 under a registered cover, and that in reply to the plaintiff's notice, defendant No. 1 sent a second notice dated the 23rd May 1916 by which the latter refused to perform the contract. It is also alleged in the plaint that a notice was sent by the plaintiff to defendants Nos. 2 and 3, informing them that defendant No. 1 had contracted to sell the property in dispute to the plaintiff and that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 would be liable to be sued in Court if they purchased the property in spite of the information given. On the above allegations the plaintiff claimed the specific performance of the contract and Rs. 1,000 as damages. The suit was resisted by defendant No. 1 on the allegations that a breach of contract was committed by the plaintiff himself; that the plaintiff being heavily indebted was unable to pay the purchase-money, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to the relief claimed owing to the long delay in bringing the claim.

Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 eventually pleaded ignorance of the agreement of sale between the plaintiff and defendant No. 1 and averred that the notice given by the plaintiff was received by them after the sale had been executed by Wadhawa Singh in their favour, and that the plaintiff was estopped by his long silence from claiming any relief against them.

The following issues were framed by the lower Court on the pleadings of the parties:—

(1) Was plaintiff ready to perform his part of contract, as incorporated in the agreement, dated 28th April 1915, and did defendant commit a breach with respect to it?

(2) Did defendants-vendees know about the existence of the prior contract to sell in favour of the plaintiff and did they, with this knowledge, obtain the sale in their favour?

(3) If Issues Nos. 1 and 2 are proved in plaintiffs' favour to what amount for damages, if any, is he entitled in addition to the relief for specific performance?

(4) Is plaintiff estopped from bringing the present claim by his long silence, if any?

(5) To what relief is the plaintiff entitled, and against which of the defendants?"

Upon all these issues the Trial Court found in favour of the plaintiff and against the defendants, with the result that the claim for specific performance has been decreed, but the claim for damages has been disallowed.

The vendees-defendants have preferred this appeal, but defendant No. 1, vendor, has remained quiet. Pandit Shoo Narain, Counsel for the appellant, has argued the case before us very fairly and has pressed all the points that can fairly be put forward. He has fairly admitted that the notices sent by the plaintiff had been received by his clients in time, and that it was not open to them to plead that they were bona fide purchaser without notice, and as such protected by the proviso attached to section 27 of the Specific Relief Act. The main contentions put forward by the learned Counsel are as follows:—

(1) that a sale-deed has not been executed in favour of the plaintiff owing to his own fault, and that he himself has been guilty of a breach of contract;

(2) that there has been considerable delay on the part of the plaintiff and the evidence in the case shows that the delay was of such a nature from which it ought to be inferred that the plaintiff had abandoned his claim under the agreement;

(3) that in any case having regard to the long delay in preferring his claim the Court, in the exercise of its discretionary power under section 22 of the Specific Relief Act, should refuse to grant specific performance in this case.

In support of the first contention the learned Counsel has relied upon the following circumstances, namely, that Wadhawa Singh sent the first notice on the 25th April 1916, and the plaintiff paid no attention to it, and that he sent the second notice dated the 23rd May 1916 to the plaintiff finally informing him that the contract between the parties would be considered to be at an end, and that the plaintiff had not even then moved in the matter.

On behalf of the plaintiff-respondent in reply to this contention it has been argued that on receipt of the notice of the 25th April 1916 the plaintiff, at once, proceeded to Lyallpur and there awaited the arrival of Wadhawa Singh, but he did not turn up; and that eventually on the 1st May a notice was sent by the plaintiff to Wadhawa Singh under a registered cover. The notice, however, is not forthcoming, nor has the plaintiff been able to produce a copy of it. He has, however, given evidence to prove that the notice was sent by him on the 1st May 1916. At page 6 of the paper book is to be found a copy of the Postal Registered Receipt No. 447, dated the 1st May 1916, marked as Exhibit P.9 in the following words:—

"Received a regd: P. C. addressed to Wadhawa Singh, Chak No. 159, R. B." At the same page is to be found a translation of a memo. for the receipt of a notice of Wadhawa Singh, dated the 5th May 1916, marked as Exhibit P-6. This is a note alleged to have been made by the plaintiff in his pocket-book on the 5th May 1916 after seeing the Post Office record of receipt by Wadhawa Singh.

Mohan Lal (P. W. No. 1) was called to depose as to receipt No. 447, Exhibit P. 9, and he made the following statements:—

"On No. 447 is record of a registered post card sent to Wadhawa Singh of Chak No. 159, Rakh Branch, acknowledgment due on 1st May 1916. Sunder's name is not mentioned as it is not required. I remember that Ghulam Mahomed, plaintiff, sent this notice. I have taken his house on rent and so I remember it."

Barkat Ram (P. W. No. 2), Sub-Post Master, Chak Jhumra, was called to depose to the circumstances under which the note, Exhibit P-6, was made in the pocket-book of the plaintiff. He stated that about seven months ago the plaintiff went to him making enquiry regarding a notice said to have been sent by him in May 1916, and that the plaintiff told him that the notice had been sent to Wadhawa Singh of Chak No. 159 R. B. The witness further stated that he inspected the village postman's book and told the plaintiff that his notice had been received by the addressee; that he did not give him a copy as it was not permissible under the rules, that there was a thumb impression of the addressee, Wadhawa Singh, on the postman's book, and that the plaintiff made a note in his pocket-book which the witness did not see. It is true that the postal receipt obtained by the plaintiff for the registered notice has not been produced as the plaintiff has lost it. It is also true that the original entries in the postal register have not been proved, because, admittedly, they have been destroyed under the Post Office Regulations, but if we can believe Mohan Lal (P. W. No. 1) and Barkat Ram (P. W. No. 2) there is sufficient evidence to prove that the plaintiff had sent the notice in reply to Wadhawa Singh's notice of the 25th April 1916. It is argued that it is difficult to believe that Mohan Lal, Sub-Post Master, should have retained in his memory the fact of the plaintiffs sending a notice to Wadhawa Singh so far back as 1st May 1916. The witness, however, has given reasons for remembering the incident stating that he had taken the plaintiff's house on rent, and that was the reason why he remembered the incident. There is nothing strange or unnatural in this, Mohan Lal being the Sub-Post Master and a tenant of the plaintiff; in all probability the plaintiff told him about the matter at the time, and thus the witness was able to retain this in his memory. We see no reason to disbelieve the evidence of Mohan Lal. The evidence of Barkat Ram, Sub-Post Master, as to the circumstances relating to the note made in the pocket-book also appears to be straightforward and convincing, and we are inclined to believe that in all probability the plaintiff had made a note of the entry as to the delivery of the notice to Wadhawa Singh, addressee. This fact is made quite clear by a reference to the contents of the notice of the 23rd of May admittedly sent by Wadhawa Singh to the plaintiff. Wadhawa Singh made the following assertions in the body of the notice:—

"When there was some time to complete the term given in the agreement, you gave me a notice. At that time you ought to have deposited the money in the Government Treasury or paid the same to us, you had given the notice so that you might not be liable for payment of Rs. 1,000. But you did not care about it. Now the time of your promise has expired. Now you should arrange for payment of Rs. 1,000. You should make the settlement with us about the land, etc., etc."

There is a clear admission of the notice being sent by the plaintiff. Objection has been taken by Pandit Sheo Narain as to the correctness of the translation of this notice of the 23rd May 1916, and it has been contended by him that for "you gave him notice" the translation ought to have been "I gave you notice." In the registered post card there is a word which is read by Pandit Sheo Narain as "tum ko," while Dr. Iqbal, for the plaintiff-respondent, reads it "mujhko." We have scrutinized the writing of the post card carefully, and have considered its contents, and we are unable to say that the translator has made a wrong translation. The translation fits in with general contents of the letter. In addition to this, there is a certain amount of oral evidence given on behalf of the defence to prove that the plaintiff had himself refused to purchase the land. To this effect is the evidence given by Sher Singh, who stated that in the first week of Baisakh he went to the plaintiff along with the vendor and saw him in his garden and that the plaintiff told them that he had no money and asked for the return of the earnest money. The witness is Wadhawa Singh's own brother. The land in question was leased to him. To the same effect is the evidence of Lahna Singh, son of Kishen Singh. He also stated that in the middle of Baisakh last he accompanied Wadhawa Singh to the plaintiff's baithak in the city, that Wadhawa Singh asked the plaintiff to pay the sale-money and get the sale registered, and that the plaintiff replied that he did not want to purchase the square and asked for the return of the earnest-money. Bhag Singh also made a similar statement and stated that he, too, had gone to the plaintiff's baithak with Wadhawa Singh and had heard the plaintiff saying that he had no money and would not like to purchase the land. This class of evidence is altogether worthless and cannot be believed for a moment. The rest of the evidence for the defence consists of depositions of witnesses who have come forward to prove the plaintiff's indebtedness. The plaintiff has not denied this fact and has admitted his indebtedness to the extent of Rs. 12,000 or Rs. 13,000. On the other hand, the evidence clearly shows that the plaintiff is the owner of at least five squares which is a very valuable property, and that he could easily raise the sum by mortgaging it.

The evidence of Ghulam Rasul (P. W. No. 6) makes it quite clear that he was ready to advance Rs. 7,000 on mortgage to the plaintiff. In fact, this witness went to Lyallpur on the 27th April 1916 with Rs. 7,000 for getting the mortgage executed in his favour, but as Wadhawa Singh did not come the money was kept in deposit with Diwan Dhanpat Shah at Lyallpur.

Ghulam Rasul (P. W. No. 12), son of the plaintiff, is a Barrister at Law practising at Lyallpur. He has proved the value of the square owned by the plaintiff, his father, and has made the following statement in his re-examination:—

"Income of the square which we would to mortgage to Ghulam Rasul (P. W.) in lieu of Rs. 7,000 was about Rs. 400 per annum as my father tells me, and the income of the other square intended to be mortgaged for Rs. 5,000 was Rs. 300 per annum. The income from the garden and the rest of three squares is about Rs. 700 per annum, and about Rs. 2,500 per annum respectively."

One of Wadhawa Singh's own witnesses, Mr. J. R. Khosla, Advocate, has stated that if plaintiff and his son mortgaged their squares to him, he would be ready to advance Rs. 20,000 to them. In addition to the above evidence, there is the evidence of Ghulam Ahmad Khan (P. W. No. 10) which also proves that Ghulam Rasul, his step-brother, was ready to take on mortgage one of the squares of the plaintiff for Rs. 7,000.

In our opinion, there is overwhelming evidence on the record to show that the plaintiff could pay the price of the property which Wadhawa Singh had promised to sell to him, and that it was quite easy for him to obtain funds by mortgaging a portion of his property. The evidence produced by the defendants is not sufficient to prove that the plaintiff had refused to purchase the land. On the other hand, there is a good deal of evidence for the plaintiff which goes to show that the plaintiff was ready to make the purchase.

As regards the second contention, there is no question but that delay may, in certain cases, be evidence of abandonment or acquiescence; but, on the other hand, delay which does not amount to waiver, abandonment or acquiescence and in no way alters the position of defendants, does not disentitle the plaintiff to sue for specific performance. This view is fully supported by authorities. See for example Kissen Gopal Salaney v. Kally Prosonno Sett (1). The learned Judge, who decided the above case, made the following observation in his judgment:—

reasonable belief that the right is foregone and the party, who acts upon the belief so induced and whose position is altered by this belief to his prejudice, may plead delay as an answer to a claim made against him. But, in my opinion, mere delay is not a sufficient reason for debarring the plaintiff from relief by way of specific performance.....

..... In my opinion delay is not material so long as matters remain in statu quo, and it does not mislead the defendant or amount to acquiescence. It must be shown that delay has prejudiced the defendant. To operate as a bar to relief the delay should be such as to amount to a waiver of the plaintiff's right by acquiescence, or where by his conduct or neglect he has, though perhaps not waiving that remedy, yet put the other party in a situation in which it would not be reasonable to place him, if the remedy were afterwards to be asserted."

The real question, therefore, which we have to decide in this case is, whether the delay on the part of the plaintiff is evidence of abandonment by him of his rights in the agreement or not. The evidence given by the defendants already referred to does not satisfy us that the plaintiff intended to abandon his rights. On the contrary, as we have already said, he had made preparations to make the purchase and for that purpose had gone to Lyallpur. In the face of direct evidence, we are not prepared to accept the contention of Pandit Sheo Narain that the delay of a year and six months in this case necessarily implied that the plaintiff had given up his intention of enforcing his rights under the agreement.

It has been feebly contended by Pandit Sheo Narain that time was of the essence of the contract in this case and the plaintiff having failed to have the sale completed before the date fixed, it was no more open to him to ask the defendant to execute the sale-deed in his favour. Here the learned Counsel was not able to show how the time was of the essence of the contract in this case. From the circumstances of the case it is not an illegitimate conclusion to draw that the defendant, Wadhawa Singh, himself had resiled from the agreement and was himself guilty of a breach of contract. The present case is fully covered by the rule laid down in

NORENDRA NATH DEY v. JOTISH CHANDRA PAL,
Chamarti Suryaprakasarayadu v. Arardhi Lakshminarasimhacharyulu (2) on which the lower Court has relied.

The third contention also raised by Pandit Sheo Narain cannot prevail. This contention is that, having regard to the long delay on the part of the plaintiff to bring the suit, we ought to refuse to grant the equitable relief claimed by him. The suit is within time, and the delay is not so great as to induce us to hold that the plaintiff has forfeited his right under the agreement.

We see no grounds to differ from the view taken by the lower Court. We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Malicious prosecution—Application for sanction to prosecute—Action for damages—Cause of action—Reasonable or probable cause, issue as to, stage at which, can be decided.

The maintainability of a suit for malicious prosecution does not depend on there having been a prosecution in the sense in which the term is used in the Code of Criminal Procedure. [p. 706, col. 1 & 2.]

Crowdy v. Reilly, 18 Ind. Cas. 737, 17 C. W. N. 554, 17 C. L. J. 105, relied upon.

An application for sanction to prosecute is a preliminary or initial stage in a criminal prosecution, and whether it is made, according to law, to a Civil or Criminal Court, it can prove the basis of an action for damages for malicious prosecution. Therefore, an allegation in the plaint in such an action that the defendant maliciously and without just, reasonable or probable cause instituted proceedings for sanction and that the plaintiff was obliged to defend the case is sufficient to disclose a cause of action. Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, 24 Pargannas, dated the 15th of September, 1919, affirming that of the Second Munsif at Baraset, dated the 27th of August 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Choudhury (with him Babu Satya Charan Sinha), for the Appellant.—The plaintiff is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for damages for malicious prosecution. Both Courts have dismissed the case. The facts briefly are these. I brought a suit for declaration of title against defendant and in support of my case I filed Letters of Administration in my favour. The defendant challenged it and the Court found that there were interpolations in the Letters. The defendant thereupon obtained sanction to prosecute me under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, which was ultimately set aside by this Court. Thereupon I have brought the present suit. The Courts below have held that my suit is not maintainable as there was reasonable or probable cause in their action. I submit the application for sanction to prosecute is quite enough to base my suit upon. Refers to Crowdy v. Reilly (1), Bishun Pergash v. Phulman Singh (2). I submit both Courts have gone wrong in throwing out my suit.

Babu Amarendranath Bose, for Babus Manmathanath Mukerjee and Nagendra Nath Bhattacharji, for the Respondents.—I submit the plaintiff could not establish any malice on my part. The Court found the Letters of Administration to contain interpolations. The Courts were satisfied of it and I submit that is sufficient to exculpate me of any malice. Further there was no prosecution at all. There must be prosecution in a Criminal Court before plaintiff can

JUDGMENT.

NEWBOLD, J.—The plaintiff who is the appellant before us instituted a suit against the defendant-respondent to recover damages for malicious prosecution. Both the lower Courts have dismissed the suits on findings against the plaintiff on preliminary issues as to his cause of action and the maintainability of the suit.

The main facts of the case as they appear from the pleadings of the parties are as follows: The appellant brought a title suit against the respondent and another person, and in that suit he filed Letters of Administration with copy of the Will annexed. The respondent alleged that there were interpolations in the copy of the Will and applied to the Munsif who tried the title suit for sanction under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, to prosecute the plaintiff under various sections of the Indian Penal Code. There was a good deal of litigation in connection with this application, and finally an order of sanction which had been passed by the District Judge on appeal was set aside by this Court in revision. After this order was passed the appellant brought the suit out of which this appeal arises claiming Rs. 494-8-0 damages for his expenses in the litigation arising out of the application for sanction to prosecute and also for pain of body and mind and injury to his reputation.

Both the lower Courts have fallen into error in considering the question of reasonable or probable cause at this stage of the case. That issue cannot be decided until after the plaintiff had adduced evidence in support of the allegations in his plaint. The only question now to be decided is the purely legal question whether the application to the Munsif for sanction to prosecute the appellant can prove the basis of an action for damages for malicious prosecution. As was pointed out in Crowdy v. Reilly (1) the maintainability of suit for malicious prosecution does not depend on there having been a prosecution in the sense in which the term is used in the Code of Criminal Procedure. The application for sanction was a preliminary or initial stage in a criminal prosecution and it is immaterial that this was done, as the law required, in a Civil and not in a Criminal Court. On behalf of the respondent reliance is placed on the decisions of this Court in the cases of De Rozario v. Gulab Chand Anundjee (3) and Golap Jan v. Bhola Nath (4). Both those cases have been distinguished and discussed in Bishun Fegash v. Phulman Singh (2) and they are distinguishable from the present case on the ground that in them no process issued on the plaintiff. We hold that in the present case the allegations in the plaint that the defendant maliciously and without just, reasonable or probable cause instituted proceedings for sanction, and that the plaintiff was obliged to defend the case, are sufficient to disclose a cause of action and consequently the plaintiff's case should not have been dismissed without giving him an opportunity to prove these allegations.

We accordingly decree this appeal. The decrees of the lower Courts are set aside and the case is remanded to the Munsif at Baraset Second Court for trial on the merits. The plaintiff-appellant will get his costs in this Court. He will also have hearing fees in the Courts below which we assess at three gold mohurs. Under section 13 of the Court Fees Act we direct that the amount of Court Fee paid on the memorandum of appeal presented to this Court be returned to the appellant.

sonal law—Non-Muhammadan of Delhi owning property in Bihar—Sale—Right of pre-emption.

The Muhammadan Law of pre-emption exists in certain parts of India as a lex loci where both Muhammadans and non-Muhammadans are entitled under it to claim the right of pre-emption. But nowhere has it been adopted as the personal law of non-Muhammadans, and thus is not carried outside the locality in which it obtains. Therefore, if a non-Muhammadan, who is by custom amenable to the law of pre-emption in a particular locality, is the owner of a property in another locality, where a similar custom exists, he is not amenable to the custom in the new locality, for, although it is a similar custom, it is not the same custom to which he has become amenable by reason of the fact that he is a native of or domiciled in a particular locality. Consequently, a non-Muhammadan of Delhi is not bound by the custom of pre-emption which exists in Bihar, although a custom of pre-emption exists also among non-Muhammadans of Delhi. In other words, the sale of property by a non-Muhammadan in Bihar does not give rise to a right of pre-emption if the vendor is not either a native of or domiciled in Bihar. Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Patna.

Messrs. Sultan Ahmad and Hasan Jan, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kulwant Sahai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

COURTS, J.—This is an appeal against a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Patna in a suit for pre-emption. The property which it was sought to pre-empt is in Patna City, the vendor is a Hindu who is a native of and resides in Delhi and the defendants are Muhammadans residing in Patna City. The suit was originally brought by one Hakim Abdul Majid who died during the course of the litigation and his widow has been substituted for him and is continuing the litigation.

The suit was decreed in the Court of first instance and on appeal this decree has been confirmed by the Subordinate Judge. The defendant has appealed to this Court.

It is admitted that if the vendor had been a Hindu who was a native of or domiciled in Bihar the plaintiff would have been entitled to succeed, but it is contended by Mr. Sultan Ahmad for the appellant that the owner of the property being a Hindu who is not either a native of or domiciled in Bihar the law of pre-emption does not apply. He also contends that, even if this were not so, and even if the original plaintiff were entitled to succeed, his widow would not be entitled to carry on the litigation. Two questions, therefore, arise in this appeal: (1) Is the plaintiff entitled to pre-empt when the vendor is a Hindu who is neither a resident of nor domiciled in Bihar? and (2) Is the widow of the original plaintiff entitled to carry on the suit after the death of her husband during the pendency of the suit?

In regard to the first point the law as stated in Wilson's Anglo-Muhammadan Law, Fifth Edition, 1921, at paragraph 352 is as follows: "Where the custom is judicially noticed as prevailing among non-Muhammadans in a certain local area it does not govern non-Muhammadans who, though holding land therein for the time being, are neither natives of, nor domiciled in the district." This was the view of the law as expressed in Huree Churn Surmah v. Mr. Thomas Ackroyd (1) and Byjnath Pershad v. Kopilmon Singh. (2) These decisions have been followed in Parsashth Nath Tewari v. Dhanai Ojha (3) and there can be no doubt that this is the correct view of the law.

Ordinarily, therefore, in a case such as the one now before us the owner, not being a native of, or domiciled in, Bihar the plaintiff would not be entitled to pre-empt. It is contended, however, by Mr. Kulwant Sahai for the respondent that, although this is so, the present case is different because the owner of the property which is the subject-matter of the suit is a native of Delhi where a custom of pre-emption also exists among non-Muhammadans. In these circumstances, he contends:—and this is the view which has been taken by the learned Subordinate Judge, that the law of pre-emption applies. His contention is that in localities where the custom exists it has become a part of the personal law of those non-Muhammadans who are natives of or domiciled there, that when such non-Muhammadans leave such locality they carry with them the custom so that in a case such as the one now before us, where the owner is a native of Delhi where the custom exists the custom applies also to property in Patna City of which he is owner. Mr. Kulwant Sahai relies in support of his contention on the following passage in Agarwala's Law of Pre-emption: "It is respectfully submitted that the whole question turns upon whether the Hindus of a particular locality adopted the law of pre-emption as part of their personal law or not [Agarwala's Law of Pre-emption, Third Edition, 1916, at paragraph 177 (6), page 218]; he also relies on a certain passage in the judgment of Glover, J., in the case of Eyjnath Pershad v. Kopylmon Singh (2) to which I shall presently refer.

With all respect to the opinion which has been expressed by Mr. Agarwala I am unable to accede to the suggestion that the Hindus of Bihar or other localities where the custom exists have adopted the law of pre-emption as part of their personal law and there is no judicial authority for such a proposition. As Mr. Ameer Ali has said: "The Sunni Hanafi Law of Pre-emption was introduced in India with the Muhammadan Government, and in certain places it has become a part of the lex loci, for example, in Behar, parts of the Punjab and the United Provinces, both Hindus and Muhammadans are entitled to claim the right of pre-emption. And so well-established is that right, that it is almost invariably recorded in greater or less detail in the village administration papers called the wajib ul-ars" (Ameer Ali's Muhammadan Law, Volume I, Fourth Edition, Chapter XXVIII, page 712). The passage on which Mr. Kulwant Sahai relies in the judgment of Glover, J., in the case of Eyjnath Pershad v. Kopylmon Singh (2) runs as follows: "And I think that in the present case the plaintiff was bound, in the first instance, to show that the vendor of the defendant, an inhabitant and native of Lower Bengal where no custom of pre-emption amongst Hindus existed, was subject to the rule of law prevailing amongst Hindus of Bihar, by reason of his being domiciled within that Province." Mr. Kulwant Sahai contends that by this the learned Judge meant that if the vendor in the case had been an inhabitant and a native of a locality where the custom of pre-emption amongst Hindus existed then he would have been subject to that rule of law in respect of the property owned by him in Bihar. This is an ingenious interpretation of the passage but I am unable to accept it as correct. The question was not before the learned Judges and they neither considered nor decided it; and it appears to me that, unless it be that the custom has been adopted as part of the personal law, the contention must fail. If the view were correct, a Hindu who was a native of Bihar and who owned property in Calcutta would be bound in respect of that property by the law of pre-emption but I know of no case in which this has been held nor have I ever heard it suggested that this is so. It seems to me clear that the law of pre-emption has not been adopted as the personal law of non-Muhammadans in Bihar or in the other localities where the custom exists, it is merely a lex loci, as Mr. Ameer Ali has said.

If this view then be correct it disposes of the whole question, because if the law of pre-emption is not part of the personal law of non-Muhammadans it is not carried outside the locality in which the custom prevails; and if a non-Muhammadan, who is by custom amenable to the law of pre-emption in a particular locality, is the owner of a property in another locality where a similar custom exists, he is not amenable to the custom in the new locality for, although it is a similar custom it is not the same custom to which he has become amenable, by reason of the fact that he is a native of or domiciled in a particular locality.

In the present case, therefore, the owner being a native of Delhi he is not bound by the custom which exists in Bihar even although there is a similar custom in Delhi. The appeal, therefore, succeeds on the first point which has been urged by Mr. Sultan Ahmad and it is unnecessary to discuss the other point. I would accordingly set aside the decision of the lower Appellate Court.

Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Faridpur, dated the 8th of March 1920, reversing that of the Munsif, First Court at Goalundo, dated the 15th of August 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Amarendra Nath Bose (with him Babu Sudhansu Sekhar Mukherji), for the Appellant.—I submit that the other side cannot bar an ejectment on any legal ground. Refers to Jogendra Narain Ray v. Kiran Chandra Ray (1). The law is the same in the Bengal Tenancy Act, see section 160 (c), Bengal Tenancy Act. But no reported case exactly on the point is available. As regards the meaning of the word khudkast, vide Mr. Sarada Charan Mitter's 'Landlords of Bengal' (latest Edition) at page 318. He is not a resident cultivator of all the plots, the plots are all distinct and separate.

Babu Biraimohan Mazumdar, for the Respondents.—The purchaser under Regulation, VIII of 1819, is not entitled to eject. See clause 3, and Field's Introduction to the Bengal Regulations at page 24, paragraph 20. Khud means own and kast means cultivator. Here these four plots constitute one holding. The Appellate Court came to a clear finding that my client is a khudkast or resident hereditary raiyyat. All that is necessary under section 11 of the Regulation is that he must be a resident cultivating raiyyat. In the khatian defendant is described as a settled raiyyat. Section 3, clause (9), of the Bengal Tenancy Act defines what a holding is. You cannot split up the holding now and say 'Walk out of one plot.' Jogendra Narain Ray v. Kiran Chandra Ray (1), is altogether a different case. It is sufficient if it is found that the raiyyat is a resident and cultivating raiyyat.

Babu Amarendra Nath Bose, in rep'y.—One may be a settled raiyyat without cultivating the land. The mere entry that he is a settled raiyyat will not make the defendant a settled raiyyat.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is the purchaser of a patni tenure and brought this suit to eject the principal defendant after service of notice under section 15 of the Patni Sale Regulation of 1819. The only question raised in this appeal is whether the defendant is protected from eviction under the proviso to section 11 of that Regulation on the ground that he is a khudkast raiyat or resident and hereditary cultivator. The lower Appellate Court has found that defendant No. 1 and his father were in khas possession of the culturable portion of the holding by cultivating the same through labourers. It is also found that the defendant's father took lease of the land and built his bari on a part of it about 30 years ago. On these findings which I must accept in second appeal I hold that the lower Appellate Court was right.

Khudkast raiyats are described in paragraph 20 of Field's Introduction to the Regulations as raiyyats cultivating lands in their own village or in village in which they are residing. On the findings the defendant comes within this description. It is urged that even if he is a khudkasi raiyat he can be ejected from that portion of the holding which is not actually cultivated by him; and in support of this contention reliance is placed on a decision of a Bench of this Court of which I was a member in the case of Jogendra Narain Ray v. Ktran Ohandra Ray (1). But that was quite a different case. Then the fourth Exception to section 37 of Revenue Sale Law (Act XI of 1859) had to be considered and not that part of it which deals with the cultivating *raiya*s. The fourth exception relates to land covered by buildings, etc. In section 11 of the Putni Sale Regulation a person who is a khudkasi raiyat is protected from ejection from the holding including the part he uses for residential purposes as well as the waste land and the land he cultivates.

I accordingly uphold the decision of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal.

The only respondents who appear are the minors represented by the Deputy Registrar of this Court whose costs have already been paid. I, therefore, make no order as to costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 105, 109—Matter neither raised nor decided in proceedings for settlement of rent—Jurisdiction of Civil Court—Resjudicata.

When a matter has been neither raised nor decided in proceedings for settlement of rent under section 105 read with section 105A of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the jurisdiction of a Civil Court to decide that matter is not barred constructively under section 109 of the Act on the analogy of the doctrine of constructive res judicata as laid down in section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Nawab Bahadur of Murshidabad v. Ahmad Hussain, 35 Ind. Cas. 1695; 21 C. W. N. 1004; 25 C. L. J. 556; 44 C. 783, relied upon.

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Shahabad.

Messrs. Kulwant Sahai and N. N. Sinha, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. N. Roy, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted by the respondent for abatement of rent under section 52 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The area of the plaintiff's holding according to the Jamabandi is 3 bighas 3 kathas and 16 dhurs, and the Jamabandi shows that the rent payable by the defendant in respect of this holding is Rs. 15-15-0. The Record of Rights, however, shows that the area in possession of the plaintiff is 2 bighas 3 kathas and 4 dhurs. The defendant applied under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for settlement of fair rent on the ground that there was a rise in the average local price of staple food crops. The Settlement Court gave effect to the contention of the landlord and settled the rent at Rs. 17-13-9. The plaintiff's suit was instituted subsequent to the settlement of rent by the Settlement Court and there is no allegation in the plaint that there has been any diminution in the area of the holding subsequent to the settlement of rent by the Settlement Court. The Courts below have given effect to the contention of the plaintiff and have allowed abatement accordingly.

Two questions have been urged by Mr. Kulwant Sahai on behalf of the appellant in this Court. First, that the judgment of the lower Appellate Court proceeds on a misapprehension in so far as it thought that the defendant did not deny the allegation of the plaintiff that the original settlement of the land was at Rs. 5 per bigha, and, secondly, that the present suit is not maintainable in view of the provisions of section 109 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

KESHO PRASAD SINGH v. BHAGWAT SARIN PANDE.

The first question arises in this way: The land was originally settled with the plaintiff by the Government and the Government subsequently sold their proprietary interest in the land to the Dumraon Raj. The plaintiff's case is that the original settlement was at the rate of Rs. 5 per bigha. The defendant contends that a consolidated rent of Rs. 15-15-0 was fixed for the holding in the possession of the defendant. It is obvious that if the defendant's case is right then the plaintiff is not entitled to any abatement of rent and the suit must accordingly fail. The question then is this, was the original settlement at the rate of Rs. 5 per bigha, or was a consolidated rent fixed in respect of the holding in possession of the defendant? The plaintiff undoubtedly alleged in the plaint that the original settlement was at the rate of Rs. 5 per bigha. The learned Judge in the Court of Appeal says that there was no denial of this allegation in the written statement. It appears, however, that there is a clear denial of the allegation in the written statement of the defendant. Mr. Kulwant Sahai has argued before me that this was a vital point in the case, and if there was any misapprehension in the mind of the Court I ought to remand the case to that Court for a decision of the point. I ought to mention that the Court of first instance came to the conclusion that the original settlement was a settlement at the rate of Rs. 5 per bigha. It was clearly the duty of the lower Appellate Court to dissent; the evidence bearing on this point and to come to a conclusion, not on the pleadings of the parties, but on the evidence adduced before the Court. The question then which I have to consider is, whether I ought to remand the case to the lower Appellate Court for a decision of this point, or whether in order to save a remand, I ought to determine the point in this Court. Only two witnesses have been examined in the case and there is no reason at all why I should not determine this point in this Court.

The witness examined on behalf of the plaintiff is definite on the point that the land was settled at the rate of Rs. 5 per bigha and he denies that there was a consolidated rent for the defendant's holding. The defendant examined a Patwari. In his examination-in-chief he did say that the Jama was a consolidated Jama but in cross-examination he had to admit that his knowledge was based on the Jamabandi of the plaintiff. He was not present at the time when the land was settled with the plaintiff by the Government, and obviously his evidence on this point is of no importance whatever. It was urged by Mr. Kulwant Sahai that the Jamabandi of the defendant itself constituted an important evidence in his favour. I am unable to agree with this contention. The Jamabandi in no sense binds the plaintiff and I am of opinion that the Court of first instance was right in coming to the conclusion that the land was settled with the defendant at the rate of Rs. 5 per bigha.

I now come to the next question, namely, whether the plaintiff's suit is barred by the provisions of section 109 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Now, the important point to remember in this connection is this: In those proceedings the defendant claimed an enhancement of rent on the ground that there was a rise in the average local price of the staple food crops. No question was raised by the plaintiff as to whether he was entitled to an abatement of rent under section 52 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Section 109 runs as follows:—"Subject to the provisions of section 109A"—We are not in this suit concerned with the applicability of section 109A—"a Civil Court shall not entertain any application or suit concerning any matter which is or has already been the subject of an application made, suit instituted or proceedings taken under sections 105 to 108, both inclusive." The critical question then is this: has this question, namely, the question whether the plaintiff is entitled to relief under section 52 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, been the subject of an application made, suit instituted or proceedings taken under sections 105 to 108, both inclusive? Admittedly it was not directly the subject of an application under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act; but it has been urged by Kulwant Sahai on behalf of the appellant that the question might or ought to have been raised by the plaintiff in the proceeding under section 105 and that accordingly we must assume that constructively it was the subject of an application made under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Fortunately for me, the question has been decided by two learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Nawab Bahadur of Murshidabad v. Ahmad Hussain (1). In that case the landlord applied for settlement of rent under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. No question was raised by the defendants as to whether they were mokarrari mawrahi raiyats or whether the land held by them was one tenure or distinct raiya holdings. The Settlement Court settled the rent on the footing that the land held by the tenants formed one tenure and that they were tenure-holders. In so doing they proceeded on the footing of the Record of Rights which had already been published. It was argued that the tenants should have raised the question in the proceeding under section 105 and that, not having done so, section 109 of that Act operated so as to prevent them from maintaining the action. The learned Judges dealt with the point argued before them as follows: "With regard to the alternative declaration, the appellants contend that as the questions for determination might have been made the subject of controversy in the proceedings under section 105, they cannot be investigated in the present suit. In our opinion, there is no force in this contention. Section 105A, no doubt, authorises the Settlement Officer in the course of proceedings under section 105, for the settlement of fair and equitable rent, to investigate questions which would otherwise be determined at the instance of the aggrieved party in a suit instituted under section 106. But in the case before us no such question was raised or investigated in the proceeding under section 105..... Consequently, on a plain and literal reading of section 109, the position cannot be maintained that the present suit concerns a matter which has already been the subject of an application under section 105. The appellant, however, urges us to put a wider construction upon section 109. He contends that, as in a case where section 11, Civil Procedure Code, is applicable, a question which might and should have been raised is deemed to have been raised and decided, we should hold under section 109 that a matter has been the subject of an application under section 105, whenever it might, if the defendant had so chosen, have been raised and decided under section 105 read with section 105A. We are of opinion that this contention is unsound. If we were to accept the construction put forward by the appellant, we should have to read into section 109 words which are not to be found there; we cannot hold, on the analogy of the doctrine of constructive res judicata, that the jurisdiction of the Civil Court has been constructively excluded even when a point has been neither raised nor decided under section 105 read with section 105A."

I respectfully endorse the view of the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court in the case already cited. To hold otherwise would be to say that the jurisdiction of the Civil Court is ousted not only when a matter had been the subject of an application made, suit instituted or proceedings taken under sections 105 to 108 both inclusive, but that it is also ousted where the matter might have, but was not, the subject of an application made, suit instituted or proceedings taken under those sections. In my opinion the decision of the learned Judge in the Court below is right and I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

First appeal from an order of the Second Additional Subordinate Judge, Aligarh, dated the 21st of June 1921.

JUDGMENT.

Ryves, J.—This is an appeal from an order of remand. Musammat Kulsoomunissa brought a suit in the Court of the Munsif to eject the defendant on the allegation that the defendant was a tenant of the house in which he lived under a registered lease executed by the predecessor-in-title of the defendant in favour of the husband of the plaintiff who was the Zemindar of the village. The lease was executed in the year 1887 and the plaintiff stated that from that date down till some four years before the suit, the original lessee and his successors had been paying rent according to the lease; that some four years ago the defendant joined a general conspiracy in the village and refused to pay further rent. The suit was for ejectment and for arrears of rent for three years. The defence to the suit was that the defendant had never executed any lease; that the house had been constructed for the defendant, who is a Brahman, by his clients and that he and his ancestors had been in possession for 100 years: that no rent had ever been paid and that possession had been adverse. Further, that the suit was barred because the notice required under section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act had not been duly given. On these pleadings the learned Munsif fixed five issues:—

1 Whether the plaintiff is the owner of the house in dispute and is she entitled to get possession?

2. Whether the defendant is the tenant of the plaintiff and is the plaintiff entitled to get rent and interest?

3. Whether the suit is barred by section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act?

4. Whether the defendant has acquired adverse possession? Who built the house in dispute?

5. Whether the suit is barred by limitation?

The plaintiff filed the original lease and a number of counterfoils and receipts of payment of rent. She also examined some five witnesses. The defendant summoned five witnesses and examined three of them and exempted the remaining two. The learned Munsif in a short but clear enough judgment came to the conclusion at which he arrived and decreed the suit. The defendant appealed. According to his memorandum of appeal he contested the findings of fact come to by the Trial Court. He pleaded that the evidence given on his behalf established his own defence. Nowhere was it suggested that the Court had not given him full opportunity of proving his case or that it excluded any evidence which he wished to produce. The learned Judge has not tried the appeal himself, that is to say, he has come to no conclusion on any single issue raised in the case. He says: "I think the issues do not clearly cover all the points raised." He objects to the learned Munsif having tried the issues together. He says: "I think there ought to be a clear and separate finding on each and every issue raised as required by law. I would set aside the decree, frame the following issues and send the case back for decision of each and every issue separately on the evidence on the record as well as on such other evidence which the parties may deem proper to adduce and for which an opportunity will be given to them." He then framed five issues. From this order of remand the plaintiff comes in appeal. On behalf of the respondent it is argued strenuously that no appeal lies. It is contended that this order of remand must be taken to have been made under section 107 read with section 99 of the Code and that under section 104, clause (1) an order under these sections is not appealable under O. XLIII. The learned Judge in making his remand does not say under what section he is passing his order. The point was considered recently by a Division Bench of this Court in the case of Gokul Prasad Har Prasad v. Ram Kumar (1) and I think that the observations of Mr. Justice Piggott from the bottom of page 975 to the top of page 976 should be followed. He says there: "I do not think there is any reason to hold that the learned Judge in this case thought he was exercising any inherent jurisdiction outside that given to him under O. XLI." I think that in fact the Judge thought that he was acting under O. XLI, r. 23. As I have said before, he does not decide any single issue in the appeal. He has come to the conclusion that the First Court had jumbled up the issues and apparently misconceived the real defence and has in fact misdirected itself in iudicio and that, therefore, there has never been any real trial of the case as the pleadings required. It seems to me this really is a finding on a preliminary point within the meaning of O. XLI, r. 23. In my opinion, therefore, an appeal does lie. On the merits it seems to me that the learned Judge should have tried the appeal, that the issues raised by the Munsif adequately represented the pleadings of the parties, and that no other issues were necessary for the trial of the case. As both parties had had full opportunity and had availed themselves of that opportunity of producing all the evidence that they wished, further evidence should not have been admitted. In my opinion the order of the Judge remanding the case was wrong. I would set it aside and direct that the appeal be restored to its original number and disposed of according to law.

*Pages of 19 A. L. J.—[Ed.].

WALSH, J.—I only wish to add this. With regard to the right of appeal I was a party to the case referred to by my brother and I agree that this case is analogous. In my view in the case of an order of remand, it must be presumed, unless the contrary is shown at the time when it is made, to be made under O. XLI, r. 23. The litigant has to make up his mind whether he has a right of appeal and if so what, and if he finds an order against him of remand that he objects to, like the order before us, and there is nothing to the contrary, the only inference that he can draw is that it is made under the statutory provisions contained in O. XLI, r. 23. An order may be made under that section and yet be wrongly made, but it would nonetheless be appealable, and personally I am not prepared to adopt the view that once an appeal has been filed and admitted in this Court as an appeal against an order of remand under that provision and notice has gone, the respondent can improve his position by satisfying the Court that the order complained of is so bad or so unintelligible that it is impossible to bring it under any provision and, therefore, it is not appealable at all. I think that this is the substantial answer to what Mr. Panna Lal calls his preliminary objection. It is not a preliminary objection. The order was prima facie appealable as a remand order. It does not make it less appealable to say that the order is an indefensible one. Costs must abide the result of the suit.

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Burdwan, dated the 12th of November 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, Asansol, dated the 14th of December 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu D. N. Chakraborty (with him Babu Gopal Chandra Das), for the Appellants.—The facts are shortly these. We entered into three contracts for the purchase of steam coal and rubble on the 20th, 25th December 1916 and 2nd January 1917 respectively. We made payments of Rs. 152-8 0 and Rs. 5-0 0 on the last two dates which were to remain in deposit with the defendants which would be eventually credited against the final order. The defendants sued for damages for the last two contracts but the suits were dismissed. We also brought the present suit for the recovery of the money in deposit. Our suit was decreed by the First Court but has been dismissed on appeal. Hence the present appeal against that decision. My points are that we are not at all liable for not placing our orders under the last two contracts because the defendants themselves failed to deliver coal under the first contract. The Government stopped the waggons. Further, the performance of the last two contracts was conditional upon the due performance of the first contract. Refers to Howe v. Smith (1). There is no statutory provision as to the retaining of the deposit money by the vendor. They have not suffered any loss or damage whatsoever. On principles of equity and justice they should not make this additional gain. Further, there is no clause of forfeiture in the contracts. They could have sent a notice that the money would be forfeited on non-fulfilment of the contract. Refers to Roshan Lal v. Delhi Cloth and General Mills Co. Limited (2), Alokeshi Dassi v. Hara Chand Dass (3). They admittedly were not willing to perform their part of the contract and their defence practically amounts to a justification for repudiation of the contracts. Under the circumstances I submit the decree of the Court of first instance ought to be restored.

Babu Monmatha Nath Mukerjee (with him Babu Satindra Nath Mukerjee), for the Respondent.—The two payments were made by way of deposit. The findings of the lower Appellate Court conclude the matter. Whether it was part payment or earnest money depends on the intention of the parties. The stipulation that the amount would be deducted on the fulfilment of the contract clearly shows that it was by way of deposit. Refers to section 75 of the Indian Contract Act. That money I received independently of the contract because I would have derived no benefit on the fulfilment of the contracts. The question of the payment of the earnest money has not been dealt with in the Indian Contract Act. On the findings, justice is not on his side. Principles of English Law do not apply. The case in Natesa Aiyar v. Appavu Padayachi (4) is distinguishable. The earnest-money is, no doubt, referable to the contract but is not under the contract itself. I derive no benefit from the deposit on the fulfilment of the contract. Refers to Ramfry's Sale of Goods (Tagore Law Lectures, 1910) p. 127. My submission is that the Indian Contract Act will not apply at all.

[CHATTERJEA, J.—Look at Manian Patter v. Madras Railway Company. (5)].

There they hold that although section 74 of the Contract Act would not apply, the principle laid down in that section would apply. Refers to Roshan Lal v. Delhi Cloth and General Mills Co. Limited (2). On their own admission it is a case of repudiation. The case in Raghu Nath Sahay v. Chandra Pratap Singh (6) is of no help to the present case. Refers to Habibullah v. Arman Dewan (7). The Subordinate Judge found that the money paid was earnest money and not part payment and that there was a repudiation of the contract. I submit these findings are conclusive.

Babu D. N. Chakerbuitty replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants agreed to purchase certain quantities of steam coal and rubble from the respondent under three several contracts dated the 20th December 1916, 25th December 1916 and 2nd January 1917 respectively. At the time of entering into the two last named contracts the appellants paid to the respondent the respective sums of Rs. 152-8-0 and Rs. 520, the agreement being that those amounts were to remain in deposit with the respondent, they paying cash for the earlier orders to be given under the contracts, and the deposits being eventually credited as payments or part payments against the final order.

In regard to the last two contracts the respondent sued to recover damages but the suits were dismissed on the finding that in the state of the market he had suffered no damage. The appellants also sued for the recovery of the two sums mentioned above, namely, Rs. 152-8-0 and Rs. 520 and it is with these that we are concerned in the present appeal. The first Court decreed the amount, and the lower Appellate Court has reversed that decree and dismissed the suit.

Various contentions were put forward by the appellants. Firstly, that it was in consequence of the default of the respondent in respect of the deliveries under the first contract that they failed to place orders under the other two contracts. Secondly, that the supply of waggons was stopped by Government, and, thirdly, that the performance of the last two contracts was conditional upon the due performance of the first on the part of the respondent. It is, however, found by the lower Appellate Court that there is not sufficient evidence of the interdependence of the contracts in the way alleged; it is also found that there is not sufficient evidence as regards the stoppage of waggons: that the appellants were dissatisfied with the respondent and did not act and were not willing to act according to the contracts; and, that, in these circumstances, it must be held that the contracts were broken by the appellants.

The question, therefore, is whether under these circumstances the plaintiffs are entitled to a refund of the deposit.

So far as the English Law is concerned, the law is well-settled. As pointed out by Lord Macnaghten in Soper v. Arnold (8):—"The deposit serves two purposes—if the purchase is carried out it goes against the purchase-money but its primary purpose is this, it is a guarantee that the purchaser means business." In the case of Barrell, Ex parte, Parnell, In re (9) it was held that where a contract for sale goes off for default of the purchaser the vendor is entitled to retain the deposit: James, L. J., remarked that the money was paid to the vendor as a guarantee that the contract should be performed: the trustee refuses to perform the contract, and then says "give me back the deposit,"—there is no ground for such a claim. Mellish, L. J., said: "It appears to me clear that, even when there is no clause in the contract as to the forfeiture of the deposit, if the purchaser repudiates the contract he cannot get back the money as the contract has gone off through his default." In Collins v. Stimson (10) Baron Pollock said: "According to the law of vendor and purchaser the inference is that such a deposit is paid as a guarantee for the performance of the contract and where the contract goes off by default of the purchaser the vendor is entitled to retain the deposit," and in Palmer v. Temple (11) it was held that "in the absence of any specific provision the question whether the deposit is forfeited depends on the intent of the parties to be collected from the whole instrument."

The question was discussed in Howe v. Smith (1) where Fry, L. J., traced the history of earnest and deposit and at page 101 observed:—

"Money paid as a deposit must, I conceive, be paid on some terms implied or expressed. In this case no terms are expressed, and we must, therefore, inquire what terms are to be implied. The terms must naturally to be implied appear to me in the case of money paid on the signing of a contract to be that in the event of the contract being performed it shall be brought into account, but if the contract is not performed by the payer it shall remain the property of the payee. It is not merely a part payment but is then also an earnest to bind the bargain so entered into, and creates by the fear of its forfeiture a motive in the payer to perform the rest of the contract."

The rule was approved by the Judicial Committee in Sprague v. Booth (12).

The principle has been followed in this country, see Bishan Ohand v. Radha Kishan Das (13), Roshan Lal v. Delhi Cloth and General Mills Co Limited (2), Raghu Nath Sahay v. Ohandra Protap Singh (6), (express agreement for refund of the deposit) Habibullah v. Arman Dewan (7), Natesa Aiyar v. Appavu Padayachi (4) (express agreement for forfeiture of the deposit).

It is contended, however, on behalf of the appellant that the rule is not an inflexible one, that in the absence of any statutory provisions on the point we should decide the case according to the principles of justice, equity and good conscience, and that as the defendant had not suffered any loss, he should not be allowed to make a gain by retaining the deposit. We were referred to the observations of Cotton, L. J. in Howe v. Smith (1) in support of the contention. In that case Cotton, L. J. observed as follows:—

"I do not say that in all cases where this Court would refuse specific performance, the vendor ought to be entitled to retain the deposit. It may well be that there may be circumstances which would justify this Court in declining, and which would require the Court, according to its ordinary rules, to refuse to order specific performance, in which it could not be said that the purchaser had repudiated the contract or that he had entirely put an end to it so as to enable the vendor to retain the deposit. In order to enable the vendor so to act, in my opinion, there must be acts on the part of the purchaser which not only amount to delay sufficient to deprive him of the equitable remedy of specific performance, but which would make his conduct amount to a repudiation on his part of the contract."

There is no doubt that it is not in every case of default on the part of the purchaser, that the vendor is entitled to retain the deposit, but the observations of Cotton, L. J., apply to cases where there is a suit for specific performance of a contract and there is no repudiation on the part of the purchaser. In the case of Alokeshi Dassi v. Hara Chand Dass (3), which was also relied upon by the appellants, the learned Judges observed:—"It is admitted that there is nothing either in the Specific Relief Act or in the Contract Act which touches the question. We have, therefore, to consider what is just and equitable and may fairly consider the law in England upon the subject," and referred to the observations of Cotton, L. J. in Howe v. Smith (1) quoted above. In the case of Alokeshi Dassi v. Hara Chand Dass (3), however, the defendant denied the contract in toto, and it was found that there was no repudiation of the contract by the plaintiff who brought the suit for specific performance of the contract and it was held that he was entitled to a refund of the deposit. We have not been referred to any case in which the plaintiff has been held entitled to refund of the deposit money even where there was repudiation of the contract on his part. In the present case the appellants were dissatisfied with the dealings of the respondent under the first contract, and they accordingly did not place any orders under the second and third contracts. They admittedly were not willing to perform their part of the contracts and their defence practically amounts to a justification for repudiation of the contracts. The findings of the Court of Appeal below, however, are against them.

It may be hard that the plaintiffs should forfeit the deposit although the defendant did not suffer any loss, but having regard to the findings arrived at by the Court of Appeal below, and to the authorities on the point, we feel constrained to dismiss the appeal. We direct, however, that each party do bear his own costs in all the Courts.

Where in execution of a decree for a sum over Rs. 500, an order is passed in respect of a sum less than Rs. 500, the order is open to second appeal. [p. 719, col. 1.]

The provisions of section 15 of the Redemption of Mortgages (Punjab) Act, 1913, are meant primarily for the protection of the person depositing the money. The intention of the Legislature was that the money deposited under the provisions of this Act should be exempt from attachment in execution of a decree against the depositor. But as soon as the money has become the property of the mortgagee there is nothing to prevent its being attached in execution of a decree against the latter. [p. 719, cols. 1 & 2.]

Miscellaneous second appeal from an order of the District Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 14th March 1919, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Ferozepore, dated the 20th July 1918.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant, Mohna Mal, held a decree against Tulsi Ram, etc., for Rs. 4,779-9-0. This decree had been passed by a Subordinate Judge. In the course of executing this decree Mohna Mal attached a sum of Rs. 240 which had been deposited in the Court of the Revenue Assistant, under the provisions of Act II of 1913, by Miran Bakhsh who desired to redeem the land mortgaged by him to Tulsi Ram, etc. It appears that the mortgage had been redeemed and Miran Bakhsh had been given possession of the mortgaged property. Objection was taken by Tulsei Ram, etc., to the effect that this money was not attachable in view of the provisions of section 15 of Act II of 1913. This objection was given effect to by the Executing Court whose decision was upheld on appeal by the District Judge. Mohna Mal then preferred a second appeal to this Court through Mr. Fakir Chand which came up before Rattigan, J., on the 10th July 1919. Objection was taken on behalf of the respondents that no second appeal was competent as the order refusing attachment of the sum of Rs. 240 must be taken to be a decree in a Small Cause of a value under Rs. 500. Rattigan, J., by an order, dated 11th July 1919, referred the case to a Division Bench for decision both as to the competency of the second appeal and on the question whether the sum of Rs. 240 referred to was liable to attachment.

Before us the appellant has been represented by Mr. Fakir Chand. The respondents though served are absent, their former Vakil, Mr. Durga Das, having sent in a withdrawal slip. After hearing Mr. Fakir Chand we are of opinion that a second appeal is competent and that the sum of Rs. 240 in question is liable to attachment. In Khasan Singh v. Khushal Singh (1) it was held by Reid, J., that where an appeal from the decree in the original suit lay to the Divisional Court, the appeal from an order in execution of that decree lay to the same Court. This view is further supported by a decision of the Madras High Court in Mavula Ammal v. Mavula Maracoir (2), where it was held that in determining whether second appeal lies in such cases in execution proceedings, the amount of the subject-matter of the suit and not the amount sought to be recovered in execution must be taken into consideration. With this view we are in accord. Further, the execution proceedings were being taken in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, and an appeal from an order passed by a Subordinate Judge would lie under section 39 (1) (a) of the Punjab Courts Act to the District Judge, and in fact the appeal in this case was lodged in the Court of the District Judge. A second appeal is, therefore, competent.

Coming now to the second point, it seems to us that the provisions of section 15 of Act II of 1913 are primarily for the protection of the person depositing the money, and that the intention of the Legislature was that the money deposited under the provisions of this Act should be exempt from attachment in execution of a decree against the depositor. In the present case, the depositor, Miran Baksh, had had his mortgage redeemed and had been given possession of his property. The money thus belonged to Tulsei Ram, etc., and we are unable to see any reason for thinking that it was not attachable as such.

We accordingly accept this appeal with costs and declare that the sum of Rs. 240 in question is liable to attachment in the decree passed in Mohna Mal's favour.

A covenant in a lease offends against the Rule of Perpetuity, when it provides that, if the lessee or any of his representatives intend to transfer the whole or any portion of the lease, the transfer would be made in favour of the lessors for proper price and that the lessee would not be able to transfer in favour of a third party without the lessor's permission or wishes. FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Avinash Chandra Guha, for the Appellant.—The covenant not to transfer without satisfying the conditions contained in the agreement is bad for remoteness. Even if the covenant were a good one, it cannot be a covenant running with the land, and, consequently, it cannot be enforced against one who is an assignee of the lessee who entered into the agreement. Refers to Nobin Chandra Soot v. Nabab Ali (1).

Babu Mohendra Nath Roy (with him Babu Nilkanta Ghose), for the Respondents.—Reads Haris Paik v. Jahuruddi Gazi (2). A covenant in respect of a right of pre-emption does not offend against the rule against perpetuities and runs with the land. See Madhu Sudan Mahato v. Midnapore Zemindari Co. (3). See also section 179 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. A perpetual right of pre-emption is not bad for remoteness. See Karim Bakhsh Khan v. Phula Bibi (4). That case has been followed in Bahadur Singh v. Ram Singh (5). The case in Nobin Chandra Soot v. Nabab Ali (1) is distinguishable. Reads section 10 of the Transfer of Property Act.

Babu Avinash Chandra Guha was not called upon to reply.

Babu Biraj Mohan Mojumdar, for the Deputy Registrar.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal arising out of a suit brought for a declaration that a certain habala in favour of defendant No. 7, who is the contesting defendant, and executed by defendants Nos. 1 to 6 in 1323 is invalid, and that the same should be set aside.

The First Court decreed the suit against defendants Nos. 1 to 7 and on appeal it was held that the appeal failed. We should also mention that, besides the prayer for a declaration, the plaint also asked for a specific performance of a contract for sale.

Before us, in appeal by defendant No. 7, three points have been urged. First of all, that the covenant is fraudulent as referred to in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, namely, that if the lessee or any of his representatives intend to transfer the whole or any portion of the lease, the transfer would be made in favour of the lessors for proper price, that the lessee would not be able to transfer in favour of a third party without lessor's permission or wishes, that in the case of transfer to a co-sharer of the lessee, lessor's permission would not be necessary, that in case of any act against the aforesaid conditions, the said act would be invalid.

It was contended that this covenant was bad as offending against the Rule regarding Perpetuity. Secondly, if the covenant were a good one, it is not a covenant running with the land, and thirdly, in any event, it could not be enforced against the appellant as he was an assignee of the lessee who entered into the covenant. It is unnecessary to consider the second and the third of these grounds, for, we think the appeal succeeds upon the first ground. We have been invited to consider in this connection certain cases which have been decided by the Allahabad High Court upon the law of pre-emption. It is not clear whether the cases are relevant but, in any event, as it is observed, these cases of pre-emption stand on their own peculiar law. In the present case we think it is clear that the covenant offends against the Rule of Perpetuity, and the appeal succeeds and the suit is dismissed with costs.

The defendant No. 7 will be entitled to his costs from the plaintiffs in the First Court, and in the lower Appellate Court and he is entitled to his costs in this Court as against the plaintiffs-respondents.

Several persons were convicted under section 147 of the Penal Code of rioting with a view to attacking and obstructing the Police in the discharge of their duties and were also convicted under section 333 of the Code of the substantive offence of so attacking and obstructing them:

Held, that both convictions could not stand and that the conviction under section 147 must be set aside [p. 722, col. 1]

Although it has to be presumed under section 114 illustration (e) of the Evidence Act that every official act is properly performed, yet this presumption is hardly sufficient to satisfy a Court that such precautions have been taken at an identification as to render it truly valuable. Appeal from an order of the District Magistrate, Gurgaon, dated the 10th September 1921.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Seven men have been convicted under sections 147, 149/333 and 149/225 and six out of the seven appeal.

The facts are that on the 8th of June 1921, two Sub-Inspectors, Muhammad Masih and Nawab Ali accompanied by four Policemen and a man, Panji, who was under arrest, came to the village of Bhuriaki in the Gurgaon District to carry out some searches for stolen property. Three houses were searched and Sub-Inspector Nawab Ali was seated on a charpoy holding the chain on Panji's handcuffs when a mob attacked him and beat him severely with lathis and sticks, Sub-Inspector Muhammad Masih, tried to come to his assistance, but the Police were overwhelmed and severely beaten, Sub-Inspector Nawab Ali having his arm broken and having to be carried away on a charpoy. The reason for the attack is said to have been that the Sub-Inspector, Nawab Ali was extremely unpopular in the village on account of his having secured the conviction of four of the people who attacked him and it is found by the Magistrate that the common object was to stop the Police from continually visiting the village and interfering with the criminal activities of the inhabitants as well as to revenge themselves for what had happened in the past. The only question which presents considerable difficulty to my mind is as to who actually took part in the assault. It appears that the village was wholly deserted after the incident and it was not till the 11th, or 3 days later, that the first witness appeared and named six out of the seven men who have been convicted, that is to say, he named all except Badhi. The Sub-Inspector had recovered his wits sufficiently on the same day to be able to make a statement and, knowing the village as he did, he named all the present accused. Two days later two more witnesses appeared on the scene. The accused have been chiefly convicted on an identification parade which was held by Inspector Abdul Jalil, P. W. No. 26, the facts of which he incorporated in the three statements shown as P.O., P.P. and P.Q. This Inspector has been produced as a witness, but, although he does say that he prepared the lists, he does not say, and was apparently not asked, whether they contain a full and true account of what actually happened and that he can vouch for their correctness; nor was he asked to explain what precautions, if any, were taken at the time of the identification. No doubt it has to be presumed under section 114 of the Evidence Act that every official act is properly performed, but this presumption is hardly sufficient to satisfy a Court that such precautions have been taken as to render an identification truly valuable, for instance, it depends very largely on whether 30 men or three are added to the accused and whether care is taken to see that they are all similarly dressed and that there is no possibility of the witnesses being able to select the accused by any possible means of identification. The report written by the Inspector states that all proper precautions were taken but, in the first place, he does not repeat this in Court and, in the second, it is for the Court to decide the question of the sufficiency of the precautions taken and the consequent value of the evidence of identification and not for the Inspector. One of the constables states in Court that he identified five out of the six men who are now appealing and says that he did not identify Akbar. As a matter of fact, the identification report shows that he did not identify Chahat. He does not state, and he was asked, whether he actually identified them and could remember at the time he gave his evidence; and the necessity of putting this question to other witnesses also was overlooked. As to three of the men, there is no sort of doubt whatever that they took a very active and leading part in the assault on the Police and these are Chahat, Chatar Khan and Kallu. They were specially recognised by the two Sub-Inspectors, and there is no question of their guilt. As to the remaining three I am not satisfied as to their identity. The evidence of their fellow villagers was given after the lapse of several days. I do not know what value to attach to the identification nor what precautions were taken at the time and, under the circumstances, I am not prepared to uphold their conviction. The seventh man, Ashraf, has been convicted under section 147 only and has been ordered to give security under section 162. I can find no sort of reason on the record why he should have been convicted at all of any offense. Present he doubtless was in his village, but this is no offense, and it is clear to my mind that he took no part in the affray and indeed the District Magistrate has apparently convicted him for being an enemy rather than for acting as such. I, therefore, take cognizance of his case on revision, set aside the conviction and acquit him.

As to three guilty men it has to be seen what offense they have committed. They have been convicted of rioting with a view to attacking the Police and obstructing them in the discharge of their duties and have also been convicted of the substantive offence of so attacking them and obstructing them. The two convictions cannot, in my opinion, stand, and I, therefore, set aside the conviction under section 147 and maintain that under section 333. In addition to this they have been convicted under section 225 because, as a result of their attack upon the Police, the man Panji escaped from custody or rather ceased to be in custody and proceeded to give himself up again as soon as possible. The attack on the Police was not made with a view to freeing Panji nor have the accused any interest whatever in him and, therefore, the convictions under this section are, in my opinion, also bad, and I set them aside. The sentences awarded under section 333 are seven years' rigorous imprisonment. These are, I think, somewhat excessive although the offense is doubtless very serious and has to be severely punished. At the time the attack was made upon the Police it appears to have been a spontaneous and sudden outbreak, and the circumstances are certainly not as serious as they might be where an offense is committed under this section. I, therefore, accept the appeal of these three men in so far as to reduce their sentences under section 333 to four years' rigorous imprisonment each without any solitary confinement.

Arms Act (XI of 1878), s. 19—Marriage procession—Public assemblage—Carrying gun without license—Offence.

Accused was convicted under section 19 of the Arms Act for carrying a gun in a marriage procession. Under the terms of the license, the licensee was forbidden to take the gun to a public assemblage, and it was contended that a marriage procession was not such an assemblage:

Held, that the conviction was justified, as the marriage procession was a public assemblage, because the moment such a procession emerges from private premises and goes down the public street, it is open to the public to join the procession, and the procession becomes a public assemblage, [p. 722, col. 1.]

TARA CHAND V. EMPEROR.

Application for revision of the order of the First Class Magistrate, Yeola.

Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—This is an application in revision made by the petitioner who was convicted by the First Class Magistrate of Yeola under section 19 of the Indian Arms Act which provides a penalty for the offence of going armed in contravention of the provisions of section 13. Section 13 directs that no person shall go armed with any arms except under a license and to the extent and in the manner permitted thereby.

The accused is not a licensee, but his cousin handed over the gun for which he held a license to the accused while proceeding in a marriage procession. The accused fired some shots during the procession, with the result that some persons were accidentally injured. It is contended that the license permitted the licensee to go armed in the marriage procession. Clause 4 of the license reads as follows:—

"The licensee or any retainer acting under this license shall not go armed with any arms covered thereby otherwise than in good faith for the purpose of sport, protection or display, and save where he is specially authorised in this behalf in any Presidency town or Rangoon by the Commissioner of Police or in any other place by the District Magistrate or Sub-Divisional Magistrate specially empowered by the Local Government to grant licenses, he shall not take any such arms to a fair, religious procession or other public assemblage."

The argument is that a marriage procession is not a public assemblage, but it is clear from the terms of the clause that a religious procession is considered a public assemblage, and, therefore, the suggestion that because a procession only consists of persons of a particular persuasion, or of persons invited to a particular ceremony, it is not a public assemblage, cannot be accepted. When a marriage procession emerges from private premises and goes down the public street, then it is open to the public to join the procession, and the marriage procession becomes a public assemblage. It seems to me, therefore, that the Magistrate was right in convicting the petitioner under section 19 of the Indian Arms Act. The application is rejected.

SHAH, J.—I agree. It may be that on this particular occasion the gun was taken by the applicant merely for the purpose of display but even then I think that under the terms of the license, unless he is specially authorised, he is prevented from using it even for that purpose in a public assemblage. It may be that this was quite innocently done for mere display as it is sometimes done: but whether that is in accordance with the terms of a particular license or not, must be decided when the point is raised. It is clear on the terms of this license that he could not do it in a marriage procession which was in the nature of a public assemblage without contravening the terms of the license.

"Such Court" meaning of—Court of Subordinate Judge, whether permanent Court.*

The use of the words "such Court" in section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code makes it clear that the Court empowered to take action under that section is the same Court before which the offence has been committed or under whose notice the offence has been brought in the course of a judicial proceeding. [p. 724, col. 1.]

The Court of a Subordinate Judge is a permanent Court. Therefore, a Subordinate Judge is competent to continue an enquiry under section 476 begun by his predecessor. [p. 724, col. 1.]

CHHIDDA v. EMPEROR.

Judge and Magistrate, First Class, Amritsar, dated the 5th November 1920.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The question in this application for revision is whether Sheikh Ali Muhammad, Subordinate Judge of Amritsar, is competent to continue an inquiry under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, commenced by his predecessor, Lala Suraj Narain, regarding an alleged resistance by Tara Chand to the execution of a decree.

It is clear from the use of the word "such Court" in section 476 that the Court empowered to take action under that section is the same Court before which the offence has been committed or under whose notice the offence has been brought in the course of a judicial proceeding, and Mr. Shamair Chand on behalf of the petitioner contends that the Court of Sheikh Ali Muhammad is not identical with the Court of Lala Suraj Narain, relying on Muhammad Ishaq v. Muqim-ud-din (1). In that case Beadon, J., applying to the Court of a Subordinate Judge the same argument which Plowden, J., had applied in Phana Singh v. Empress (2) to the Court of a Magistrate of the First Class, held that the Court of a Subordinate Judge was not a permanent Court with a perpetual succession of Judges, and that the Court presided over by any particular Subordinate Judge was not identical with the Court presided over by the Judge who succeeded him. With all respect I venture to differ from this view. It is true that there may be more than one Subordinate Judge in a district, as there is in Amritsar, and that the Court of one of the Judges might at any time cease to exist if he were transferred and no one sent to replace him, the work of his Court being made over to the Court of another Judge. But I cannot see how the fact that the Court is not a permanency, but may at any time be abolished, affects the question. The theory that every time one Subordinate Judge is transferred and another takes his place the Court over which the former presided ceases to exist and a new Court is created, appears to me very far-fetched.

(2) 25 P. R. 1889 Cr.

In my opinion the Court of Sheikh Ali Muhammad is identical with the Court of Lala Suraj Narain, whom he succeeded. I hold, therefore, that he is competent to continue the inquiry begun by his predecessor, and I dismiss this application.

Murder—Accused seen last with the deceased—No direct or circumstantial evidence—Acquittal.

Accused was charged with murder and the only evidence against him was that he was seen last in the company of the deceased at about 8 o'clock in the night and, that when the body of the deceased was discovered the next morning, he was unable to give any explanation about the cause of the death:

Held, that in the absence of other evidence, circumstantial or direct, tending to show that he was concerned in the crime, the accused was entitled to an acquittal. [p. 726, col. 2.]

Criminal appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Bulandshahr.

Mr. S. N. Varma, for the Appellant.

Mr. Lalit Mohan Banerji, (Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant in this case is a chamar named Ohhidda whose age is given as thirty years. He has been convicted in the Court of the Sessions Judge of Bulandshahr on a charge of having murdered Ram Prasad on the night of the 7th-8th December 1921.

Several other accused were put on their trial in the Sessions Court along with the appellant Ohhidda. These, however, were acquitted.

The deceased man, Ram Prasad, lived in the same village as the accused, namely, the village of Dhakar, which appears to be a place of considerable size situated close to the town of Khurja.

CHHIDDA v. EMPEROR.

Ram Prasad was a Brahman and a number of witnesses in the case describe him as having been a man likely to give trouble in the village. They speak of him as having been sarkash (aggressive).

Briefly put, the story for the prosecution is that late in the evening of the 7th of December 1921 Ram Prasad left the village with the accused Chhidda. It is stated by Ram Prasad's mother that Chhidda took Ram Prasad away on the pretext of cutting some Babul trees near the Canal Distributary.

Ram Prasad was never seen alive again. Early the next morning his dead body was found on the Railway line which runs at some little distance from the village. The body had been laid across the rails and had been cut right in two by a passing train.

There is no evidence on the record to show who was the first person who made this discovery. We find, however, by a reference to the papers in the case that the body was discovered by a pointsman, named Balmakund, who has not been called as a witness. The discovery was made in the very early hours of the morning and the Station Master apparently made a report to his superior officer, saying that a man had been run over.

The mother of the deceased man is a woman named Musammât Chandania, and from her evidence it appears that when her son failed to return on the night of the 7th of December last, she became alarmed. She went to the house of the headman, Dabi Singh, who instructed her to go and ask the accused Chhidda what had happened to Ram Prasad. Her story is that she went to Chhidda at about midnight and that the latter told her that he had parted company with her son and that he must be sleeping out somewhere.

Musammât Chandania then went to Khurja where she communicated the news to another son of hers named Chhimman, who made a report at the Khurja Police station at 8-30 in the morning. In this report it was stated that Chhidda had taken away Ram Prasad the night before and that Ram Prasad had not yet returned.

Meanwhile, the names of four persons were mentioned, it being alleged that they had murdered Ram Prasad.

The Police took up the inquiry but after some investigation had been made, the Sub-Inspector came to the conclusion that the matter was one for the Railway Police. The papers were accordingly sent to the Railway Police. A Sub-Inspector of that branch of the Police made some inquiry and then returned the papers to the Civil Police.

Eventually, it appears that the Police sent up a report to the Magistrate, saying that there was no case, and Chhidda was discharged.

In the beginning of January a complaint was made in Court by Ram Prasad's widow and an inquiry was again opened which led to the commitment of Chhidda and others to the Sessions Court, as has already been mentioned.

A great deal of the evidence which was produced at the trial in the Sessions Court has been rejected by the learned Judge, and we think rightly. There can, we think, be no doubt that, from the time the death of Ram Prasad was discovered up to the time when the case was tried out in Court, a lot of evidence had been probably manufactured for the purpose of bringing the murder home to the accused.

In substance, all that has remained of the case in the Court below is that the Judge has believed that on the night of the 7th December the deceased man, Ram Prasad, left the village in company with the accused Chhidda.

As to this we think there can be no reasonable doubt, for there is on the record the evidence of a number of witnesses, who were sitting at a chaupal in the village at about 8 o'clock on the night of the 7th December, and these people including the headman all say that the accused Chhidda came up to the chaupal and said that he had business with Ram Prasad and went away with Ram Prasad.

Nor do we think there is any reasonable doubt regarding the truth of that part of the prosecution story deposed to by Musammât Chandania, namely, that the accused came to the house with Ram Prasad and then went away with him. Musammât Chandania's statement is that Ram Prasad had his meal before he left in company with the accused,

QAMAR DIN v. EMPEROR.

Apart from her statement we have the fact that the post mortem examination revealed that the stomach of the deceased man contained half digested food, a fact which leads us to believe that Ram Prasad came by his death some two or three hours after he had left his home.

Beyond this evidence there is really nothing more upon which reliance can be placed except the statement made by Musammât Ohandania that at about midnight of 7th December she went to make an inquiry from Ohhidda regarding what had happened to her son. This fact is admitted by Ohhidda himself. The evidence of Matru and Kunni stands largely discredited.

As regards the cause of death we think there can be no doubt that Ram Prasad was murdered before his dead body was laid on the Railway line. The medical evidence on this part of the case is quite convincing and goes to show that the deceased man had been probably killed by spear wounds. It is shown that there were punctured wounds in the region of the ribs and that the right lung had been pierced in two places. There was also evidence to show that several ribs had been broken, and reading the medical evidence as a whole, there can be little doubt that these injuries must have been inflicted before death. We may mention that the body, when it was discovered, had been cut in two by the passing of the train.

We do not deem it necessary to refer to those portions of the evidence which the learned Judge has rejected, showing that the accused and others had been seen in the neighbourhood of the Railway carrying a heavy body on a charpoy; all this has already been disposed of by the learned Judge of the Court below.

The question is, therefore, whether, given the facts as we have stated them, the Court below was justified in holding that Ram Prasad was murdered by the accused Ohhidda and others.

On his findings the learned Judge was satisfied that no other course was open to him than to convict. In other words, he found that it was proved that because Ram Prasad and Ohhidda had been seen together at about 8 o'clock in the evening and because the dead body of Ram Prasad had been discovered the next morning and, further, that no explanation had been given by Ohhidda regarding the death of Ram Prasad, therefore, Ohhidda must be deemed to have taken a part in the murder. We are not able to accept this conclusion. In the absence of other evidence, circumstantial or direct, tending to show that the accused was concerned in this crime, we think that he is entitled to an acquittal. We have little doubt from what the witnesses have stated in this case that Ram Prasad was a person who was by no means popular in the village and we have further little doubt that he must have been murdered by some of his enemies on the night in question. But we are not prepared to draw the conclusion that, because the accused Ohhidda was last seen in the company of Ram Prasad at about 8 o'clock at night, Ohhidda must necessarily be considered to be one of the persons responsible for Ram Prasad's murder. We must, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the conviction and sentence and we do so accordingly. We direct that the accused Ohhidda be acquitted and released.

CRIMINAL MISCELLANEOUS PETITION No. 129
OF 1921.

February 6, 1922.

Present :—Mr. Justice Abdul Qadir.

QAMAR DIN—PETITIONER

versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 87, 110, 111, 123, 403—Applicability of s. 47—"Absconder," who is—Security required for period longer than one year—Failure to furnish security—Procedure—Appeal—Reference to Sessions Judge.

Action under section 87 of the Criminal Procedure Code can be taken only when a Court has reason to believe that any person against whom a warrant has been issued has absconded or is concealing himself so that such warrant cannot be executed. A person however, who files a petition against the order issuing the warrant and takes steps to procure an order of a superior Court that he should be allowed to remain on bail after such warrant has been issued, can neither be said to be absconding nor concealing himself. [p. 728, cols 1 & 2.]

The provisions of section 123, Criminal Procedure Code, are clear on the point that if security is not furnished and security for a period of more than one year has been ordered, the case must be referred to the Sessions Judge, who alone is empowered to pass orders under that section for the imprisonment of the person who has failed to furnish security. [p. 727, col. 2]

Obiter—Though section 406, Criminal Procedure Code, is so worded that an appeal may be preferred under the section to the District Magistrate in every case by any person ordered to give security for good behaviour under section 118 by a Subordinate Magistrate, yet ordinarily it seems that the section is meant for cases in which a reference to the Sessions Judge is not necessary, i. e., where a man has been either ordered to furnish security for one year or having been ordered to furnish security for more than a year has furnished it and wants to appeal. In such cases he would go to the District Magistrate in appeal and there would then be no reference to the Sessions Judge, who could deal with such cases only as a Court of revision. [p. 727, col. 2; p. 728, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, for cancellation of the non-bailable warrants for the arrest of the petitioner issued by the District Magistrate, Lahore, on the 9th August and 3rd September 1921.

Mr. J. G. Sethi, for the Petitioner.

The Assistant Legal Remembrancer, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—Qamar Din, the petitioner, was ordered by the Sub Divisional Magistrate, Karnal, to give security of Rs. 10,000 for three years under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code. He failed to furnish security and the case was referred to the Sessions Judge, Lahore, under section 123, Criminal Procedure Code, and the petitioner was detained in Jail by the order of the Sub Divisional Magistrate. The learned Sessions Judge sent the case back to the Sub Divisional Magistrate for recording defence evidence and ordered the petitioner to be released on bail. When the case came up again before the Sessions Judge he informed the petitioner that he was entitled to file an appeal to the District Magistrate, under section 406, Criminal Procedure Code. If the result of the appeal went against the petitioner the case was to come up before the Sessions Judge again for a decision of the reference under section 123, Criminal Procedure Code. The petitioner accordingly filed an appeal in the Court of the District Magistrate, Lahore, which was heard on the 5th of August 1921, but orders were reserved, no date being fixed for their announcement. On the 9th August, however, the learned District Magistrate rejected the appeal and issued non-bailable warrants for the attendance of the petitioner "for furnishing security". When the petitioner learnt that non-bailable warrants had been issued against him he made an application to the Sessions Judge, which was decided on the 24th August, the orders being that the applicant should be allowed to remain on bail on the security already given. But in spite of this order fresh non-bailable warrants were issued on the 3rd September 1921, and on the 13th October 1921, an order purporting to be under section 87, Criminal Procedure Code, was passed to the effect that a proclamation be issued for attaching the property of the petitioner. A proclamation was issued on the 15th October ordering the petitioner to appear on the 15th November. But before that date the petitioner's property was attached on the 6th November 1921. The petitioner has filed a petition for revision against the orders of the District Magistrate issuing non-bailable warrants and attaching his property. Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi appears for the petitioner and the Assistant Legal Remembrancer for the Crown. I have heard them and have come to the conclusion that the orders in question cannot be upheld.

The provisions of section 123, Criminal Procedure Code, are clear on the point that if security is not furnished and security for a period of more than one year has been ordered, the case must be referred to the Sessions Judge, who alone is empowered to pass orders under that section for the imprisonment of the person who has failed to furnish security. This case had been referred to the Sessions Judge under section 123, Criminal Procedure Code, and I think it was hardly necessary that this case should have gone in appeal to the District Magistrate. Though section 406, Criminal Procedure Code, is so worded that an appeal may be preferred under this section to the

HASAN RAZA v. EMPEROR.

District Magistrate in every case by any person ordered to give security for good behaviour under section 118 by a Subordinate Magistrate, yet ordinarily, it seems that this section is meant for cases in which a reference to the Sessions Judge is not necessary, i.e., where a man has been either ordered to furnish security for one year or having been ordered to furnish security for more than a year has furnished it and wants to appeal. In such cases he would go to the District Magistrate in appeal and there would then be no reference to the Sessions Judge, who could deal with such cases only as a Court of revision. These remarks are, however, made in passing and do not affect the points in dispute before me. An appeal could be preferred to the District Magistrate under section 403, Criminal Procedure Code, as it is worded at present, and was so preferred. The context in this case relates to the stage when the appeal was decided. As we have seen, there was no date fixed for the announcement of orders and Qamar Din could not be expected to be present on the 9th August, when the orders were passed. If his presence was required simply to hear the orders, there was apparently no reason to suppose that he would not attend in order to hear them if summoned to do so. He had, up to that stage, been appearing before the various Courts that had dealt with his case. There was no justification, therefore, for issuing non-bailable warrants at the time. If his presence was required in order to tell him that he must furnish security, that was unnecessary because it was known that he has already professed himself unable to do so; and the sole question for decision by the Sessions Judge was whether the petitioner should be imprisoned for failure to furnish security, if he found that there was material on the record for upholding the order as to security.

In view of what has been observed above as regards the impropriety of the order issuing non-bailable warrants, it need hardly be said that further proceedings taken against the petitioner culminating in the attachment of his property were not called for. Action under section 87 can be taken only when a Court has reason to believe that any person against whom a warrant has been issued has absconded or is concealing himself so that such warrant cannot be executed. But a man, who files a petition against the order issuing the warrant and takes steps to procure an order of a superior Court that he should be allowed to remain on bail after such warrant has been issued, can neither be said to be absconding nor concealing himself. I think it unnecessary to make any further remarks as to certain irregularities in the procedure adopted concerning the attachment of property etc. The procedure adopted throughout appears to be based on some misapprehension as to the attitude of the petitioner, and in the same way the petitioner seems to have been somewhat unduly afraid as to the treatment that he might receive in case he presented himself before the District Magistrate. The learned Assistant Legal Remembrancer, on behalf of the Crown, admits his inability to support the orders passed by the learned District Magistrate under the circumstances discussed above. I, therefore, set aside those orders so that the non-bailable warrants issued against Qamar Din are hereby cancelled and the attachment of his property removed. He will, however, appear before the District Magistrate, if ordered to do so, to enable the latter to formally announce to him the order passed in appeal. He need not, however, be taken before the District Magistrate in custody as the Sessions Judge has allowed him to remain on bail which has already been furnished by him. The record will then be sent to the Sessions Judge for disposal of the reference according to law.

Case triable by Sessions Court—Commitment.

KARAM SINGH v. EMPEROR.

When a Sessions Judge on appeal finds that the case against the accused is in reality one triable by a Court of Session, it is not open to him to modify the charge and alter the sentence. The proper course for him is to direct that the accused be committed for trial to the Court of Session on the new charge.

Criminal revision from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Gorakhpur.

Mr. Kirpa Ram Dang, for the Applicants.

Mr. R. Malcomson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT. The order of the Additional Sessions Judge cannot be supported. The facts are these:—The applicants are alleged to have attacked the house of Lachman, to have assaulted several persons there and to have stolen grain. On the facts this was a case of dacoity, triable by a Court of Session. The Police erroneously sent it up as a case under sections 452 and 147 of the Indian Penal Code. The Magistrate convicted on those charges. The Sessions Judge rightly found the case to be a case of dacoity but took a course which cannot be supported. He changed the charges into a charge under section 395 of the Indian Penal Code and made certain alterations in the sentences. His proper course was to have directed the appellants to be committed for a trial on a charge under section 395 of the Indian Penal Code. This must be done now. I set aside the convictions and sentences and direct that the appellants shall remain in custody and be committed to the Court of Sessions Judge of Gorakhpur (the Additional Sessions Judge having already expressed his opinion on the merits cannot now hear the case) and be tried on a charge under section 395 of the Indian Penal Code to the effect that they on the 11th of December 1921, being more than five in number, did commit dacoity at the house of Lachman in the village of Darandiah in the Basti District. In the event of any of the appellants being found guilty, it will be open to the Sessions Judge to consider, in passing sentence, the imprisonment which they have already undergone.

In order to carry out a sentence imposed by a private panchayat upon the complainant, the accused blackened the complainant's face and made him ride a donkey round the village. They were convicted of offences under sections 147 and 355 of the Penal Code and separate sentences were awarded in respect of each offence:

Held, that the acts committed by the accused formed part of the same transaction and that, therefore, separate convictions and separate sentences under section 147 and section 355 were illegal [p. 730, col. 1.]

Petitioner, under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of an order of the District Magistrate, Jullundur, dated the 21st September 1921, modifying that of the Honorary Magistrate, Second Class, Phillaur, District Jullundur, dated the 22nd August 1921.

Mr. Bhagat Ram Puri, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Aziz Ahmad, for the Government Advocate, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts as found to be established in this case are that one Kartara was found guilty by a panchayat of having enticed away a married woman, and was sentenced to pay a fine or in default to have his face blackened and to ride round the village on a donkey. He escaped. He was caught some days later, was confined in a house by the present accused, had his face blackened and was made to ride a donkey round the village. The Magistrate, who tried the case, found the accused guilty under sections 147, 342 and 504, Indian Penal Code, and a separate sentence was passed under each section. On appeal the District Magistrate upheld the conviction under section

BHOLA NATH KHANRA v. PURNA CHANDRA BANERJEE.

147, quashed the conviction under section 342, altered the third conviction to one under section 355 and passed separate sentences both under section 147 and section 355 to run consecutively. He also passed an order under section 103 (3), Criminal Procedure Code, and ordered each of the accused to execute a bond for a period of three years.

On revision it is urged that all the acts committed formed part of one and the same transaction. The sentence had been passed by the panchayat and the offence committed by the accused consisted of forcibly carrying out that sentence. It is, therefore, contended that no separate offences had been committed under sections 147 and 355, inasmuch as the only object in obtaining the complainant and confining him until a donkey could be procured was part and parcel of compelling him to obey the orders of the panchayat. This contention is, I think, quite sound and I, therefore, find that separate sentences should not have been passed and are illegal. I uphold the conviction under section 147 and cancel that under section 355.

As to the order under section 103 (3), Criminal Procedure Code. As pointed out in Lal Khan v. Emperor (1), this order was illegal and ultra vires, inasmuch as the Trial Court was that of a Second Class and not that of a First Class Magistrate.

This view of the law agrees with that taken by the Calcutta High Court and also with several previous decisions of the Punjab Chief Court, and although a different view has been taken by other High Courts the position in this Province is quite clear. I, therefore, set aside the order demanding security under section 103 (3). The result is that the accused will be released immediately.

A proceeding for sanction under section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code, though taken in a Civil Court, relates to a criminal matter and the Court has no power to give costs as there is no provision in the Criminal Procedure Code for awarding costs in such a matter.

Babus Sib Chander Palit and Sachindra Nath Basu, for the Petitioners.

Babu Azurba Chandra Mukherjee, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioners before us have been directed to pay costs in a proceeding by which the lower Appellate Court revoked the sanction obtained by the petitioners to prosecute certain persons.

The petitioners applied for sanction to prosecute three persons. The Court of first instance disallowed the application in respect of two, and granted sanction in respect of one of them. On appeal, the sanction was revoked by the lower Appellate Court but, as stated above, in doing so that Court directed the petitioners to pay costs.

Section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, does not provide for awarding costs and we do not find any other provision in the Criminal Procedure Code for awarding costs in such a matter.

On the other hand, our attention has been drawn on behalf of the petitioners to two cases—one in Weir's Criminal Rulings Vol. 11, 4th Edition, 196 [See the case of Mahomed Dustagir Sahib v. Mahomed Karimuddeen (1)] in which Collins, C. J., is reported to have held that the powers of the Civil Procedure Code as to costs cannot be imported into a criminal proceeding, that the proceeding, though taken in a Civil Court, relates to a criminal matter and was taken under the Criminal Procedure Code, and that the Court had no power to give costs under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code. A similar view appears to have been taken in a case in the Punjab Chief Court. [Bishen Das v. Rahmat Khan (2)]

We agree in the view taken in those cases and accordingly set aside the order as to costs passed by the lower Appellate Court.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 366, 394—
Abduction—Intention—Inference—Robbery and abduction—Separate convictions.

The intent with which a woman is abducted or kidnapped is more or less a matter of inference. There may be some cases in which the matter is capable of direct proof, but very generally one has to infer from the circumstances of the case and the subsequent conduct of the accused as to what was the intention with which the kidnapping or the abduction had been brought about. In such cases it is for the accused to explain away the incriminating circumstances and to prove that he had no improper, or sinister object in view. [p. 733, col. 2.]

Where a woman going peaceably with her husband on the road is robbed of her ornaments and then carried off to a distant village and is kept confined in a house to which no other person could have access except the accused, the only inference that is possible is that she was carried off with the object that she may be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse, and it is for the accused to prove that they had some other object in view. [p. 733, col. 2; p. 734, col. 1.]

Where a woman is first robbed of her ornaments and is then carried off, the abduction although immediately following the robbery is no part of that offence, it not being necessary to complete the offence of robbery that the woman should also be abducted. In such a case separate convictions and sentences of the accused under the two offences are right and proper. [p. 734, cols. 1 & 2.]

Criminal appeal from an order of the Magistrate, First Class, Amritsar exercising enhanced powers under section 30, Criminal Procedure Code, dated the 31st January 1921.

Dr. Nand Lal and Lala Harbhayan Das, for the Appellant.

Diwan Khilanda Ram, R. S., Public Prosecutor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT—The three appellants, Chanda Singh, Mangal Singh and Dewa Singh, have been found guilty of highway robbery and abduction by Mr. Connor, Magistrate, exercising enhanced powers under section 30 of the Criminal Procedure Code, at Amritsar, and sentenced under sections 394 and 366 of the Indian Penal Code to various terms of imprisonment. Chanda Singh has been sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment under section 394, and to a further period of seven years under section 366 of the Indian Penal Code. Mangal Singh has been sentenced to six years on the first count, and to five years on the other. Dewa Singh has been awarded six years rigorous imprisonment altogether; five years' under the first charge and one year under the second charge. In each case the sentences are to run consecutively.

The material facts necessary to understand the story for the prosecution are briefly as follows:—Ram Das, the complainant, is a Brahmin of Mauza Patti in the Kasur Tahsil, and Musammatt Vidya, his wife, is a girl of about 19 years of age. On the morning of the 26th September last both of these persons set out on foot from their house for the village Kot Mahmud Khan. When they were nearing the village Nandpore at about 9.30 A.M., they were overtaken by the three convicts who were armed with dangs and chhavis. About half a mile further, the three convicts suddenly came out of a cotton crop, and one of them attacked Ram Das with a chhavi. Ram Das was thrown on the ground with a piece of cloth twisted round his neck, and robbed of all the cash and jewellery which he had in his possession. He was told to keep quiet and not to raise an outcry or he would be killed. In the meantime, the other two culprits forcibly carried off his wife and robbed her of all the ornaments and the jewellery which she had on her person. He was then concealed in a maize crop which was growing close by to await the arrival of a mare to fetch which one of the culprits had in the meantime been despatched. As there was some delay in the arrival of the mare, the two men who were left in charge of the woman did not think it advisable to wait any longer, and marched her off under threats of taking her life. At about midnight they arrived at a village called Dhariwal where the woman was put into a house and here she remained till rescued by the Police and her husband the following morning.

After the culprits had left, Ram Das raised an outcry and with the help of some persons made a search for his wife in the neighbourhood, but was unsuccessful in tracing her. He then went to the Sirhali Thana, and reported the matter to the Police. In this report he gave a full description of his assailants, which tallied in almost all respects with the description of the accused subsequently apprehended and identified. It appears that while the report was being recorded, one Sri Ram, Head-Constable, was present, and on hearing the description given by the complainant of a tall black man as one of the culprits, he at once suspected Chanda Singh of Chaudhriwala, a restricted habitual offender and an absconder in a murder case, as being concerned in this crime. Investigation was, therefore, started by the Police, who at first proceeded to Chaudhriwala. After obtaining some information at that place, the Police went to a place called Kairon, where they learnt that a man on a very fast mare had passed the village that day and returned the same evening at dusk. This confirmed the suspicions of the Police, and they proceeded to the house of Sunder Singh where they found a mare tethered. This mare was said to belong to Chanda Singh, and it was stated that the man who had ridden it that day was sleeping on the roof of the house. The Police, therefore, went to the roof, and found a man sleeping on a charpoy with a lathi under the head, and a chhavi blade in a haversack near the bed. The man whose name was Dewa Singh was at once identified by Ram Das as one of the three assailants. After obtaining some useful information from this man, the Police proceeded to Dhariwal where they reached in the morning. On reaching Dhariwal the Police went to the house of one Khudda Singh, brother of Mangal Singh accused, whose name had been mentioned by Dewa Singh, and surrounded his house. Two men came out of the house armed with chhavis, but finding that they would in all probability be overpowered, fled to the roofs. In the meantime, the wife of Ram Das came out of the house, and rushed into her husband's arms. The two culprits jumped down on the other side of the house, were pursued by the Police and caught. Both of them were identified by Ram Das and his wife as the remaining two culprits. The Police learnt from Chanda Singh that he had disposed of the jewellery and sold it to one Surain Singh, a goldsmith of Nandpore. Surain Singh was traced out, and deposed to his having purchased some jewellery from Chanda Singh, but said he had melted it. He produced the gold, and also an entry in his baki dated the 26th September 1920, admittedly thumb-marked by Chanda Singh, showing that his statement with regard to the said purchase was correct.

This is in brief the story as unfolded by the prosecution witnesses. That a robbery in broad day light was committed, and that the wife of Ram Das, complainant, forcibly carried off is beyond dispute. Two questions arise for the consideration of the Court:—

1. Whether the evidence on the record is sufficient to prove participation of the accused in this crime, and

2. Whether a conviction under section 366, Indian Penal Code, can be sustained in view of the fact that there is no direct evidence on the record in proof of any criminal intent on the part of the accused.

Now, with regard to the first question it is to be observed that the conviction rests mainly on the evidence of Ram Das and his wife Musammatt Vidya, both of whom have identified the accused, and have deposed to the latter having committed the assault and the robbery. I have carefully read their evidence, and have no reason to differ from the conclusions at which the learned Magistrate has arrived. The robbery, as already stated, was committed in broad daylight, and the prisoners were arrested shortly after the occurrence. The complainant Ram Das and especially his wife, Vidya, who remained with at least two of the accused for more than 34 hours, must have had ample opportunities to have seen their faces, and would in consequence have no difficulty in identifying them. The evidence of Surain Singh and the entry in his bahi thumb-marked as it was by Chanda Singh himself leaves no doubt that some jewellery was disposed of by the latter on the 26th September 1920, the very day the robbery was committed, and no satisfactory explanation has been given by Chanda Singh as to how he came into possession of this jewellery. His statement before the Court that the Police made him give the two thumb-impressions to the bahi entry when the mare in question in this case was returned to his son is absurd, and has been rightly rejected by the learned Magistrate. Moreover, Chanda Singh was admittedly arrested near the Dhariwal village, where the woman was also found, and it has not been explained how the woman came to be present in this village that morning where she had absolutely no friends and connections. His explanation with respect to himself that he was on his way to his village, and got out of the train at Boparai, and was on his way when he was arrested by some of his enemies is false, and entirely unworthy of credit. The statement of Mangal Singh that the woman was not in his house, but appeared from somewhere else is on the face of it absurd, and no reliance can be placed on this statement. Dewa Singh denies to his having been arrested at midnight with a chhavi as stated by Sri Ram, the Head-Constable (P. W. No. 18) and states that he was arrested near a watercourse in the day near the village Kairon. In support of this story he has produced two witnesses who have been disbelieved by the learned Magistrate, and after reading their evidence, I have no hesitation in holding that the learned Magistrate was right in rejecting their evidence. In my opinion the evidence produced clearly proves the participation of the prisoners in this crime, and there is no reason to disbelieve it. I accordingly hold that the guilt of all the three accused has been fully established and that their conviction is fully justified under section 394, Indian Penal Code.

With regard to the second question it has been contended that there is no evidence on the record that Musammam Vidya was carried off by the offenders with the intention of marrying her against her will, or of forcing or seducing her to illicit intercourse or that it was known to be likely that she will be so forced or seduced. I do not see any force in this contention. There is no doubt that there are two ingredients of an offence under section 366. Firstly, there must be a kidnapping or an abduction as defined in section 361 or section 362 of the Indian Penal Code, and, secondly, the kidnapping or the abduction must be done with the intent or with the knowledge or with the object that certain things will happen as specified in section 366. That the woman was abducted by force while her husband was being attacked and relieved of his cash and jewellery cannot be disputed for a moment. The question I have to consider is whether she was abducted in order that she might be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse. Now the intent with which a woman is abducted or kidnapped is more or less a matter of inference. There may, of course, be some cases in which the matter is certainly capable of direct proof, but very generally one has to infer from the circumstances of the case and the subsequent conduct of the accused as to what was the intention with which the kidnapping or the abduction had been brought about. Again it must not be forgotten that the circumstances of the case which though incriminating to outward appearances may yet be capable of a perfectly good and reasonable explanation, and may be fully compatible with the innocence of the accused. In such cases it would be for the accused to explain away the incriminating circumstances and to prove that he had no improper or sinister object in view. The circumstances of the present case are such that, in my opinion, no other inference is possible except that the woman was carried off with the object that she may be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse. The woman was going peacefully with her husband on the road, was robbed of all her ornaments and jewellery, and carried off by force to a distant village where she was kept confined in a house to which no other person could have any access except the accused themselves. The presumption is clear that she was abducted with the intent indicated above. If the object was merely robbery, it was complete as soon as the ornaments had been removed from the person of the woman; why should the woman be then carried off? If the object was to shut out evidence as to their having committed the robbery as suggested by the Counsel for the appellant, why should the husband have been left alone and not carried off too? There is evidence on the record to show that the woman begged the culprits to take her jewellery and to leave her alone but that they would not agree. While in the witness-box the woman begged the Court not to question her as to what happened to her at night in the house where she was confined by her abductors. This was done in all probability to save her honour and to avoid a scandal, but the inference is clear that the woman must either have been raped or subjected to some such indignities as a sensitive woman would naturally feel disinclined to mention before the public. There can be no doubt that the culprits had some other object in view than mere robbery and that object appears to be unquestionably the one I have above mentioned. It would have been, of course, quite open to the accused, if they had admitted the abduction to prove that they had carried off the woman with some object other than those specified in section 366, Indian Penal Code, but they have not done so. They have totally denied their presence at the scene of the occurrence and have also denied the abduction. In my opinion they are not stating the truth, and under the circumstances I have no hesitation in holding that the offence of abduction with the intent above specified has been fully brought home to the accused and that they have been rightly convicted of the offence as defined in section 366 of the Indian Penal Code.

Before concluding I must refer to one other point raised by the learned Counsel for the appellant, viz., that separate convictions under sections 394 and 366 were bad in law. His contention was that abduction which immediately followed the robbery was a part and parcel of one act, and that two acts were so connected together as to form really one transaction, and that consequently even if the accused were found guilty there should have been one conviction and not two. It is sufficient to say in reply that the abduction of the woman was not part of the offence of robbery which was complete as soon as the complainant and his wife had been robbed of their jewellery. In order to complete the offence of robbery it was not necessary that the woman should also have been abducted, and I fail to understand why the accused should not have been separately convicted and separately sentenced when they were found guilty of two distinct separate offences. In my opinion the accused have been rightly convicted and the contention raised by the Counsel for the appellants does not appear to have any force.

I uphold the convictions and the sentences awarded by the learned Magistrate and dismiss the appeal.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 1140 OF 1921.

ACCUSED—PETITIONERS

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

*Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 199—
Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 494, 497, 498—
"Husband of the woman," meaning of—Marriage

The words "the husband of the woman" in section 199 of the Criminal Procedure Code are simply intended to point to the particular person who has the right to start proceedings in respect of the offences mentioned in the section, and a man does not cease to be "the husband of the woman" within the meaning of that section merely because the marriage tie has been dissolved subsequent to the commission of the offence complained of. In other words, the dissolution of the marriage tie does not take away from the complainant the right to lodge a complaint in respect of an offence committed before the marriage tie was dissolved. [p. 736, col 2.]

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Hoshiarpur, with his No. 856 of 9th August 1921.

FACTS.—Bata, a Muhammadan by religion, has brought this complaint under sections 498, 494 and 497 against four persons, Hindu Jats, for enticement of and adultery with his wife Musammât Nathi whom, he says, the accused Dhanna Singh and Indar Singh have married by chadarantasi and converted into Hinduism.

The accused in this case plead that, as the conversion to Hinduism is admitted by the complainant himself, his admission puts an end to the marriage and to the status of the complainant as a husband. He, therefore, cannot come into Court. The lower Court has disallowed the objection on the ground that the woman was the complainant's wife at the time the offence was committed, and then Nawabzâda Mirza Izzat ud-Din Ahmad Khan, exercising the powers of a Magistrate of the First Class in the Hoshiarpur District, by order dated 2nd July 1921, held that the complaint, under sections 498, 494 and 497 of the Indian Penal Code, can proceed against all the four accused.

GROUND.—The points for decision are two and I think they are very clear.

Whether the conversion of the woman puts an end to the marriage tie, and, secondly, whether, under these circumstances, the case can proceed.

On the first proposition the complainant has not got any thing to say. The Muhammadan Law is very clear on this point. Section 88 (A) of Muhammadan Law by Wilson lays down that the effect of either or both of the parties to a Muhammadan marriage renouncing the Muhammadan religion is to dissolve the marriage ipso facto so far as the British Courts are concerned. Similarly, according to Abdul Gani v. Aziz-ul-Haq (1) in Muhammadan Law the marriage of a man who subsequently embraces Christianity becomes ipso facto void notwithstanding the re-conversion to Islam during the period of Idat, and the wife, in contracting a second marriage during such period, does not commit bigamy under section 454, Indian Penal Code. This proposition of law is not contested by the complainant's Counsel or the Public Prosecutor. They, however, take their stand on the point that the complainant was the husband at the time of the commission of the offence. Section 198 of the Criminal Procedure Code is clear. No Court shall take cognizance of an offence under section 497 or 498 of the Indian Penal Code except upon a complaint made by the husband of the woman or in his absence by any person who had care of such woman on his behalf at the time when such offence was committed. It is necessary, therefore, that the complainant should be the husband of the woman at the institution of the suit, otherwise he has no locus standi to sue. The complainant quotes High Court Proceedings 26th July 1869 (2) and Imperator v. Nur Mahomed (3) which are to the effect that the death of the husband does not necessarily put an end to a prosecution for adultery. This relates to the death during the pendency of the case and not before its institution. The effect of section 198, in my opinion, is that the marriage tie must be subsisting at the time when the suit is brought, otherwise if an abduction takes place and subsequently the husband divorces the woman he will still have a right to run in for 498 on the plea that the woman was his wife at the time of the commission of the offence. In my opinion, the accused's case is quite clear. I think he would not have taken this extreme step to move this Court on revision side but for some irregularities committed by the lower Court. The whole proceedings show that the Magistrate has not brought a proper judicial mind to the trial of this case. The woman is not one of the accused. A warrant of arrest was issued against her in the very beginning on a bail of Rs. 500. Subsequently, the security of the accused was allowed to remain the same but that of the woman, who was merely a witness, was enhanced to Rs. 1,000. The order against her is to remain on bail and attend the Court till the whole evidence is recorded. A woman is usually a witness and after her statement has been recorded she is not detained in Court but in this case the lower Court has given explicit orders that she should attend the Court till the whole evidence is recorded. She appeared on the 2nd April and was called upon to furnish bail of Rs. 1,000. Her statement was recorded in which she asserted herself to be a Sikh and the case was ordered to be taken up at Talwara. The instructions of the High Court are that in cases where women are concerned, i.e., where their attendance is necessary, should be taken up at qadr so that they may not be put to unnecessary trouble, but the Magistrate fixed this case at the other extremity of the District. The case was not taken up at Talwara on account of a Sessions case and it was adjourned to the 16th May. The case was not taken on that day for want of time and it was adjourned to 11th June. The first surety of the woman withdrew and she was called upon to furnish another on 11th June. It is not clear why such a drastic order was passed when she had already appeared two or three times and her statement was recorded. The case was postponed to the 13th of June. Only the complainant was examined and the case was put off for next day on account of heavy work and the order against the woman was that as the case was a serious one and parties were excited the woman should furnish heavy security of Rs. 1,000. On the 14th six witnesses were examined and the case was postponed to 1st July 1921. I think the procedure has been unnecessarily harassing to the woman and as the accused have proved that the case cannot proceed I beg to submit the papers to High Court to proceed on its revision side for necessary action.

ORDER.—In this case Buta has lodged a Criminal complaint under sections 494, 497 and 498 against four Hindu Jats. The case is pending before the Magistrate but has been reported to this Court by the learned Sessions Judge of Hoshiarpur who is of opinion that proceedings should be quashed because Buta's wife has embraced Sikhism, and thus the marriage has come to an end.

The view that the woman's embracing Sikhism has put an end to the marriage seems to me correct, and the accused persons could not be convicted under either of the above sections for anything done after the termination of the marriage. But here, according to the story of the complainant, the woman was abducted before she embraced the Sikh religion, and while she was still the wife of the complainant, so that I am unable to hold that no offence has been committed by the accused. It is, however, urged on behalf of the accused that, under section 199, Criminal Procedure Code, the Court cannot take cognizance of an offence under section 497 or 498 upon a complaint made by the complainant at a time when he had ceased to be the husband of the woman. Turning to section 198 of the Criminal Procedure Code, I find that it is laid down that a Court shall not take cognizance of certain offences, including an offence under section 494, Indian Penal Code, except upon the complaint made by some person aggrieved of such offence. Turning again to section 199 I find that a complaint made by the husband of the woman is necessary to start proceedings under section 497 or 498. Reading both the sections together it seems to me that the Legislature intended to leave it to the option of the person aggrieved to set the law in motion. Now, I cannot see that the husband's grievance against a person who has enticed away his wife or committed adultery with her ceases merely on the marriage coming to an end. I am of opinion that the words in section 199 "the husband of the woman" are simply intended to point to the particular person who has the right to start proceedings and that a man does not cease to be "the husband of the woman" within the meaning of section 199, Criminal Procedure Code, merely because the marriage has been dissolved. The right to start proceedings is given to him simply because he is the person aggrieved. To take an instance somewhat different from the one before me if A were to run away with B's wife, B would have a grievance and under section 199, Criminal Procedure Code, would be able to set the law in motion by lodging a complaint. If he lodged a complaint and it was then discovered that the woman had died the night before the complaint was lodged, it certainly could not be said that his grievance had ceased with the death of the woman.

As at present advised, I am, therefore, unable to find that the dissolution of the marriage takes away from the complainant the right to lodge a complaint, and I, therefore, decline to stay proceedings. I do not, however, record any definite finding, as I think that in case of a conviction the convicts may make it as one of their grounds of appeal that the provisions of section 199, Criminal Procedure Code, have not been complied with, and the matter will then be one for the decision of the Appellate Court. The case is returned and the proceedings in the Magistrate's Court will continue in due course.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 23rd March 1916, varying that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 30th November 1914.

Mr. G. O. Narang, for the Appellants.

Lala Amar Nath Bhatia, for the Plaintiff-Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In the suit out of which these two appeals arise, Kala Singh, one of the two sons of Jit Singh deceased, sued for possession of certain properties mortgaged by his father on the ground that the alienations were made without any valid necessity. The lower Appellate Court has found that some of the alienations were made without any necessity and that in respect of the other alienations necessity in part existed. In respect of the latter the District Judge has given a decree for redemption of the whole of the property concerned on payment of the sum found in each case to be for necessity. In regard to those alienations in which it was found that no part of the consideration was raised for necessity he has given plaintiff a decree for possession of a half share unconditionally, but not of the other half which is that of his brother Kehar Singh who has not joined in suing.

From this decree two appeals have been filed in this Court, one by Kabul Singh and others, alienees, under certain of the deeds, and the other by Daulat Ram in whose favour a house was mortgaged for Rs. 1,000 on the 7th March 1910. The appeal of Kabul Singh and others has been argued by Mr. Gokal Chand Narang and that of Daulat Ram by Mr. Balwant Rai.

The only mortgage deed about which Mr. Narang has addressed us is that for Rs. 500, dated 29th June 1909. This Rs. 500 is said to have been advanced for purchase of bullocks. Gurditta says that this was the object of the loan and that six bullocks were actually bought. It is argued that the purchase of bullocks amounted to necessity. The evidence, however, shows that the bullocks were purchased to sell again, i. e., for the purpose of trade and not agriculture. In our opinion, an agriculturist governed by the Customary Law is not entitled to alienate his ancestral land in order to raise money for the purpose of trade in cattle. The findings of the District Judge in respect of other alienations in which Mr. Gokal Chand's clients are interested are not contested before us. Counsel, however, urges that the plaintiff is not entitled to redeem more than his own share of the property mortgaged at the reduced rate. He refers to the Law of Mortgage by Ghosh, 4th Edition, Volume I, page 248, in which is discussed a case where a part owner was held not entitled to redeem the whole of the remainder of the property mortgaged although he was bound to offer to do so. In that case, however, the equity of redemption was sold to a number of persons, one of them being the mortgagee himself. This was a distinguishing feature of the case and on page 249 of the same volume it was remarked that the observations of their Lordships in the case in question leave untouched the general rule that a person, who has any right at all to redeem has a right to redeem the whole of the mortgaged property, and cannot be compelled to redeem only the parts in which he may be interested. A person who has any right to redeem, has a right to redeem the whole of the mortgaged property, and not a part of it, unless there is a special bargain. The case of Huthasanan v. Parameswaran (1) is a similar authority in support of this proposition. In the present case mortgages in favour of Kabul Singh and others have been held binding to a limited extent. But this fact does not, in our opinion, alter the general rule referred to above. In accordance with this principle the plaintiff, the owner of only half the property mortgaged, is entitled to redeem the whole on payment of the sum found to have been taken for necessity and binding on the reversioners.

We now come to Daulat Ram's appeal. The finding of the learned District Judge is that the whole of the evidence seems insufficient to prove any legal necessity for the sums borrowed by Jit Singh from Daulat Ram. Prima facie this appears to us to be a finding of fact and cannot be challenged in second appeal. Counsel, however, has urged that the District Judge has made several mistakes. Rs. 131 out of the consideration of Rs. 1,000 was paid in cash before the Sub-Registrar. The District Judge says there is no evidence as to the legal necessity for this sum. Mr. Balwant Rai refers to the evidence of Ghoka Singh who states that Jit Singh purchased a buffalo from him for this sum and that he was paid by Daulat Ram. This evidence appears to have been overlooked by the District Judge but we do not think it is sufficient to vitiate his finding. It is probably quite false; no necessity for this item was mentioned in the deed. There is a concurrent finding by both the Courts that Jit Singh was a man of bad character who squandered his money, who raised Rs. 5,500 in seven years and who had ample property for all his needs. We agree with the lower Courts that under such circumstances it was necessary for the alienee to prove strictly that the various sums advanced by him to Jit Singh were all advanced for valid necessity. The District Judge also says in his judgment that Jit Singh was not cultivating any land for himself. It is urged that there is no admission as to this on the record and Counsel points to a copy of an entry in Khasra Girdawari which shows that Jit Singh was cultivating some land in Kharif 1909 and Rabi 1910. This was subsequent to the mortgage in favour of Daulat Ram. There certainly does not appear to be any admission on the record that Jit Singh did not cultivate any land himself. There is, however, considerable evidence that he went in for trading in cattle, and the probability is that the admission in question was made orally in the Court of the District Judge. We do not think that he would have referred to such an admission had it not been made. In any case even if the District Judge did make a mistake in this respect, we do not think it is such as to vitiate his judgment. Jit Singh owned considerable property the income of which was ample for all his needs. In Ram Kishor v. Musammat Hassi (2) it was held that if a borrower has squandered his income in extravagance and wanton waste the lender would not be justified in advancing him money for payment of Government revenue and other ordinary expenses of a Zemindar. In the present case Jit Singh apparently spent his income in extravagance and then found it necessary to borrow money from Daulat Ram and others for payment of revenue, for purchase of cattle and for the ordinary needs of a Zemindar. Having regard to what is laid down in this ruling we consider that Daulat Ram is not protected under the circumstances of the present case. It is very easy for a money-lender to show in account books the items borrowed as apparently borrowed for a necessary purpose. Under all the circumstances of the case we do not think it can be said that the finding of the learned District Judge in regard to Daulat Ram's mortgage is in any way contrary to law.

Both appeals accordingly fail and are dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, paras. 5, 17—Reference to arbitration without intervention of Court—Refusal of an arbitrator to act—Right to obtain order of reference from Court—Fresh arbitrator, appointment of.

Where a party goes to arbitration in a case in which if it had refused to do so, an order of reference would have been made under paragraph 17, Schedule II of the Civil Procedure Code, he cannot dispute the right of the other party to obtain from the Court an order of reference under that provision of the Code when a difficulty arises at a later stage of the proceedings which has not been provided for by the parties, as for instance, where one of the arbitrators refuses to act. In such a case the Court is competent to appoint under paragraph 5 a fresh arbitrator in place of the one who has declined to act.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman and Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case an order of reference outside the Court was made to two arbitrators and an umpire. Both the arbitrators being Vakils of this Court and the umpire being a Barrister formerly of this Court. No order of reference was found necessary or was in fact obtained under paragraph 17 of the Second Schedule. We do not know why, but presumably because the parties were reasonable men of business and they did not consider it necessary to waste time and money in obtaining an order when they were entirely agreed about the procedure. The arbitration was begun but unfortunately it fell through owing to one of the arbitrators declining to act. Whereupon the present appellant applied to the Subordinate Judge of Allahabad for an order of reference under paragraph 17, and for an order under paragraph 5 appointing an arbitrator in the place of the Vakil who had retired. The learned Judge took a very narrow view of the matter. He held that he was unable to appoint a fresh arbitrator, because there was no provision to that effect in the deed of agreement, and that it was not proposed to appoint any body who was specifically named in that deed of agreement. If it were necessary we should be prepared to hold that the words in paragraph 17, sub-clause (4) (which enables a Court to make an order of reference to a particular arbitrator at the time of filing the reference) "if there is no such provision and the parties cannot agree," covers a case where there has been a provision for a particular arbitrator who is either dead or retired. If he has died or refused to act, it is as though there were no provisions, but apart from that we think that the case is entirely covered by the decision in the rather curious case of Bhagwan Dass v. Gurdayal (1), and particularly by the principle laid down in that case which we entirely endorse: "where a party has gone to arbitration in a case in which if it had refused to go to arbitration an order of reference would have been made under paragraph 17, it is too late for him, when a difficulty arises at a later stage of the proceedings which has not been provided for unless an order of reference has been made, to dispute the right of his opponent to obtain an order of reference under paragraph 17." The decision in the case of Bala Pattabhirama Chetti v. Seetharama Chetti (2) really supports the appellant, although the learned Judge did not seem to think it applicable; and the decision which he followed, namely the case of Ahmad Noor Khan v. Abdur Rahman Khan (3) to which a member of this Bench was a party and which both of us endorse, has nothing whatever to do with the question raised in this case. The appeal must be allowed with costs and the matter sent back to the Subordinate Judge with directions to file the Letters Patent Appeal from the order passed by Mr. Justice Scott-Smith, on the 10th June, 1920, in Civil Appeal No. 447 of 1920. Messrs. B. P. Khosla and Ghulam Rasul, for the Appellant.

Lala Amar Nath Ohona, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal under clause 10 of the Letters Patent against a judgment of Scott-Smith, J.

The facts are briefly these. Kaka Singh purchased a half share in a house from Margal Sain. On the 25th July 1918 Lachhman Das filed a suit for pre-emption and on the 31st July 1918 Tahl Das filed a similar suit. Kaka Singh did not enter an appearance and ex parte decrees were passed in favour of the pre-emptors. Tahl

Das was held to have the prior right to pre-empt and was directed to pay the sum of Rs. 1,000 into Court within one month and a failure on his part to make this payment was to result in his suit being dismissed. In the event of Tahl Das not making the payment, it was ordered that Lachhman Das was to be entitled to get possession of the house on payment of the said sum of Rs. 1,000 within one month from the date of Tahl Das's default. The judgment of the Court passing these decrees concluded with a direction that the vendee was to pay the costs of the pre-emptors. Tahl Das paid up the Rs. 1,000 within the prescribed period and obtained possession of the property. The decree in favour of Lachhman Das, therefore, became ineffective. He, however, sued out execution for costs which he claimed had been decreed to him whether or not Tahl Das made a default in payment of the Rs. 1,000. The Courts below held that Lachhman Das was entitled to the costs, and in coming to this conclusion the judgment in the cases of pre-emption has been relied on. It is, however, the duty of an Executing Court to look, in the first instance, at the decree and if the terms of the decree are clear and unambiguous, an Executing Court is bound to give effect to it, even, though it may regard it as erroneous. This principle has been correctly laid down by the learned Judge in Chambers and is not attacked in the appeal before us. Mr. Beni Parshad Khosla for the appellant, however, contends that the decree under consideration is perfectly clear and unambiguous. Mr. Amar Nath Ohona for the respondent agrees that this is so. The decree is in the following terms:—

Bogair hazri mudda alaih mushtri pesh hua. Hukam hua ki yaktrafa hukam. haza ke zariye awwal wali Tahl Das muddai nisf hissa makan mutadamiya beshart adaigi ek hazar rupeya andar ek mah hasil kare. Warna uska dawa kharij tasawwar hoga, kion'e woh panla digridar hai. Jab Tahl Das ki taraf se waada khilaf houe to Lachhman Das muddar muqadama haza mustahiq hoga ki phir woh ek mah ke andar ek hazar rupeya dikhal karke digri dikhal nisf hissa makan mutadamiya hasil kare aur mablagh yak sad rupeya aithh anna muddaialaih mudai ho adz kare.

MAFIZUDDIN v. MOHAMMAD ISLAM.

It seems to us that the terms of this decree are quite clear and that under it the payment of costs to Lachhman Das was made conditional on his being able to act on the decree and obtain possession of the house on payment of the Rs. 1,030, in other words, that just as Lachhman Das's right to get possession of the house was dependent on Tahl Das making a default so was his right to costs dependent on the same default.

We think that this is not only clear but equitable, for Lachhman Das's right to preempt was dependant on the failure of Tahl Das to exercise his superior right. We accordingly feel constrained to accept this appeal with costs throughout.

Babus Guvada Ohiran Sen and Biraj Mohan Mazumdar, for the Respondent, did not oppose but submitted that the beneficial owner might be added as a party at the hearing of the case.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Bisik not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff brought this suit for establishment of his title to the disputed land and recovery of khas possession of it claiming as auction-purchaser at a revenue sale.

One of the pleas taken in defense was that the plaintiff was a benamidar. The first Court decided this issue and the other issues raised in the plaintiff's favour and granted him a decree. On appeal the lower Appellate Court came to a contrary decision on the issue of benami and on that ground alone dismissed the suit. It has been held, however, by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Gur Narayan v. Sheo Lal Singh (1) that a benamidar can maintain a suit for recovery of possession. The lower Appellate Court having dismissed the suit solely on the finding that the plaintiff as a mere benamidar cannot maintain the suit, his judgment must be reversed and the case remanded to him for the decision of the other issues that arise in the case.

The learned Vakil for the respondent does not dispute the contention now raised on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant but asks that at the re-hearing of the appeal the beneficial owner may also be made a party. I can make no order in this matter when the beneficial owner is not before me. It will be open to him to make such an application in the lower Appellate Court.

The appeal is accordingly decreed and the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court are set aside and the case remanded to that Court for re-hearing and decision according to law.

The appellant is entitled to a refund of the Court fee paid on the memorandum of appeal under section 13 of the Court Fees Act.

The parties will bear their own costs of this appeal.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O.
XXXIX, r. 2—Temporary injunction, nature of—Interlocutory injunction—Revision.

An injunction under r. 2 of O. XXXIX of the Civil Procedure Code whether it is one restraining a party from altering the position of affairs or directing it to restore the conditions which prevailed at the time the cause of action arose, must not go further and must not create totally new state of things. [p. 743, col. 2.]

Rasul Karim v. Purbhai Amirbhai, 24 Ind. Cas. 625; 38 B. 381; 16 Bom. L. R. 288, referred to.

Whether or no an injunction in mandatory form or a "true" injunction in mandatory form is within the scope of O. XXXIX, it never is, if it creates a totally new set of conditions. [p. 744, col. 1.]

In revisions the question of substantial justice arises more truly when a case has been decided and where the High Court is of opinion that any technical error, which might have been urged in an ordinary appeal, is not a sufficient reason for interference in revision unless injustice has been caused thereby or the petitioners have been prejudiced. [p. 742, col. 2.]

Petition, under section 44 of Act VI of 1918, for revision of an order of the District Judge, Lahore, dated the 2nd November 1921, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Lahore, dated the 1st July 1921.

Lala Durga Das, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The Bombay Motor and Cycle Company instituted a suit against the Lahore Electric Supply Company for specific performance of a contract, which they allege to have been made for the supply of electric power to their new premises in Lahore. While the suit was proceeding the plaintiffs applied to the Subordinate Judge for a mandatory injunction under O. XXXIX, r. 2 directing the defendants to make the necessary connection and to supply the power at once. This the Sub-Judge refused to do and on appeal the District Judge passed an interlocutory temporary mandatory injunction directing the connection to be made. From that order the Lahore Electric Supply Company has presented this application for revision, which has been very ably argued by Counsel on both sides.

The main contention of the petitioners is that this is not an injunction of the type contemplated in O. XXXIX, r. 2; that not only is it mandatory in form but it does not maintain or restore the status quo at the time the cause of action arose. It is urged in addition that the suit does not lie at all and this on the strength of two English rulings. It is contended that where a Statute provides a special penalty for the infringement of the conditions on which a license is given to a public Company, a private individual cannot obtain redress for breach of those conditions by means of an ordinary suit, and Counsel points to section 42 of the Electricity Act and explains that criminal proceedings are at the present moment pending against his client. It appears to me that this second point hardly arises at this stage though it can doubtless be urged in the main case, and what has to be seen is whether the injunction issued does or does not comply with the conditions laid down in O. XXXIX. Counsel for the respondents urges that all that has been done is to restore the status quo, that anyhow if the appeal lay to the District Judge there could be no ground for revision, however illegal the order he passed might be, that the misuse of discretion is no ground for interference, and, finally, that substantial justice has been done and that the rulings of this Court lay down that where this is the case the order should be allowed to stand. The question of substantial justice arises more truly when a case has been decided and where the High Court is of opinion that any technical error, which might have been urged in an ordinary appeal, is not a sufficient reason for interference on revision unless injustice has been caused thereby or the petitioners have been prejudiced. Counsel, however, contends that the true test of whether or no an application for revision lies is not the substance of the order but the capacity of the Judge to entertain the appeal in which he has passed such order, or, in other words, that if an original Court refuses to pass an order which it believes to be illegal, on an appeal from such refusal being presented to the District Judge, provided the District Judge be capable of hearing that appeal, the High Court has no power to interfere even if a wholly illegal order be passed. This goes very much further than any of the rulings which have been quoted, and if it be established that the District Judge has exercised a jurisdiction not vested in him and has acted illegally or with material irregularity, his order must be set aside as laid down in section 115, Civil Procedure Code. The real question is whether this mandatory injunction can be fairly said to maintain or restore the status quo at the time the cause of action arose. The position between the parties is that the plaintiff firm addressed the defendants and asked them whether they would be in a position to supply power in the premises to which they contemplated going. The manager replied that subject to certain limitations he would supply the power. Subsequently, the defendant firm alleged that they were unable to comply for various reasons. They stated that the manager had exceeded his authority in giving the assurance and, therefore, declined to carry out the undertaking given by him. The plaintiffs contend that as they had been supplied with power for many years in their old premises, the continuance of that supply in the new premises is tantamount to maintaining the status quo existing at the time the alleged default or breach was committed, that they are asking for nothing new and, therefore, the injunction passed complies with the provisions of O. XXXIX. Counsel for the defendants has argued that under no circumstances can a mandatory injunction issue and he relies on the very instructive judgment of Beaman, J., in Rasul Karim v. Pirbhai Amirbhai (1). As against this there are two Division Bench rulings of Madras and Calcutta to the effect that a mandatory injunction may certainly issue. It is not necessary for me to follow or dissent from any of these rulings and in truth the divergence of opinion is more apparent than real, for Beaman, J. was careful to explain that what he disapproved of and considered illegal was a 'true' mandatory injunction in the sense of a final injunction in mandatory form and not every and any interlocutory order, which it may be more convenient to express in mandatory rather than prohibitory language and which can be worded either way. For instance, in a suit concerning an easement a party asks to have a certain window kept open until the decision of the suit. It is optional to the Court to order the other side to keep the window open or forbid it to close it and the former is not a true mandatory injunction in the sense in which the words are used by Beaman, J., for it is not final. It is also pointed out in that judgment that a great objection to all mandatory injunctions is that it is almost impossible to avoid prejudging thereby the final decision and this more especially in suits for specific performance where it is optional to the Court to order such specific performance or to award damages. If the specific performance has been ordered by an interlocutory injunction it follows almost necessarily that if the plaintiff does succeed, the possibility of awarding damages in the alternative will not even be considered. To this, however, the answer appears to me to be that O. XXXIX does not lay down that a Court must pass an injunction, for full discretion is allowed and I presume that no Court would ever pass an injunction giving the specific relief prayed for in the plaint or any part of it, unless it were satisfied that if the plaintiff were eventually to prove successful, it would decree such specific performance and not pecuniary damages. However, all the authorities are agreed that whether the injunction be one restraining a party from altering the position of affairs or directing it to restore the conditions which prevailed at the time the cause of action arose, that order must not go further and must not create a totally new state of things. Now, this is exactly what the order of the District Judge appears to me to have effected. The premises in which the plaintiffs now carry on business, have never had the connection or the power to which the plaintiffs claim they are entitled. It cannot, therefore, be truly said that an order which compels the defendant firm to connect these premises with the source of supply for the first time restores the pre-existing any more than it maintains the present condition of affairs. The supply of electricity is not like an over-coat which a man can take with him from one house to another and the connection of premises is a definite act, which totally and radically alters the character of those premises in a most important particular. It appears to me, therefore, that whether or no an injunction in mandatory form or a "true" injunction in mandatory form is within the scope of O. XXXIX, it certainly never is if it creates a totally new set of conditions.

The learned District Judge appears to have been influenced more especially by the equitable nature of the plaintiffs' claim and the grave difficulty the firm must experience in carrying on business without the necessary supply. Even if it be granted for the sake of argument that the contentions of the plaintiffs are true and that they would not have moved to the new premises had they not believed that they would be given the connection which they required, and that that connection was promised by the manager, and even if it be admitted that it is practically impossible for them to carry on business under the present conditions, no sufficient reason has been made out for the granting of this injunction until the case is concluded and it is proved that the manager had authority to give that promise and to bind the defendant Company. The facts are very nearly as if a plaintiff were to come into Court and say: "I am suing for Rs. 1,000; my claim is good and true and just, I am threatened with bankruptcy for want of this sum of money, and, therefore, I ask for an injunction directing the defendant to pay over this sum until the decision of the suit and I will return it if I lose." In such a case the plaintiff does not pretend that he had the Rs. 1,000 before he instituted the suit but he contends that he is entitled to receive it. So here the plaintiff does not say that the connection which he enjoyed has been taken from him and that it should be restored until the suit be decided, but that an entirely new connection to entirely new premises should be given to him because he is suffering a grievous injury. Under these circumstances, however grievous the injury may be, and however true and just the plaintiffs' claim may finally be shown to be, he cannot be given the relief he seeks until he has proved his case. I find, therefore, that the District Judge has acted without jurisdiction in passing an order which is not covered by O. XXXIX, r. 2, that he has gone beyond the scope of that rule and has acted with material irregularity in doing so and in directing the defendants to establish a totally new set of conditions by what purports to be an interlocutory temporary injunction restoring the state of things which never existed.

I, therefore, except the revision and set aside the order of the District Judge. The costs of the petitioners defendants will be paid by the respondents throughout.

Estoppel, principles of—Lease for building purposes—Presumption of permanency.

Where the owner of a plot of land by his own act or representation creates or induces in the mind of his tenant a mistaken belief that he has a permanent interest in the land and may safely build thereon and the tenant, relying upon the act or representation so made, treats his interest as permanent and incurs expense in building which he would not otherwise have done, the owner cannot afterwards be heard to deny the truth of that which he represented [p. 744, col 2]

Estoppel may arise by reason of either a declaration, an act or an omission, but in either case there must be an intention on the part of the person, against whom the estoppel operates, to cause or permit a belief in the mind of another. In the case of a mere omission no such intention can well be imputed unless the true facts are known to the person whose omission is in question, but where there is a deliberate declaration or act causing or permitting such belief and inducing another to act upon it, it must be presumed that such declaration or act was intended to have its ordinary and natural effect upon the mind and actions of the other party. [p. 70, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This is an appeal by the defendants under the Letters Patent from a decision of Mr. Justice Ross, dated the 19th July 1921 setting aside a decree of the lower Appellate Court.

The appellants, Messrs. Ralli Brothers, are merchants carrying on business in Calcutta and other places. The respondent, Mr. A. H. Forbes, is the proprietor of a large estate in the Purneah District of this Province. The appellants are the lessees under the respondent of 4 bighas of land on the latter's estate under an instrument dated the 22nd January 1891.

On the 17th September 1917 the respondent instituted this suit as plaintiff claiming to eject the appellants and recover possession of the land. His case is that the lease was a yearly lease and could be terminated by him on giving six months' notice, which was duly given, but the appellants refused to give up possession. It is the appellants' case, first, that the lease was a permanent lease, or, secondly, if the instrument does not bear this interpretation, that they had been induced by the acts and representations of Mr. Forbes to believe that they had a permanent interest in the land and that acting thereon, and in good faith, they had erected permanent buildings on the land and established a business connection at that place at considerable expense and that Mr. Forbes was estopped from denying the truth of the representation. They rely upon the provisions of section 115 of the Evidence Act and the equitable doctrine of estoppel.

The Munsif, before whom the case came for trial, was of opinion that the lease was a permanent one and not a lease from year to year and, further, that Mr. Forbes had induced the appellants to build upon the land at considerable expense by representing that Messrs. Ralli Brothers had a permanent interest and was estopped from denying the truth of the representation.

On appeal the Officiating District Judge affirmed the decree of the Munsif and dismissed the appeal.

A second appeal to this Court was argued before Mr. Justice Ross who was of opinion that the lease created a yearly tenancy only and not a permanent interest in the land. On the question of estoppel the learned Judge held that, as the written lease was plain and unambiguous in its terms, there was no room for mistake and, as the lease was not a permanent one, no statement about it by Mr. Forbes could make it so. He further considered that there was in fact no representation that the lease was a permanent lease and that no opinion expressed by Mr. Forbes could alter the nature of the estate taken under the deed and that there was no estoppel.

From this decision Messrs. Ralli Brothers have appealed under the Letters Patent to this Bench. It is contended on their behalf, first, that the lease in fact grants a permanent interest and, secondly, that upon the facts found by the lower Appellate Court, which cannot be questioned in second appeal, the respondent is estopped from denying the truth of the representation made by him as found by the lower Appellate Court, and that it was not competent for the learned Judge of this Court by his decision to arrive at a different conclusion of fact and base his decision thereon.

It is necessary, therefore, to consider in some detail the facts alleged by the parties and the conclusions arrived at by the Officiating District Judge in first appeal. The lease in question is dated the 22nd June 1894 and was registered three days later. The lease itself has been put in evidence and the kabuliyat executed by Mr. Asator, the Agent of Messrs. Ralli Brothers, has also been proved and admittedly contains the terms of the lease. It provides as follows:—“That whereas land is required by me Mr. Asator, Agent of Messrs. Ralli Brothers, Sahabgunge Agency, for the purpose of erecting buildings, putting up press, etc. for trading, I, the aforesaid Agent agree to lease from Mr. A. H. Forbes, executor to the estate of the late A. J. Forbes, 4 bighas of land for the above purpose measured with the local rod of $4\frac{1}{2}$ cubits of 18 inches situate in Mauza Pokhar, Pargana Sultanpur, Thana Matari in the District of Purnea and adjacent to the Forbesgunj Railway Station on the following terms, viz, from year to year at an annual rental of Rs. 45 per bigha or total rental of Rs. 180 and to pay Zamindari Dak cess as well as all legal cesses payable at present and which may hereafter be enforced by Government beginning from the agricultural year 1302 M. S.” The second clause provides for payment of the rental by quarterly instalments. The third clause restricts the tenant from cutting down or selling any trees on the land without the sanction of the lessor under penalty of paying Rs. 10 per tree or more according to the value thereof. The fourth clause provides that if at any future date the area of the land under the lease should be found by measurement to be in excess of the area leased the tenant should pay rent for the excess according to the highest rate then prevailing. The fifth clause provides that the nominal lessee, Mr. Asator, shall have no right to transfer except to the name of Messrs. Ralli Brothers or to sell any portion of the land without the written authority of the lessor. The sixth and last clause contains the boundaries and dimensions of the land settled.

By section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act, in the absence of a contract or local law or usage to the contrary, the lease of immoveable property for agricultural or manufacturing purposes shall be deemed to be a lease from year to year terminable by six months' notice by either party. But where a lease has been granted for building purposes, and no term is specified in the instrument, if the buildings contemplated or in fact erected are of a permanent nature, the Courts in this country have generally presumed that the interest granted was intended to be a permanent one. The present lease purports to be a building lease and buildings have in fact been erected of a permanent nature but the terms are stated to be from year to year at an annual rental of Rs. 45 per bigha, and some years later, towards the end of 1903, Messrs. Ralli Brothers, although they considered, as was found by the learned District Judge, that they had a permanent interest in the land and might safely erect permanent buildings thereon, nevertheless, owing to a certain vagueness in the terms of the lease, approached the lessor before doing so. Accordingly on the 31st December 1903 an interview took place between Mr. Forbes and his agent, Mr. Duff, on the one hand and Mr. Carras representing Messrs. Ralli Brothers on the other. The purport of what took place at that interview was given in evidence by Mr. Carras and was accepted by the learned Judge. At the request of Mr. Carras the result of what took place at that interview was reduced to writing and is contained in a letter written to Mr. Carras by Mr. Duff the same day. The letter is in these terms:—

Sultanpur,

Dear, Mr. Carras,

Referring to your conversation of this morning with Mr. Forbes and myself I write at your request to say that the lease executed by Mr. C. Asator dated the 22nd June 1894 is a permanent lease and gives you the right to erect buildings but it does not entitle you to hold at a fixed rate and the rent is liable to enhancement after proper legal notice. If your firm desires to have a permanent lease at a fixed rate of rent I will be glad to see the proposed draft of lease and to show it to Mr. Forbes. In the meantime you can commence the house if you like to do so.

Yours sincerely,
(Sd.) PATRIK DUFF,
Manager, Sultanpur Estate.

RALLI V. FORBES.

The evidence of Mr. Carras, which was accepted by the learned District Judge, was to the effect that he wanted to construct a permanent building for his residence on a portion of the leasehold land and, on referring the matter to his principals at Calcutta, was instructed that the point should be made quite clear as to whether the lease was a permanent one or not. He accordingly interviewed Mr. Forbes and his manager Mr. Duff, when a conversation took place between them the substance of which was embodied in the letter of the 31st December. Mr. Duff was not called as a witness. Mr. Forbes, however, was called and apparently denied all recollection of the matter. It was found as a fact that the letter accurately represented the substance of the conversation between Mr. Forbes and his agent and Mr. Carras and that the letter was written under the directions of Mr. Forbes. It appears that at this time Messrs. Ralli Brothers wished to have a permanent lease at a fixed rent and it is clear from the letter that the question whether the rent was fixed or liable to enhancement was discussed at the interview, and the agreement came to was that the lease was permanent but did not entitle the tenant to hold at a fixed rate of rent. It appears further from the Munsif's judgment that a nazarana was paid by the lessees in respect of the building which was commenced sometime in January 1904 and completed in May and, from a letter written by Mr. Duff to Messrs. Ralli Brothers' Solicitors on the 23rd January, it appears that before building the lessees had called for the lessor's title-deeds. This letter refuses to produce the title deeds stating that matters of greater importance than the lease of a few bighas of land were constantly transacted in the lessor's estate without the production of such papers and that there were no special title-deeds for the plot of land which Messrs. Ralli Brothers had held for the last nine years. It then says: "Mr. Forbes, therefore, declines to produce such valuable papers as he holds and considers that the existing lease with the addition of the sanction recently given to erect the building is sufficient for all requirements." It is found as a fact that the defendants would never have undertaken the construction of a masonry building at such a heavy cost if they had not been led to do so by the representation of the plaintiff and his manager referred to above. It is also found in terms that Mr. Forbes gave Messrs. Ralli Brothers fully to understand that the lease of 1894 was a permanent lease and that they could construct buildings without any fear but had no right to hold the land at a fixed rate. From 1904 till 1916 the appellants remained in occupation paying the rent reserved under the lease. In that year the lessor's Kachari or estate-house was unfortunately destroyed by fire. He thereupon attempted to levy a toll upon each of his tenants at the rate of 0-1-6 per rupee of their rental for the purpose of re-building the Kachari. Whether the other tenants of Mr. Forbes submitted without protest to this procedure does not appear, but Messrs. Ralli Brothers definitely refused to contribute their proportion and were undoubtedly within their rights in so doing. This appears to have given offence to Mr. Forbes who in August 1916 served the lessees with notice to quit and subsequently instituted the present suit.

I have referred in some detail to the findings of the Additional District Judge as it is upon these findings that the determination of the question of estoppel must depend. With regard to the appellant's first contention viz., that the lease is in fact a permanent one, in my opinion, the decision of Ross, J., now under appeal was right and that of the Additional District Judge cannot be supported. Admitting that a lease granted for the purpose of building permanent structures may be presumed to pass a permanent interest. I do not think that such a presumption can outweigh the actual terms of the lease itself. The lease purports to be from year to year at an annual rental of Rs. 45 per bigha and this, in my opinion, can only be construed as granting a lease from year to year even if the lessees have power to build. Certain cases were referred to by the appellants in support of their contention on the first point. The first is that of Juhoore Lal Sahoo v. Mr. H. Dear (1) but that decision goes no further than this, that where the land is given to a lessee for the purpose of building a house to live in, without any term being fixed for the tenancy, the tenure of the house and land cannot be taken away from the lessee's heir or his vendee as long as he continues to pay the rent. The decision goes no further than to raise a presumption of permanency in the case of building leases where no term is fixed which does not appear to me to be the present case where the term is said to be from year to year. It was contended, however, that the words "year to year at an annual rental of Rs. 45 per bigha" meant no more than an undertaking to pay the rent year after year and the case of Raja Promoda Nath Roy v. Sri Govinda Choudhury.⁽²⁾ was cited, where it was held that where a lease was given for building purposes the Court may well presume that it was intended to be a perpetual lease. The words used in that instance were: "You will pay the rent, etc. at the above rate kist by kist year after year" and the following passage in the judgment of Ghose and Bodilly, J.J., was relied upon that even a lease stated to be from year to year might be of a permanent nature: "As already noticed the lease in this case does not specify any period during which it is to subsist. The land was to be held by the lessee from year to year at a certain yearly rent and in the event of a masonry building being erected on it the lessee would be liable to pay the prevailing rate of rent. And it seems to me, looking at the document as a whole, that the absence of the words, muaruzi mukarrari and so forth which are usually found in grants in perpetuity does not indicate that it was not the intention of the lessor to grant a permanent lease." If by this the learned Judges meant that the lease was in fact one from year to year the decision eventually arrived at seems hardly consistent with that finding nor were the words from year to year in that part of the judgment a correct reproduction of the words actually used in the lease. I do not think that a chance expression such as that relied upon and which may well have been made per incuriam can have any binding force as an authority upon the construction of such leases.

(1) 23 W. R. 399.

RALLI C. FORBES.

In Sarada Kripal Ua v. Akhil Chandra Biswas

(3) the lease which was called a taluka patta recited that the tenant had executed a kabuliyat in favour of the grantor and that the taluka patta was granted on rent of Rs. 1 from year to year. Then followed a covenant in these terms:—"You shall erect houses upon the land and live there. If I have a personal necessity you shall relinquish the land and you will not be entitled to make any objection." It was held that if there be nothing either in the surrounding circumstances or in the instrument which creates the interest to show that it was intended to be otherwise, the inference is that a lease described as a taluka patta was intended to be permanent. The words in that case "on rent of Rs. 1 from year to year" were clearly taken as indicating merely a yearly rent of one rupee and having no reference to the term demised, and no point appears to have been taken that they could bear any other interpretation. In the present case, however, the words are different and appear to me to indicate both a lease from year to year and an annual rental of Rs. 45. I hold, therefore, that the lease must be construed as a yearly lease. At the same time the cases to which reference has been made may well have raised a doubt in the minds of the parties in this case as to what their exact rights were under the instrument in question and this is not without importance in considering the question of estoppel.

In support of their plea of estoppel the appellants rely upon the case of Ramsden v. Dymon (4) and contend that on the facts found by the Officiating District Judge the respondent is estopped from denying the permanent nature of their interest. The doctrine is thus expressed by Lord Cranworth, L. C., in that case:—

"If a stranger begins to build on my land supposing it to be his own, and I, perceiving his mistake, abstain from setting him right, and leave him to persevere in his error, a Court of Equity will not allow me afterwards to assert my title to the land on which he had expended money on the supposition that the land was his own. It considers that, when I saw the mistake into which he had fallen, it was my duty to be active and to state my adverse title; and that it would be dishonest in me to remain wilfully passive on such an occasion, in order afterwards to profit by the mistake which I might have prevented.

But it will be observed that to raise such an equity two things are required, first, that the person expending the money supposes himself to be building on his own land; and, secondly, that the real owner at the time of the expenditure knows that the land belongs to him and not to the person expending the money in the belief that he is the owner. For if a stranger builds on my land knowing it to be mine, there is no principle of equity which would prevent my claiming the land with the benefit of all the expenditure made on it. There would be nothing in my conduct, active or passive, making it inequitable in me to assert my legal rights."

The respondent, on the other hand, contends that on the facts found the case is not governed by the principle there enunciated. The Lord Chancellor in thus stating the principle deals only with the case where the owner of the land takes no active part in inducing the tenant to build or encouraging him in the mistaken idea that he has a right to do so, but merely remains passive whilst he perceives the mistake. The reason why Courts of Equity refuse to allow the owner of land to profit by such a mistake rests upon the ground that it would be conniving at dishonesty to permit him to do so. But in the case supposed where the owner merely stands by and does nothing, and afterwards seeks to eject the tenant there can be no question of fraud or dishonesty unless the owner was aware when the building was erected that he had power to prevent it. In such a case there could be no obligation or duty upon him to disclose that of which he was not himself aware, and it is the attempt to take advantage of this breach of duty or obligation which constitutes the dishonesty. Similarly, if the tenant is aware that he has no right to build, there is no obligation upon the owner to inform him of that which he already knows, nor would it make any difference in such a case that the owner was well aware of his own rights. The knowledge of the owner as to his power to interfere is, therefore, essential where his conduct is merely passive and he takes no active steps to create or induce a mistaken belief in the mind of the tenant as to the latter's rights, or as to his own acquiescence in or consent to the trespass. Lord Cranworth, L. C., did not in terms formulate any principle indicating the factors which would be necessary for the application of the doctrine where the owner by his own words or acts intentionally caused the tenant to believe that he was entitled to build or induced him to do so. But I apprehend that where the owner, being either ignorant of his rights or uncertain of their extent, by his own act or representation creates or induces in the mind of his tenant a mistaken belief that he has a permanent interest in the land and may safely build thereon, and the tenant, relying upon the act or representation so made, treats his interest as permanent and incurs expense in building, which he would not otherwise have done, the owner cannot afterwards be heard to deny the truth of that which he represented. To allow him to do so would, in my opinion, be opposed to the fundamental principles of the doctrine of estoppel. For just as in the former case the rightful owner must be deemed guilty of a dishonest act if knowing an innocent mistake has been committed he omits to correct it and afterwards seeks to take advantage of it, so, in the latter case if he actively assists in creating the mistaken belief in the mind of his tenant which the tenant acts upon in good faith, it would be contrary to honest dealing if the landlord were afterwards to go back upon his word, however innocent his conduct may have been in the first instance.

The facts found by the majority of their Lordships in Ramsden v. Dyson (4) did not bring the case within the doctrine, but Lord Kingsdown who took a different view of the facts enunciated the rule thus:—

"The rule of law applicable to the case appears to me to be this: If a man, under a verbal agreement with a landlord for a certain interest in land, or, what amounts to the same thing, under an expectation, created or encouraged by the landlord, that he shall have a certain interest, takes possession of such land, with the consent of the landlord, and upon the faith of such promise or expectation, with the knowledge of the landlord and without objection by him, lays out money upon the land, a Court of Equity will compel the landlord to give effect to such promise or expectation. This was the principle of the decision in Gregory v. Mighell (5) and, as I conceive, is open to no doubt."

Although Lord Kingsdown differed from the majority of their Lordships in his appreciation of the evidence, his decision as to the principle to be applied has not, so far as I am aware, ever been questioned. It was referred to by Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., in the Municipal Corporation of Bombay v. Secretary of State for India (6) as a correct exposition of the doctrine and was applied in that case. Moreover, the application of the doctrine of estoppel in this country, in so far as it creates a rule of evidence, is governed by Statute and finds expression in section 115 of the Evidence Act. Whether there be, as stated by Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., in that case, essential differences between the law embodied in the section and the equitable doctrine referred to, I do not propose to discuss, for full effect must be given in this country to the rule enacted by the section, which appears to me to do no more than embody in a compendious form the result of the principles laid down in the decided cases. It is unnecessary, therefore, to refer in detail to all the English authorities which were referred to in argument. Section 115 of the Evidence Act provides as follows:—

"When one person has, by his declaration, act or omission, intentionally caused or permitted another person to believe a thing to be true and to act upon such belief, neither he nor his representative shall be allowed, in any suit or proceeding between himself and such person or his representative, to deny the truth of that thing."

It will be observed from the wording of this section that it combines the principles underlying the doctrine of estoppel as enunciated both by Lord Cranworth, L. C., and Lord Kingsdown in Ramsden v. Dyson (4). The estoppel may arise by reason of either a declaration, an act or an omission, but in either case there must be an intention on the part of the person against whom the estoppel operates to cause or permit a belief in the mind of another. In the case of a mere omission no such intention can well be imputed unless the true facts are known to the person whose omission is in question, but where there is a deliberate declaration or act causing or permitting such belief and inducing another to act upon it, it must be presumed that such declaration or act was intended to have its ordinary and natural effect upon the mind and actions of the other party. In considering the effect of this section I cannot do better than refer to the case of Sarat Chunder Dey v. Gopal Chunder Lahz (7) where Lord Shand in delivering the judgment of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee dealing with the case of a declaration or act observed:—

"In regard to the first of these points, the section of the Evidence Act by which the question must be determined does not make it a condition of estoppel resulting that the person who by his declaration or act has induced the belief on which another has acted was either committing or seeking to commit a fraud, or that he was acting with a full knowledge of the circumstances, and under no mistake or misapprehension. The Court is not warranted or entitled to add any such qualifying conditions to the language of the Act; but even if they had the power of thus virtually interpolating words in the Statute which are not to be found there, their Lordships are clearly of opinion that there is neither principle nor authority for any such legal doctrine as would warrant this. The learned Counsel who argued the present case on either side were agreed that the terms of the Indian Evidence Act did not enact as law in India anything different from the law of England on the subject of estoppel, and their Lordships entirely adopt that view. The law of this country gives no countenance to the doctrine that in order to create estoppel the person whose acts or declarations induced another to act in a particular way must have been under no mistake himself, or must have acted with an intention to mislead or deceive. What the law and the Indian Statute mainly regard is the position of the person who was induced to act; and the principle on which the law and the Statute rest is, that it would be most inequitable and unjust to him that if another by a representation made, or by conduct amounting to a representation, has induced him to act as he would not otherwise have done, the person who made the representation should be allowed to deny or repudiate the effect of his former statement, to the loss and injury of the person who acted on it. If the person who made the statement did so without full knowledge, or under error, sibi imputet, it may in the result be unfortunate for him, but it would be unjust, even though he acted under error, to throw the consequences on the person who believed his statement and acted on it as it was intended he should do."

The judgment from which I have just quoted contains a forcible and lucid exposition of the law of estoppel as administered in India and based upon the Statute. Upon the facts found by the lower Appellate Court the present case appears to me to come directly within the four corners of the principle as enunciated by Lord Shaw.

It is contended on behalf of the respondent, however, that the terms of the lease are so clear that there can be no room for mistake, and that Messrs. Ralli Brothers could never have been deceived as to their actual rights by any representation made by Mr. Forbes. It is further argued that the representation was at most a mere expression of opinion upon which Messrs. Ralli Brothers might act or not at their own risk. This appears to have been the view taken by Ross, J., in the decision now under appeal. The learned Judge also appears to have considered that there was no representation at all of any existing fact and, as I read his judgment, he arrived at this conclusion by finding that the representation such as it was was a mere expression of opinion, or, at most of the landlord's present intention. In face of the express findings I must respectfully decline to speculate as to whether a person of reasonable intelligence could honestly believe the instrument created more than a yearly interest. It is found as a fact that Messrs. Ralli Brothers thought that they had a permanent interest but that the terms of the lease were vague and indefinite, and they, therefore, had a doubt, and wanted it cleared up before committing themselves to building. I think that is a fair inference to be drawn from the findings as a whole. In these circumstances they approached the lessor who definitely declared that the lease was a permanent one and gave the lessees the right to erect buildings. By so acting the lessor dissipated any doubt that remained in the mind of his lessees and induced them to spend money in building which, it is found, they never would have done but for the representation made. The suggestion that the representation was a mere expression of opinion was argued before the Officiating District Judge but was rejected by him and, in my opinion, rightly. The finding of the Officiating District Judge who had the evidence before him is conclusive on this question of fact and it could not be re-opened in second appeal.

The case of Jorden v. Money (8) was also referred to in argument and relied on by the respondent. From the facts found in that case it would appear that the representations relied upon were taken to amount merely to an expression of present intention by Mrs. Jordon which created no estoppel fettering her future conduct or preventing that lady from changing her mind. It was found that she never agreed to give up her legal rights but merely intimated that she had no present intention of enforcing them, and any one who speculated upon the slender chances of a lady remaining of the same mind could not afterwards complain if his venture turned out unprofitable. The representation may well have been true as to the state of affairs existing at the time it was made, and it was nonetheless true because subsequently Mrs. Jordon's intention altered. The representation in the present case cannot be regarded as the mere expression of an intention. It is in the nature of a declaration of the tenant's rights and a direct invitation to them to act upon it which in consequence they did.

It was further contended by the learned Counsel for the respondent that the proper course, if our judgment should be against him on the point of estoppel, was to grant him a decree of ejectment giving the appellants compensation for the sums expended by them on the buildings. In my opinion no reason has been shown why this course should be adopted and it is manifest that the mere cost of building would not adequately compensate the appellants for the loss of the land in connection with which after erecting permanent structures at considerable expense they have established a large business connection. In my opinion the proper course to follow is to dismiss the plaintiff's claim. I would allow this appeal and dismiss the suit with costs here and in the Courts below.

Where owing to the failure of the decree-holder to deposit the necessary charges, an execution sale is not properly announced and the omission results in a paucity of bidders, the irregularity must be taken to have caused substantial injury to the judgment-debtor and the sale will be set aside on that ground.

Surno Moyee Debi v. Dakhina Ranjan, 24 C. 291; 12 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 861, relied upon.

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the District Judge, Dara Ghazi Khan, dated the 21st January 1921.

Lala Jagan Nath, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kanwar Narain, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—For details of the facts leading to this appeal my judgment in Miscellaneous Civil Appeal No. 1436 of 1921, dated 12th November 1921, may be consulted. This appeal relates to an objection by Nand Lal that the sale attacked should be set aside on the ground of irregularities. Mr. Kanwar Narain has admitted that the following irregularities took place:—

(i) omission to announce sale by beat of drum,

(ii) all the judgment debtors were not personally served.

He, however, contended that under the proviso to r. 90 of O. XXI, Civil Procedure Code, such irregularities must be regarded as immaterial unless the objector can show that he has sustained substantial injury by reason of them.

Mr. Jagan Nath referred to the report of the Civil Nazir (Khuda Bakhsh) who conducted the sale and urged that this report showed beyond doubt that substantial injury had been caused by these irregularities. This report is dated 17th November 1920 and shows that the bidders were less than they might have been owing to the failure to announce the sale by beat of drum—an omission due to the refusal on the part of the decree-holder to pay the requisite fees.

In Ramaswamy Chetty v. Ma U Tha (1) it was held that omission to give notice to the judgment-debtors of an execution sale of their property is fatal.

In Surno Moyee Debi v. Dakhina Ranjan (2) it was held that the sale of property for an inadequate price due to the paucity of bidders by reason of an irregularity in the proceedings showed that the injury was a necessary result of the irregularity.

In the present case the paucity of bidders was due (according to Khuda Bakhsh whom I see no reason to disbelieve) to the irregularity in not announcing the sale by beat of drum, and the failure to do this was due to the omission on the part of the decree-holder to pay the necessary charges.

Though the omission to serve the other judgment-debtors may be disregarded, (for Nand Lal, the objector, was served). I do not think I can overlook the other irregularity which is material and which I consider resulted in an injury to appellant.

I accordingly accept this appeal with costs and setting aside the sale direct that the property be re-sold in accordance with law.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Lahore, dated the 26th April 1921, confirming that of the Senior Sub Judge, Lahore, dated the 3rd July 1920.

Mr. Carden Noad and Lala Harbhajan Doss, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. Obedullah, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a miscellaneous second appeal from the appellate decision of the District Judge, Lahore, passed in certain execution proceedings. On the 8th of April 1911 the respondent, S. P. Netto, and two others executed a pro-note in favour of the appellant Ram Das. It appears that on the 18th July 1911 S. P. Netto filed a petition in insolvency in the High Court of Bombay and obtained his discharge from that Court on the 1st of November 1911. In the schedule of creditors S. P. Netto showed Ram Das as being entitled to a sum of Rs. 500 and another sum of Rs. 50. On the 24th of September 1912 Netto filed a second petition in insolvency also in the Bombay High Court and obtained his discharge on the 16th of June 1915. Ram Das's name was not entered as one of the creditors in the second insolvency proceedings.

On the 16th of January 1917 Ram Das instituted a suit against S. P. Netto and two others on the pro note dated 8th April 1911 and obtained an ex parte decree against S. P. Netto alone on the 2nd of May 1917. On the 14th of January 1920 Ram Das applied for execution of the decree by attachment of S. P. Netto's pay. S. P. Netto then pleaded that his pay could not be attached in execution of this decree inasmuch as the claim on which the decree was based had been satisfied by the orders of discharge made by the Bombay High Court on the 1st of November 1911 and again on the 16th of June 1915. Ram Das pleaded that he knew nothing of the insolvency proceedings which took place in Bombay and that the debt due under the pro-note sued upon had not been included in the schedule. The Courts below have held that inasmuch as the order discharging S. P. Netto amounted to satisfaction of all the debts entered in the schedule the decree in question could not be executed. Ram Das has now come up to this Court in second appeal and on his behalf I have heard Mr. Carden Noad while Mr. Obedullah has addressed me on behalf of the respondent, S. P. Netto.

It has been contended that the Courts below have erred in going behind the decree and that the objection now taken by S. P. Netto could not be given effect to in execution proceedings. Mr. Carden Noad admitted, for the purposes of argument, that had S. P. Netto raised this plea in the suit itself it would have concluded the matter but he contended that as S. P. Netto allowed the suit to be decreed, all that the Courts had to do was to execute the decree and that they were not concerned with the question whether the decree was a good or a bad one. As pointed out by Mulla in his Commentary on the Civil Procedure Code, 7th Edition, page 114, the Court executing a decree must take the decree as it stands. It has no power to go behind the decree, in other words, it cannot entertain any objection as to the legality or correctness of the decree, the reason being that a decree, though it may not be according to law, is binding and conclusive between the parties, if it is not appealed from. In Chhoh Narain Singh v. Rameshwar Koor (1) it was held that questions under section 47, relating to the execution of a decree and arising between the parties to a suit in which the decree was passed or their representatives, must be such as have reference to matters arising subsequent to the passing of the decree and not antecedent to it. In the present case the plea raised appears to me to amount to a plea that the decree had been satisfied. Indeed if I understood Mr. Obedullah aright, what he contended was that the satisfaction alleged was based on the orders of discharge by the Bombay High Court. Whichever order be relied on neither of them can be held to have discharged the debt due under the decree, and it was the execution of the decree that the Courts below were concerned with. I do not think that they had any power to go into the question whether the decree had been rightly and legally passed. Mr. Obedullah referred to Lakshmiram Kevalram Bhatt v. Lunamchand Titamber (2) but that case is distinguishable from the present one in that there the question before the Court was whether an injunction should issue staying proceedings in a foreign Court. At page 155* the learned Judges say that no doubt the point for argument before the learned Judge was whether the order of discharge is a complete release or not from the debts mentioned in the schedule. Such an order no doubt would be recognised by all Courts in the British Empire. It seems to me, however, that those remarks must be confined to a plea raised in defence of a suit based on a claim to which an order of discharge related. Had S. P. Netto defended the suit on the pro note and advanced this plea in all probability the plea would have been given effect to and the suit dismissed. He, however, allowed the case to go ex parte with the result that the claim was decreed and the mere fact that the claim itself ought not to have been decreed inasmuch as it had been discharged by Statute, would not, I think, be sufficient to empower a Court to refuse execution of the decree when passed. Take the case of a suit based on a claim which owing to the efflux of time had become barred. Suppose the defendant failed to appear and thus did not raise the plea of limitation with the result that the claim was decreed. Could the judgment-debtor when the decree-holders ought to execute that decree ask the executing Court to refuse execution on the ground that, as a matter of fact, the claim was barred and the decree should not have been passed. The answer must, I think, be in the negative. The present situation is very similar and, in my opinion, the Courts below were not empowered to go into the question whether the decree ought or ought not to have been passed. The decree-holder went into Court seeking to get his decree executed and I am of opinion that he was entitled to the assistance of the Court.

In these circumstances I accept this appeal with costs and direct the execution to proceed.

his being discharged, and would not be suspended because further proceedings might be taken either by Government or by the complainant in order to get the order of discharge set aside; if a revisional application is successful and the criminal proceedings are directed to be continued, then there is no longer any cause of action, because the plaintiff is no longer a discharged person, and he has to wait until the prosecution terminates in his favour before his cause of action arises again.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, for Solomon Moses, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The only question in this appeal is when did time begin to run against the plaintiff who had filed this suit for damages for malicious prosecution. The period of limitation is one year from the time when the plaintiff is acquitted, or the prosecution is otherwise terminated. In this case the plaintiff was discharged more than a year prior to the suit, and clearly his cause of action would arise immediately on his being discharged, and would not be suspended because further proceedings might be taken either by Government or by the complainant in order to get the order of discharge set aside. No doubt if a revisional application is successful and the criminal proceedings are directed to be continued, then there is no longer any cause of action, because the plaintiff is no longer a discharged person and he has to wait until the prosecution terminates in his favour before his cause of action arises again. It was held in Venu v. Coorya Narayan (1) that the discharge of an accused person is the termination of the prosecution. That seems obvious, because if no further proceedings are taken, the accused person is free of the charge made against him, and if the charge was maliciously made he would have a right of bringing an action against the person who instituted it. Then in Narayya v. Seshayya (2) it was held that a suit for damages for malicious prosecution brought more than one year from the date of the plaintiff's acquittal, but within a year from the dismissal of a revision petition which had been filed against the acquittal, was barred under Article 23. The only difference between that case and this is that the plaintiff in that case was acquitted instead of being discharged. The result must be that the lower Courts were right in holding that the plaintiff's suit was barred. The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for possession of land brought by the reversioners of Khem Das on the basis of a decree of the Chief Court in Civil Appeal No. 1447 of 1916. It has been decreed by the Courts below and the defendant Kalu has come up in second appeal to this Court. The following pedigree table will be helpful in explaining the facts of the case:—

Khem Das died on the 19th March 1894. Mutation was effected in the name of Musammal Bresti on the 10th February 1895, as Sisu, the son, had pre-deceased Khem Das. On the 27th August 1907 Musammal Bresti gifted the land to Kalu. On the 9th January 1915 she, however, surrendered the estate to the plaintiffs in this case. On the 25th March 1915 mutation was effected in favour of the present plaintiffs. On the 23rd August 1915 Kalu sued Musammal Bresti, Channu, Kadshu, Rebtu, Tikum Ram and Nupu for a declaration that he was the owner of Khem Das's land, firstly, as the son of Khem Das, secondly, as a donee from Musammal Bresti and, thirdly, by adverse possession. On the 17th November 1915 the suit was decreed by Mr. Tyson, who held that adverse possession was proved and that Kalu was the heir of Khem Das. He did not decide the question of gift. On appeal by the present plaintiffs the Appellate Court upheld the first Court's decree on a different ground, namely, that the land being the self-acquired property of Khem Das the widow had full power of alienation and that the gift made by her in favour of Kalu was good and unimpeachable. On the question of heirship of the plaintiff to Khem Das the Court distinctly held that he was not the son of Khem Das being the son of one Man Chand. As, however, the decree of the First Court was upheld the present plaintiffs appealed to the Chief Court. The judgment of the Chief Court shows that only the question of the gift of Musammal Bresti was raised and considered. The Chief Court, however, held that Musammal Bresti had only a life-interest and could not confer an absolute right on Kalu. The following order was passed by the learned Judge, who decided the case:—

"The result is that I grant the plaintiff a declaratory decree to the effect that he shall be entitled to keep the land during the lifetime of Musammal Bresti, but that the gift in his favour shall not affect the reversionary rights of defendants Nos. 2 to 5, the collaterals of the deceased Khem Das." The widow Musammal Bresti having died the present suit is now brought by the plaintiffs for possession of the land in question on the basis of this decree. The main defence put forward by Kalu was that he was the son of Khem Das and as such was entitled to remain in possession of the property in spite of the decree of the Chief Court. Both the Courts below have held that the question raised in defence had been decided by the District Judge in the previous suit against the appellant and that his decision operated as res judicata. The plaintiffs' suit has been decreed and the defendant has come up in second appeal to this Court.

It is contended on his behalf that the decision of the District Judge in the previous suit cannot operate as res judicata for the following reasons, namely, (1) that as the suit of the plaintiff in that case was decreed on the basis of the gift made by Musammatt Bresti it was not necessary to decide the question whether he was the son of Khem Das or not, and (2) that as the entire decree was in favour of the plaintiffs he could not have appealed against the adverse decision of the District Judge on the question whether the plaintiff was the son of Khem Das or not. In my opinion there is no force in this contention. Kalu in the previous suit based his title to the property on two grounds, firstly, as the son of Khem Das and, secondly, as the donee from Musammatt Bresti. His title as the son of Khem Das would have given a higher right. As a donee his right to the property would be of a lesser kind; for as held it would inure only during the lifetime of Musammatt Bresti. Besides this, on the extinction of the donee's family the property would revert to the family of the donor. The decision as to the higher right claimed being against Kalu, appellant, he had every right to appeal. Moreover, he could have questioned the correctness of the decision of the District Judge under O. XLI, r. 22, Civil Procedure Code. The following cases are relied upon by the learned Counsel in support of his contention, but they have no bearing on the facts of the present case:—

- (i) Bai Nathi v. Narshi Dullabh (1),
- (ii) Kelu Nambiar v. Ohathu Nambiar (2),
- (iii) Buta Singh v. Lal Singh (3),
- (iv) Basanta v. Indar (4),
- (v) Allah Dia v. Sandha (5),

In the case of Rama Krishna Naidu v. Krishnasami Naidu (6) it was laid down that the doctrine of res judicata should not be unduly conditioned and qualified by all sorts of ingenious attempts at evasion, where there has been in fact a fair contest on a question in dispute between the parties and the Court intended to give and has given a final decision on that question. In my opinion this is a correct ruling and is fully applicable to the present case. I hold, therefore, that the question now raised is clearly barred by the rule of res judicata. I accordingly uphold the decrees of the Courts below and dismiss the appeal with costs.

There is a slight discrepancy between the final order of the learned Subordinate Judge contained in his judgment and the decrees prepared in the case. The plea No. 6 taken in the memorandum of appeal filed in this Court relates to that discrepancy. The decrees in this Court will be prepared in the terms of the decretal order made by the learned Subordinate Judge in his judgment dated the 17th November 1920, which runs thus:—

"I, therefore, at once grant plaintiffs and defendant No. 2 a decree for possession of the land with costs against defendant No. 1."

In other respects the decrees of the First Court will stand.

SIDHRAJ BHOJRAJ v. ALI HAJI.

Where after a debt has become due and payable and time has begun to run against the creditor, the debtor is adjudicated insolvent but his petition is subsequently dismissed and the adjudication order cancelled, the time during which the insolvency proceedings were pending is not to be deducted in computing the period of limitation for a suit brought by the creditor. [p. 758, col. 2.]

Section 17 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act is not a bar absolute to the creditor's right to institute a suit unless the institution of a suit has been stayed by an injunction or order. The creditor, therefore, cannot claim a deduction of time, during which the insolvency was pending, in computing the period of limitation in any suit brought by him after the insolvency proceedings are quashed. Small Cause Court Reference made by the Third Judge of the Presidency Court of Small Causes at Bombay.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—This is a reference by the Third Judge of the Court of Small Causes.

The following questions have been referred:—

(1) Where after a debt has become due and payable and time has begun to run against the creditor, the debtor is adjudicated insolvent and his petition is subsequently dismissed and the adjudication order cancelled if the creditor institutes a suit thereafter against the debtor to recover the debt, is the time during which insolvency proceedings were pending to be deducted in computing the period of limitation?

(2) Is section 17 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act a bar absolute to the creditor's right to institute a suit so as to enable creditor to claim a deduction of the time during which the insolvency was pending, in computing the period of limitation in any suit brought by the creditor after the insolvency proceedings are quashed?

Judgment in the case was delivered by the Third Judge contingent on the opinion of the High Court under section 69 (2) of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act. But in spite of that the defendant applied to the Full Court. This would seem to be irregular as there was no decree or order against which an appeal would lie. Though the appeal was heard by the Full Court and both Judges were of opinion that a case should be stated, still the reference comes before us as on a case stated by the Third Judge alone.

We have not had the advantage of hearing the parties or their advocates.

We think both the questions should be answered in the negative.

When once time has begun to run against a plaintiff for the institution of a suit which he is competent to file, it will continue to run unless stopped by some provision of the Limitation Act. In this case the plaint was presented on the 11th July 1921. The suit was to recover the balance due on account of sugar sold and delivered to the defendant from the 16th March 1916 to the 31st October 1917. To save the bar of limitation the plaintiff relied upon the fact that the defendant was adjudicated insolvent on the 7th January 1919 by an order of the High Court which was annulled on the 5th October 1920.

The plaintiff contends that the period during which the adjudication order was in force should be excluded under section 15 of the Indian Limitation Act. That section says that where the institution of a suit has been stayed by an injunction or order, the time of continuance of the injunction or order, the day on which it was issued or made and the day on which it was withdrawn shall be excluded in computing the period of limitation prescribed for the suit. The plaintiff would then have to show that the institution of his suit was stayed by an injunction or order, or that it could be said that the institution of his suit was stayed by virtue of the provisions of section 17 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. That section says that on the making of an order of adjudication no creditor to whom the insolvent is indebted in respect of any debt provable in insolvency shall during the pendency of the insolvency proceedings have any remedy against the property of the insolvent in respect of the debt or shall commence any suit or other legal proceeding except with the leave of the Court or on such terms as the Court may impose. It cannot, therefore, be said that when an adjudication order is made there is any injunction or order against the institution of a suit by a creditor. Before a creditor can institute a suit he must comply with the formality prescribed by the section, and it is only when leave is refused that it can be said that there is an injunction or order staying the institution of the suit. In Ramaswami Pillai v. Govindaswami Naicker (1) the same question arose and it was decided that the period during which insolvency proceedings were pending could not be excluded. I think a certain amount of confusion of thought is due to the fact that with regard to the proof of debts in insolvency the date of the adjudication order determines a creditor's right to prove (section 6 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act), but a creditor has always to face the risk that the order may be annulled when made on a creditor's petition on the ground that no act of insolvency has been committed and for want of prosecution when made on the debtor's petition. The creditor, therefore, should see that his debt is acknowledged in the schedule, for even if his proof is admitted by the Official Assignee his claim may be barred if the adjudication order is annulled. Cases of real hardship must be very rare, for if a creditor allows the greater part of the time prescribed for instituting his suit to pass by, he has only himself to thank if the time expires pending insolvency proceedings. In this case it would appear that from the 7th January 1919 until the 5th October 1920 the plaintiff did nothing to protect himself either by getting an acknowledgment of his claim from the debtor or by asking for leave to put a suit on the file. The only excuse he may have had was that there had been previous decisions of the Small Cause Court to the effect that the period during which insolvency proceedings were pending could be excluded from the period of limitation.

SHAH, J.—We have not been assisted with any argument in this case; and the questions referred to us are not altogether free from difficulty.

On the whole I do not think that there is sufficient ground for not accepting the view taken by the Madras High Court in Ramaswami Pillai v. Govindaswami Naicker (1). It may work hardship in some cases.

(1) 49 Ind. Cas. 625; 42 M. 319; 36 M. L. J. 104; 25 M. L. T. 247; (1919) M. W. N. 698.

But in the absence of any order of the Insolvency Court refusing leave to commence the suit, it is difficult to hold that the provisions of section 15 of the Indian Limitation Act can apply. The mere fact of an adjudication order having been made does not necessarily mean that there is an injunction or order staying the institution of a suit within the meaning of section 15 of the Indian Limitation Act, though the effect of the order of adjudication read with section 17 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act is to prevent a creditor from commencing any suit against his debtor without the leave of the Court.

I do not consider it necessary to refer to the English decisions bearing on this point, as I do not think that the difficulty of interpreting the provisions in the Indian Acts on the point is removed thereby. In spite of the possible hardship in some cases, I think that, on the whole, the view of the Madras High Court is right.

I, therefore, agree that the questions should be answered as proposed by my Lord the Chief Justice.

ORDER.—The plaintiffs-appellants sued for a declaration that the adoption of defendant No. 2 by defendant No. 1 would not affect their reversionary rights. Defendant No. 2 is the sister's son of defendant No. 1 who is a sonless male proprietor, and the First Court laid the burden of proving the validity of adoption on the defendants and finding that they had not discharged it decreed the plaintiffs' claim. The lower Appellate Court was of opinion that the onus should have been upon the plaintiffs to prove that the adoption was invalid and holding after a further enquiry that they had not discharged it dismissed their suit. The plaintiffs then applied for a certificate to enable them to file a second appeal under section 41 (3) of the Punjab Courts Act. Upon this application the District Judge recorded the following order:—

"The real question in this case is as to the burden of proof and for an appeal on that no certificate is required. If the burden has been rightly assigned by me, then I cannot grant the certificate in the terms required by the section. If wrongly, then no certificate is, as said, needed. Refused."

The plaintiffs have accordingly filed a second appeal to this Court without a certificate and in the note to the memorandum of appeal they pray that if the District Judge is wrong in his view that no certificate is required, he should be directed to pass formal orders on the application for the grant of a certificate. In Allah Din v. Salam Din (1) (1) 81 Ind. Cas. 497; 96 P. R. 1915; 169 P. W. R. 1915.

it was held that the question of onus probandi in a custom case cannot be raised in second appeal without a certificate under section 41 (3) of the Punjab Courts Act. The same view was taken in Bhari v. Khannu (2) and in Ram Rakhi v. Mela Ram (3). We, therefore, have no hesitation in holding that the learned District Judge is wrong in his view that no certificate is necessary to enable the plaintiffs to file a second appeal in this Court.

Mr. Nanak Chand, on behalf of the plaintiffs, contends that this Court has no power to interfere on revision with the order of the lower Appellate Court refusing to grant a certificate. It was, however, held in Sarup Singh v. Jawahri (4) that when an application for a certificate under section 41 (3) of the Punjab Courts Act is refused by the District Judge on the erroneous ground that no question of custom arose, a revision to the Chief Court from the order of refusal is competent on the ground that the District Judge has failed to exercise the jurisdiction vested in him. Following this decision we hold that this Court certainly has power to interfere on revision with the order of the District Judge refusing a certificate on the erroneous ground that none was required for filing a second appeal. We, therefore, set aside the order of the District Judge refusing a certificate and remand the case to him in order that he may consider whether this is a fit case in which a certificate should be granted or not and may pass orders upon the application in accordance with law. The record will be returned to him and should come back to this Court within three months. If a certificate is granted by him a fresh date will be fixed for hearing the appeal.

RESPONDENT.

Trust, breach of—Executor depositing legacy money with Bank—Subsequent withdrawal and misappropriation—Liability of Bank—Notice—Actual and constructive—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 48, 62, application of.

K. died in the year 1900 leaving a Will whereby one J. was appointed executor and trustee and among other legacies, Rs. 50,000 were to be invested in the name of one F. The income was to be accumulated for F.'s benefit and the principal and the income were to be made over to him on his attaining 21 years. J. who took out the Probate deposited with the Bank of Bombay G. P. Notes of the value of Rs. 52,000 which were credited to account No. 1. A corresponding current account was opened to which the interest was to be credited. A power-of-attorney was executed by J. in favour of the Bank and the Probate of the Will was duly registered with the Bank. In May 1911 J. asked for a loan of Rs. 45,000 on the security of Notes for Rs. 52,000. Accordingly a loan account to J. was opened while notes for Rs. 52,000 were debited to account No. 1 and credited to advance account to J. In August J. wrote to the Bank to sell the Notes for Rs. 52,000. The Notes were sold accordingly, the loan account was closed and the balance was transferred to No. 1 current account. F. attained majority on 25th October 1913, and filed this suit against the Bank on 18th October 1918, praying that the Bank might be ordered to make good to him the sale-proceeds of Government paper standing to the credit of account No. 1 together with interest. He submitted that the Bank had notice, actual or constructive, of the trust, that the loan account was commenced 9 years from the date of deposit, that the Bank must have known that the loan was required by J. for his own purposes, that from the lapse of time and other circumstances the Bank was put on enquiry which would have disclosed to them the fact that J. drew the money out of the trust fund for himself, that the Bank had either knowledge or reasonable suspicion that the said G. P. Notes were applied by J. in breach of trust and that Bank derived benefit from the breach:

Held, (1) that on the face of it the Bank was entitled to advance money to J. as executor on securities deposited by him as executor and there would be nothing wrong in their acting on his instructions as executor to sell the securities and credit the loan account with a sum sufficient to square it; [p. 767, col. 1.]

(2) that if it were assumed that J. deposited the Rs. 52,000 to meet the plaintiff's legacy and thereby became a trustee of it and pledged it to secure an advance to himself personally or as executor and the Bank sold the paper to re-pay the advance, only, then the question would arise whether the Bank had notice of the trust. But there was nothing to support this view of the case; [p. 765, col. 1.]

(3) that even assuming this view of the case to be right the Bank had no actual notice of the trust; [p. 767, col. 2.]

(4) that the Bank had no constructive notice of the trust, for the mere fact of an account being continued and the investment account having a corresponding current account and this being continued for 9 years would not necessarily put the Bank on enquiry; [p. 767, col. 2.]

(5) that if there was merely a pledge of the securities, then if J. had no title to them as executor and the Bank in good faith delivered them back to him, or according to his instructions, under s. 66 of the Contract Act the Bank would not be responsible to the owners in respect of such delivery; [p. 765, col. 2.]

(6) that assuming everything against the Bank the suit was either one for conversion, or for money had and received to the plaintiff's use, to which Arts. 48 and 61 of the Limitation Act would apply. Consequently it was barred by three years' rule of limitation. [p. 766, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—One Khakibhai Hemani, a Khoja Muhammadan of Bombay, died on or about the 4th October 1900 leaving a Will dated the 26th September 1900.

BANK OF BOMBAY v. FAZULBHAI EBRABIM.

He appointed as executors and trustees thereof Currimbhoy Ebrahim, Labai his wife, and Joosab Peerbhoy his son-in-law. Probate was granted to Labai and Joosab on the 4th December 1911. By clause 4 the testator directed that Rs. 50,000 should be expended in such manner as his trustees might consider proper for such purposes as might perpetuate his name.

By clause 5 he bequeathed various legacies

To Fazulbhai, the son of his daughter Fatmabai, he bequeathed Rs. 50,000 to be invested in Government Promissory Notes, Port Trust Bonds or other Government Security Debentures. The income was to be accumulated for Fazulbhai's benefit, the principal and income to be made over to him on his attaining the age of twenty-one. If Fazulbhai died before attaining the age of twenty-one, the moneys were to be handed over to his issue, but if there was no issue then over.

There were five other legacies of Rs. 30,000 each, Rs. 50,000 were to be set apart for the expenses of a Dharamsala, two houses were given to Labai on certain conditions, and the residue of the estate was also left to her.

On the 30th January 1902, the executor and executrix deposited with the Bank of Bombay Government Promissory Notes of the face value of Rs. 52,000, which were credited to their account No. 1 as executor and executrix of Khakibhai Hemani. On the same day account No. 2 was opened with a deposit of Government Promissory Notes of the face value of Rs. 3,000, and thereafter seven other accounts were opened with deposits of Government Promissory Notes of the face value of Rs. 31,000, 3,200, 31,200, 31,200, 31,200, 15,000 and 4,000 respectively. With each deposit account there was a corresponding current account to which the interest was credited. We are only concerned with the deposit account No. 1 and the current account No. 1, but the other accounts have been exhibited so that the Court might be asked to draw the inference that Labai and Joosab opened all these accounts in order to carry out the wishes of the testator with regards to the payment of the legacies.

On the 1st of February 1902, Labai and Joosab executed a general power of attorney in favour of the Bank.

On the 24th July 1902, Probate of the Will was registered with the Bank. In the register under the heading "Executors and Administrators" there is the following entry, "Labai the widow and Joosab Peerbhoy the son in law of the deceased two of the executors named in the Will reserving the right of Currimbhoy Ebrahim the other executor named in the said Will to come in and apply for Probate."

In 1905 Labai died and all the various accounts were transferred to the name of Joosab as surviving executor, while he executed a power of attorney in favour of the Bank in the same capacity. Until May 1911, the interest on the Notes for Rs. 52,000 was re-invested so that the total of the Notes to credit of account No. 1 was Rs. 67,000.

On 17th May, Joosab appears to have asked for a loan of Rs. 45,000 on the security of Notes for Rs. 52,000 out of the account No. 1. Accordingly a loan account to Joosab as surviving executor was opened while Notes for Rs. 52,000 were debited to account No. 1 and credited to "advances account to Joosab Peerbhoy as surviving executor."

On the 16th August 1912, Joosab wrote to the Bank a letter (Exhibit Q) which has been put in in a mutilated condition, but it is a request to sell the Notes for Rs. 52,000 against which Rs. 45,000 had been advanced at the bazar rate.

Accordingly, on the 17th August 1912, the Bank sold the Notes, closed the loan account and transferred the balance of Rs. 4,518-10-7 to No. 1 current account. By the 30th January 1913 the remaining Notes for Rs. 15,000 in account No. 1 had been sold and the proceeds credited to the current account. That account was drawn upon by Joosab until on the 3rd November 1913 it was exhausted.

Fazulbhai attained majority (eighteen years) on the 15th October 1913. He filed this suit on 18th October 1919 against the Bank praying that the Bank might be ordered to make good to him the sale proceeds of the Government paper standing to the credit of the said account No. 1 together with interest. He submitted that the Bank had notice, actual or constructive, of the trust on which the Government Promissory Notes and moneys which stood from time to time to the credit of the account No. 1 were held by Joosab. As the loan account was commenced in 1911 after a lapse of nine years from the date of the deposit, the Bank must have known that the loan was required by Joosab for his own purposes. That from the lapse of time and other circumstances the Bank was put on inquiry which would have disclosed to them the fact that Joosab was repaying to the Bank moneys which he drew for himself out of the trust fund, and that the Bank had either knowledge or reasonable suspicion that the said Promissory Notes were being applied by Joosab in breach of trust and that the Bank derived benefit from the breach of trust.

BANK OF BOMBAY v. FAZULBHOY ABRAHIM.

The defendant Bank in its written statement denied that the securities for Rs. 52,000 were deposited in trust for the plaintiff or that they represented the investment of his legacy. The current account was opened on the depositor's agreeing to comply with the Bank rules and by r. 14 of which they had notice the Bank did not recognise trusts. If the Bank had had notice that the securities were held in trust the Bank would not have received the same. The Bank denied that it had notice of the actual trust and submitted that in law it had no constructive notice. It denied that it must have been put on inquiry for the reasons alleged by the plaintiff and it was under no obligation to inquire and see to the application of the said moneys by Joosab. It had no knowledge or reasonable suspicion that the Promissory Notes were being applied as alleged, and it derived no benefit from the alleged breach of trust. Lastly, it was submitted that the claim was barred by limitation.

On these pleadings the parties went to trial. Out of the many issues raised the most important were:—

(1) Whether the Government Promissory Notes of Rs. 50,000 (sic) represented the investment of the plaintiff's legacy and were deposited in trust for the plaintiff?

(2) Whether the Bank had actual or constructive notice of the alleged trust?

(5) Whether the loan for Rs. 45,000 was required and taken by Joosab for his own purposes and not for the purposes of the legacy or the estate?

(8) Whether there were sufficient circumstances to put the Bank on inquiry?

(9) If so, whether such inquiry would have disclosed that Joosab was, as alleged, repaying to the Bank money which he drew for himself out of the trust funds and in breach of trust?

(10) Whether the Bank were guilty of such negligence as to impute to them constructive notice of the alleged breach of trust and misapplication?

(13) Whether any personal benefit to the defendant Bank was designed or stipulated for when such moneys were taken by Joosab?

(14) Whether the claim was barred by limitation?

The evidence called by the plaintiff to prove his claim was extremely meagre.

His father proved his age.

The plaintiff himself said:—

"I am now aware that my grandfather left a legacy. I know Joosab Peerbhoy. He was my mother's sister's husband. I demanded my legacy from Joosab. He has not given it to me. He led me to understand that he was not in a position to pay. He is more or less an insolvent."

In cross examination he said:

"I demanded the legacy in 1917 or 1918, probably at the end of 1917 or in the beginning of 1918. I had no suspicion then that he was not in a position to pay. About the end of 1918 or beginning of 1919 I came to know he was not in a position to pay."

The rest of the plaintiff's evidence consisted of the various accounts opened with the Bank, certain correspondence, the petition for Probate, the Probate itself, powers of attorney given to the Bank by Libai and Joosab, and by Joosab, and the Register of Probate in the Bank's books.

The Bank called an Accountant to prove the rules of the Bank for current accounts. The most important witness in the case would have been Joosab but he was not called. There was no evidence that he was not in a position to pay the legacy except the plaintiff's statement that he had been given to understand by Joosab that it could not be paid. There was no evidence to explain the opening of the various accounts in the Bank, or to show what became of the moneys which were withdrawn, although it may be presumed that Joosab kept accounts as executor. The members of the family must have been perfectly well aware of the contents of Khakibhai's Will. The plaintiff took a vested interest in the legacy, and though under the Will it was not payable until he became twenty-one he was entitled in law to demand it when he attained the age of majority. If Joosab has misappropriated the legacy it is not unfair to assume that the family knew what he was doing. But without putting the necessary facts before the Court, the plaintiff asked the Court to draw every inference against the Bank from the accounts opened by Joosab with the Bank, and so make the Bank liable for the defalcations of his uncle. The learned Trial Judge came to the conclusion that Labai and Joosab had divested themselves of their office as executor and executrix and continued to be trustees from 1902. Then no notice was required to be given to the Bank that they had deposited those moneys as trustees. The Bank dealt with Joosab and in dealing with him the Bank took those moneys subject to all the infirmities Joosab had in them. When the Bank made the loan of Rs. 45,000 and took as security the pledge of Government paper for Rs. 52,000 the Bank was taking such ownership as Joosab could give. As he had no power to deal with the Government paper, the plaintiff was entitled to recover it. But with regard to the Government Paper for Rs. 15,000 the learned Judge thought that as it was not pledged, the Bank was not aware that Joosab was committing a breach of trust and so was not responsible for it. The inconsistency in the argument is obvious, for if the Bank had notice that the Rs. 52,000 Government paper was held in trust, they also had notice that the accretions thereto were held in trust, but the whole basis of the judgment rests on the loan of Rs. 45,000 to Joosab. If he had asked the Bank to sell the Government paper and pay in the proceeds into current account No. 1 and even if he had then withdrawn the proceeds it would appear that the Bank would not have been held liable.

The very important question of limitation has hardly been considered. No doubt, if Art. 120 of the Second Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act was applicable the suit was filed in time but no reason is given for the decision that Art. 120 was applicable.

Without any finding on the issues a decree was passed for the plaintiff for $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. Government paper for Rs. 52,000 face value with interest at $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. from the date of deposit with six monthly rests. The learned Judge evidently thought that the case of Attenborough v. Solomon (1) was absolutely on all fours with the present case and failed to realise that the two cases were entirely different. The result is that we have no findings on some of the most important issues.

In Attenborough v. Solomon (1) a testator by his Will after appointing two persons executors and trustees and giving pecuniary legacies gave his residuary estate to his trustees upon trust for sale and distribution as therein mentioned. Fourteen years after the testator's death one of the executors without the knowledge of his co-executor pledged certain plate forming part of the residuary estate with a firm of pawn brokers who had no notice that he was not the absolute owner thereof, and misapplied the money so raised. All the debts and legacies had been paid and the residuary account had been passed within one year of the testator's death, but the residuary estate had not been completely distributed. On the death of the pledgor the transaction was discovered and an action was brought by the co-executor and a new trustee against the pawn broker to recover the pledge. It was held that from the residuary account, Mr. J. B. Solomon, the surviving executor, regarded the debts as having been all paid and the estate as ready to be held upon the trusts of the Will which affected it in the hands of the trustees. The true inference from the facts was that the executors considered that they had done all that was due from them as executors and were content when the residuary account was passed that the dispositions of the Will should take effect. The residuary estate including the chattels in question thus became vested in them as trustees.

BANK OF BOMBAY v. FAZULBHOY ABRAHIM.

Their title to the chattels pledged as executors had ceased to exist. By the contract of pawn the property remained in the bailor, and the bailee simply took at the outside a right to the possession dependent on the validity of title of the bailor. Then the pawn-brokers got no title to the plate, since the executor when he bailed it over had no property to pass as executor, and they got no contractual rights which could prevail over the trustees who were the true owners and in a position to maintain the action, which under the old form would have been an action of trover or detinue to recover possession of the chattel free from the restrictions on the right to re-claim possession which were sought to be imposed by the contract between the pledging executor and the pawn-brokers.

If Joosab holding Government paper as one of several trustees had pledged it with the Bank in his own name to secure an advance to him personally and the Bank still retained the paper, then the property in the paper remaining with the trustees they might be able to recover it from the Bank free of the advance, but if the Bank had sold the paper to re-pay the advance then the question of notice of the trust would become of the utmost importance.

By section 63 of the Indian Trusts Act "where trust property comes into the hands of a third person inconsistently with the trust, the beneficiary may require him to admit formally, or may institute a suit for a declaration, that the property is comprised in the trust. Where the trustee has disposed of trust-property and the money or other property which he has received therefor can be traced in his hands, or the hands of his legal representative or legatee, the beneficiary has, in respect thereof, rights as nearly as may be the same as his rights in respect of the original trust property."

By section 64 "nothing in section 63 entitles the beneficiary to any right in respect of property in the hands of (a) a transferee in good faith for consideration without having notice of the trust, either when the purchase-money was paid, or when the conveyance was executed, or (b) a transferee for consideration from such a transferee." These sections would only apply if the Government paper was transferred to the Bank, but there is no evidence with regard to this, and from the fact that Joosab asked the Bank to sell, it may be inferred that the paper remained in his name. If there was merely a pledge of the Government paper then if Joosab had no title to it as executor, and the Bank in good faith delivered it back to him, or according to his directions, under section 166 of the Indian Contract Act the Bank would not be responsible to the owners in respect of such delivery.

The case of Attenborough v. Solomon (1) is only an authority for this proposition, that if a pawn-broker takes in pledge from A an article which belongs in fact to B, he must return it on demand to B free of the amount advanced. What is his liability if he has already sold the article at the request of A and re-paid himself his advance is an entirely different question. This brings me to the question what is the plaintiff's cause of action and on the answer depends the period of limitation for the plaintiff's suit. Assuming everything against the Bank, it would appear that the suit is either one for conversion (Art. 48), or for money had and received to the plaintiff's use (Art. 62).

The complaint is that the Bank, holding Government paper for Rs. 52,000 held in trust for the plaintiff of which trust it had constructive notice, sold it, and parted with the sale-proceeds. In either case the period of limitation would be three years, and the plaintiff's suit is barred, for he made no attempt to prove that time did not begin to run against him until within three years of the suit. But apart from the question of limitation there are many other difficulties in the way of the plaintiff.

The Court was asked to infer that Labai and Joosab had assented to all the legacies mentioned in the Will when they opened the various accounts with deposits of Government paper approximating to the amounts of the legacies. Against this the Advocate General argued that under clause 4 of the Will the executors were to spend Rs. 50,000 in such manner as they might think in perpetuating the name of the testator, and there was nothing to show that the Rs. 52,000 Government paper deposited in account No. 1 was not intended to meet that request of the testator. It may be very fairly argued on the other side that the probabiities are vastly in favour of their contention that account No. 1 was opened for the appropriation of the plaintiff's legacy, but the person who could have set all doubts at rest was Joosab, and when a fact can be proved by a witness who can be called and is not called, is the plaintiff entitled to rely on an inference which, however plausible and probable, is not the only possible inference? If Joosab were dead it would be a different matter, and it came as a surprise to me when I ascertained towards the end of the argument that he was still alive, as it never occurred to me if he was alive, that his evidence would not be on the record. Strictly speaking if the Government paper was held in trust, the trustee or trustees would still be the true owners and the proper persons to sue for its recovery.

However that may be, it is necessary to deal with the case on the footing that Labai and Joosab deposited the Rs. 52,000 Government paper to meet the plaintiff's legacy and so became trustees thereof. The learned Judge seemed to think that if they were trustees the question of notice to the Bank became irrelevant. But it is certainly of the very greatest importance in a suit, not to recover the trust property, but for damages for conversion or for money had and received to the plaintiff's use. For the trustees would not be bound to keep the trust property with the Bank and even if the Bank had notice of the trust, it would not be liable if the trust property were afterwards misappropriated unless it could be proved that the Bank was privy to the breach of trust.

Now, it cannot be said that assuming there was a trust the Bank had actual notice of it. It accepted the various accounts in the names of Labai and Joosab as executor and executrix, and as such Labai and Joosab had absolute power to deal with the accounts and the Bank would not be liable if they dealt with them against their duties as executor and executrix. But it is said the Bank was put on inquiry. The opening of nine accounts by the executor and executrix was most unusual, the Bank should have called for a copy of the Will, and then it would have ascertained that various legacies had been bequeathed therein, that these various accounts must have been opened in respect of those legacies, and consequently Labai and Joosab were no longer executor and executrix and had become trustees, so that the Bank would become liable for any wrong dealing by them with those accounts. That even if the Bank was not put on inquiry at once, the fact that the accounts were continued, that each deposit investment account had a corresponding current account to which the interest was credited, and that this continued for nine years in any event put the Bank on inquiry to ascertain the reason for their client's conduct. No authority for such an extension of the doctrine of constructive notice has been cited, and it seems to me that if a Bank was bound to take notice of the number of accounts an executor opened and the length of time such account was continued, so that in self-protection it would be necessary to send for him and ask him to explain his dealings with the estate in his charge as executor, it would result in Bank's refusing to have any dealings with constituents as executors. But with regard to the advances of Rs. 45,000 it has been argued that, at any rate, considering the Rs. 54,000 Government paper had been in deposit with it for nine years with the interest being accumulated and re-invested, the Bank should have asked Joosab why he wanted the advances, he would then have said the account was in his name as executor and he was entitled to deal with it as he pleased. Even if the Bank had not been satisfied and had called for a copy of the Will, it could not have forced Joosab to say that account No. 1 was appropriated to the plaintiff's legacy. At the same time I know of no authority which would justify such inquisitorial proceedings by a Bank.

The liability of a Bank to honour a customer's cheque appears to be absolute unless it can be shown that the Bank is privy to an intent to misapply trust funds.

In Gray v. Johnstone (2) a banker had acted as such to T. J. who carried on business with his son-in-law under the style of J and M, but his accounts with them were kept in the name of T. J. T. J. died leaving a Will by which he bequeathed all his property to the use of his wife for life and after her death to be divided amongst their children as she might think fit. Part of this property consisted of Life Policies which were put in the hands of the bankers together with Probate of the Will. They recovered the amount of the Policies, made up their accounts and after deducting their unsettled claim declared a certain sum to remain due from themselves to the executrix. She continued her husband's business with his late partner and a new account was opened with the bankers in the name of the new firm and she as executrix drew a cheque for the amount stated to be due to her and paid it in to her banker to be credited to the firm, and it was so credited and paid out by means of cheques drawn by the new firm. It was held that these circumstances were not in themselves sufficient to show that a breach of trust had been committed and that the banker knew of the intention to commit the breach so as to render them liable on a suit by the children of the testator to replace the money. Lord Cairns said at page 11.

"I say that the result of those authorities is clearly this: in order to hold a banker justified in refusing to pay a demand of his customer, the customer being an executor and drawing a cheque as an executor, there must, in the first place, be some misapplication, some breach of trust, intended by the executor, and there must, in the second place, as was said by Sir John Leach in the well-known case of Keane v. Roberts (3), be proof that the bankers are privy to the intent to make this misapplication of the trust funds. And to that I think I may safely add, that if it be shown that any personal benefit to the bankers themselves is designed or stipulated for, that circumstance, above all others, will most readily establish the fact that the bankers are in privy with the breach of trust which is about to be committed."

The learned Judge seems to have thought the Bank derived personal benefit by repaying the loan account out of the sale-proceeds of the Government paper. On the face of it the Bank was entitled to advance money to Joosab as executor on securities deposited with them by him as executor, and there would be nothing wrong in their acting on his instructions as executor to sell the securities and credit the loan account with a sum sufficient to square it. If the Bank had advanced money personally to Joosab and repaid themselves by the sale-proceeds of Government paper lodged with it by Joosab as executor, or if the advance had been made to Joosab as executor and was repaid by the sale of Government paper which the Bank knew was held by him in trust, then it might be said that the Bank derived personal benefit from the same, and that would certainly go a considerable way to establish the fact that the Bank was privy with the breach which was intended to be committed. But, in my opinion, the plaintiff has not proved any of the facts which he was bound to prove before he could succeed against the Bank. Joosab, the person alleged to be guilty of the actual breach of trust, ought to have been a defendant in the suit, or at least, if he was not made a party, he should have been called as a witness. We are asked to infer, though we do not know for certain, that the Bank held the plaintiff's legacy. No attempt has been made to prove that Joosab held as trustee the plaintiff's legacy or that if so the trust property could not be followed. It has not even been proved that Joosab cannot pay the legacy, or that even if he cannot pay now he could not have paid it in 1913. It is not sufficient for the plaintiff to say "Joosab led me to understand that he could not pay. He is more or less insolvent," in order to found a claim against the Bank six years after the legacy was payable.

On the issues I have set out above I would hold as follows:—

1. There are facts from which the Court might infer that the Notes for Rs. 52,000 represented the investment of the plaintiff's legacy, but the witness who could have proved this positively has not been called, and such being the case the Court is not bound to draw the inference suggested by the plaintiff.

2. The Bank has neither actual nor constructive notice of any trust, if there was a trust.

5. No answer in the absence of Joosab's evidence.

9. Unnecessary.

BANK OF BOMBAY v. FAZOLBHOY (ABRAHAM).

I think the appeal should be allowed and the plaintiff's suit dismissed with costs throughout.

SHAH, J.—I entirely agree. I desire to add a few words with reference to two points.

First, as regards limitation, it is clear that the point was not properly argued by the parties before the Trial Court. Before us the appellants have relied upon Arts. 48 and 62 and the plaintiff has relied upon Art. 133 as being applicable to the facts of the case. Art. 120, which has been held by the Trial Court to apply, has not been seriously relied upon by the plaintiff's Counsel. Art. 133 clearly has no application, as the suit is against the Bank holding the Government paper as security for the loan to Joosab as the surviving executor. It is not suggested that the Bank bought the Government paper and in the course of the argument it was admitted that the Bank did not buy the Government paper in question. On the strength of certain decisions bearing on Art. 124 it has been argued by Mr. Desai that a purchase would include a mortgage and that the Article would apply to the Bank as pledgees from a trustee. This contention is opposed to the decision in Abhiram Goswami v. Shyama Charan Nandi (4) and there was no change in the wording of Art. 133 as there was in Art. 134 when the Indian Limitation Act of 1908 was passed, to indicate any change in the scope of Art. 133. It seems to me that in view of the relief claimed by the plaintiff Art. 48 would apply. But if it is to be treated as a suit for money received by the defendants as sale-proceeds and properly payable to the plaintiff Art. 62 would apply. In either case the claim is clearly time-barred. It was argued with reference to Art. 48 that there was nothing to show that plaintiff had the necessary knowledge more than three years prior to the date of the suit. The defendants pleaded limitation and it was for the plaintiff to prove the facts which would bring the claim within time. The plaintiff has not stated anywhere that he had not the necessary knowledge as to the possession of the property. Having regard to the circumstances of the case it is quite a fair inference, in the absence of any statement to the contrary, that the plaintiff knew on his attaining majority that the Government paper had been with the Bank and had been sold by the Bank at the instance of Joosab. It is significant that the learned Counsel for the plaintiff has not asked for any opportunity now to show that on the footing of Art. 48 being applicable the plaintiff acquired the necessary knowledge within three years of the suit, on the ground that for want of a specific plea as to Art. 48 he omitted to adduce necessary evidence on that point.

The second point relates to the merits of the case. Mr. Desai relied upon the following observations of Lord Westbury in Gray v. Johnston (2):

"But then it has been very well settled that if an executor or a trustee who is indebted to a banker, or to another person, having the legal custody of the assets of a trust estate, applies a portion of them in the payment of his own debt to the individual having that custody, the individual receiving the debt has at once not only abundant proof of the breach of trust, but participates in it for his own personal benefit".

It has been urged that these observations apply to the facts of this case. In the first place there is nothing on the record of this case to show that Joosab applied the assets of the trust estate in the payment of his own debt at the time. The loan account of Joosab was in his capacity as an executor; and the account No. 1, from which the security was taken, was also in his name in that capacity. In the absence of the accounts of the estate of the deceased Khakibhai kept or rather presumed to have been kept by the executors and in the absence of any evidence of the surviving executor, it could not be assumed that he applied a part of the trust estate in the payment of his own debt. Secondly, there is nothing to show that the Bank had actual notice of the trust or of misapplication of the funds. Even assuming in favour of the plaintiff that the Bank knew or ought to have known that the surviving executor was a trustee and that account No. 1 related to a trust estate there is nothing in the nature of his dealings with the Bank to show that he was using the trust assets for any improper purpose at the time. It is difficult to understand on what principle the Bank could be expected to know the dealings of Joosab with the estate of the deceased and to realise that the loan account in his name as an executor was his own personal debt. Even now we have no means of ascertaining it: and it is hardly possible to accept the contention that the Bank must be deemed to have constructive notice of what is not clear even on the present record. I do not think that the observations in Gray v. Johnstone (2) can help the plaintiff in this case. The plain position, so far as the Bank is concerned, seems to be that Joosab dealt with them as an executor throughout and that they had no means of knowing, and, in view of the nature of the dealings with them, were under no obligation to inquire, as to whether Joosab was acting properly as an executor or a trustee at the time he withdrew the trust funds from the Bank in his capacity as an executor. The subsequent dealings by Joosab with the trust fund after he withdrew it from the Bank, however improper, cannot affect the Bank in any way.

On the death of his father an orasa son becomes entitled to a definite one-fourth part of the estate. The estate comes into existence at his father's death and he is entitled to recover it with mesne profits. [p. 770, col. 1.]

First appeal against the judgment passed by the District Judge, Thaton.

Mr. May Oung, for the Appellant.

Mr. Keith, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—U Tu died in December 1906. Six and a half years later, plaintiff sued as his orasa son for his one-fourth share in the estate. On appeal this Court held that the question for decision was, whether an orasa son must act with reasonable promptitude in exercising his option of taking one fourth of his parents' joint property on the death of his father or whether he has twelve years within which he can exercise that option under Article 123 of the Limitation Act. It was held that, in the interests of the family and because the mode of management of the property must vary and the prospects of the other heirs would also vary according as the option was exercised or not, he should do so without delay. It was, therefore, held that plaintiff's right to a one-fourth share had lapsed altogether. This decision was reversed on appeal by their Lordships of the Privy Council,* who said that defendant's contention was that plaintiff had not in fact any share in the estate but that on the death of his father he had obtained a right to elect whether he would have that share or no, and that, in the absence of an election within reasonable time, the claim could not be brought forward. Their Lordships held that the whole contention depended upon the consideration of two different rules, namely, rule 5, and rule 14 of Chapter X of the Manukye. They did not consider it desirable to express an opinion upon the true construction of rule 14 which relates to the division of the estate on the death of the mother. They held that its determination was not relevant to the question before them and that, "even assuming in favour of the respondents, that the rights of the eldest son would change in the event of his not having segregated his one-fourth share before his mother's death, it by no means follows that the right which he got under rule 5 was merely the right to elect within a certain limited period of time whether he would take the property or no. Their Lordships can find no ground whatever for the suggestion that he got anything under rule 5 excepting a definite one fourth share in the property of the estate, a right which he was at liberty to assert within any period that was not outside the period fixed by Article 123 of the Indian Limitation Act as the period within which a claim must be made for a share of property on the death of an intestate."

The case then returned to the original Court, for a final determination of the rights of the plaintiff, and from that decision the present appeal has been filed on two points only.

[After stating the points and discussing the evidence their Lordships proceeded to observe as follows:—]

It has been, for a long time, the commonly accepted view of the orasi son's right that it consists of an option in respect of a definite share which may or may not be exercised by him as he chooses, and where the family consists of only three children or less it may be to the advantage of the orasi son not to exercise that option but to wait until the mother's death and then divide the estate equally with the other children whereby he would get a larger share, than a fourth. This view, as it appears to us, is clearly shown to be wrong by the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council to which we have referred above. The orasi son becomes entitled on the death of his father to a definite one-fourth part of the estate, and in the present case the position is that he has asserted that claim prior to his mother's death and within time. It has been suggested that the estate to which he succeeded does not vest in him until he makes his claim to reduce it into possession, but that view is, in our opinion, put out of Court by their Lordships' decision. On the death of his father he became entitled to a definite one-fourth part of the estate and he is, therefore, entitled to recover that estate in the present suit. This being so, the estate came into existence at his father's death and he is entitled to mesne profits on it.

[NOTE.—The rest of the judgment is not material for the purposes of this report.—Ed.]

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 27

—Additional evidence at the appellate stage—Discretion of Court—Appeal, second—New point.

The admission of evidence in appeal is largely a matter of the discretion of the Court, and not is entirely a matter of right. [p. 772, col. 2.]

A point in respect of which no issue was framed in the Trial Court, and which was not argued in the first Appellate Court, cannot be raised in second appeal. [p. 771, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, First Court, Midnapore, dated the 10th of March 1920, affirming that of the Officiating Munsif, Second Court at that place, dated the 13th of August 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Moulvi Nuruddin Ahmed (with him Moulvi Syed Soadullah), for the Appellants.—The learned Judge was wrong in not admitting the finally published records the entries wherein were in my client's favour. The learned Judge does not assign any reason for rejecting this piece of evidence. I submit the entries ought to have been admitted in evidence. These entries raise a rebuttable presumption in my favour.

The copy was a certified copy of the petition. We could not call the Pleader as he was dead. Jagadis too was dead.

The Judge has not given due weight to former decisions.

Mr. U. N. Sen Gupta (with him Babu Probodh Kumar Das), for the Respondent.—This was a title suit. The whole point was a question of title. Records are only presumptive evidence of possession. Even if filed they could not be evidence of title. We claim khas possession after declaration of our title.

[GREAVES, J.—The entries might show something more. We do not know].

We claim title. Section 102, Bengal Tenancy Act, lays down the points which a Settlement Officer is to lay down in the Record.

NATAJAN ALI v. MIDNAPORE ZAMINDARY CO. LTD.

of Rights. Parties can make objections under section 103. The Revenue Officer has no right to go into the question of title. The power of Appellate Courts to admit evidence is also very limited. The Judge was right in disarding Settlement Records. The Record of Rights was published after the institution of the suit. Mere exercise of possession as a trespasser would not give him any title unless mine is barred. I am admittedly the possessor.

Moulvi Nurudlin Ahmed, in reply.—They are suing to get khass possession by ejecting me. This document raises a presumption in my favour, which, if unrebutted, would have benefited me. I can show that I am not a trespasser. They do not admit me to be a tenant.

Refers to Venkatachela Pillai v. Ranga Pillai (1). There should be a remand.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendants. The suit by the plaintiffs was for khass possession of certain land and for damages and for an injunction. The plaintiffs were Zamindars of a certain Pergannah which included the village in which, I understand, the defendants held some land and the dispute was with regard to certain land which the plaintiffs claimed as their khass land. Whereas the defendants alleged that this land had been let out to them and that the plaintiffs had no right to eject them. Both the lower Courts have decreed the suit in the plaintiffs' favour.

Four points are urged before me. First, it is said that the lower Appellate Court wrongly excluded certain evidence that was tendered on behalf of the defendants, namely, the Settlement map and khatain forming part of the Record of Rights. It is said that this evidence could not be adduced in the First Court as the Record of Rights had not been finally published but that between the hearing before the Munsif and the hearing in the Appellate Court the Record of Rights had been published and that, accordingly, as the entries in the Record of Rights were alleged to be in the defendants' favour, the lower Appellate Court should have admitted this in evidence to be given in favour of the defendants' contention; secondly, it is said that the lower Appellate Court has not given effect to the statement contained in Exhibit D, a petition which is referred to in the judgment; thirdly, it is said that the lower Appellate Court has not properly considered the effect of certain judgments, Exhibits K and L; and lastly, it is urged that the heirs of one Musammam Amina Khatun, defendant No. 5, who died after the institution of the suit, should have been brought on the record.

So far as the last point is concerned, no issue was raised with regard to this before the Munsif. Nor was the point argued in the lower Appellate Court. Under the circumstances, it is not open to the defendants to raise it in appeal to this Court.

So far as Exhibits K and L are concerned, what the learned Judge says is this, that these documents do not show what was the area let out in Mandalito Golam Aliha. Now, this being so, I do not see how they could really have any bearing upon the question in dispute. Admittedly, the defendants held certain land in the village and the only dispute was whether certain khass lands were included in the area of their demise. If these judgments, as already stated, did not show what was the area demised, it seems to me that they could have very little bearing on the question that the learned Subordinate Judge had to decide.

So far as Exhibit D is concerned the learned Subordinate Judge says that there is no evidence that the petitioner had any knowledge of the contents. Now, the original petition which had been filed in another suit had been destroyed along with the record of the suit which was a suit of 1893. A certified copy was produced. But, as the learned Subordinate Judge points out, the original was not signed by Jogeswar Naran and no proof was given of the truth of the statements contained in the certified copy of the petition. Under the circumstances, it seems to me that the learned Subordinate Judge is right in saying that this document had no evidentiary value.

The first point only remains now. Under the provisions of O. XLI, r. 27, the Appellate Court is empowered to allow, in the circumstances stated in the Order, evidence to be produced which was not given in the First Court. No doubt the evidence could not have been given in the First Court for the reasons already stated. After all, it was for the Court to see whether the evidence would really have some value with regard to the question propounded for decision. Now, the entry was no doubt before the Subordinate Judge: it was, as I understand, to this effect that the defendants were entered as persons entitled to and in possession of certain lands which were described as patit land and the right is said to have been intermediate Mandali permanent right but not Mukarrari. Now, the question really that the Court had to decide was whether the plaintiffs had established their title to the land or whether the defendants by virtue of their holding had right to this khas land, and I think it may well be that the learned Subordinate Judge in his discretion thought that this entry to which I have referred would not assist him in arriving at his decision with regard to the questions that were at issue before him. After all, the entries were only presumptive evidence and capable of being rebutted by evidence given on behalf of the plaintiffs. Under the circumstances, I am not prepared to say that the learned Subordinate Judge was not justified in not allowing this evidence to be given. After all, it is largely a question of discretion and not entirely a matter of right. I do not think that in second appeal under the circumstances I should interfere with or send the matter back for a consideration by the lower Appellate Court of this evidence.

In the result, the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Intention of Legislature.*

Where a pre-emptor is given a decree on condition of paying in Court the purchase-money within a certain period and the Court closes the very next day and remains closed till after the expiry of the period allowed, payment on the day the Court re-opens is a sufficient compliance with the decree [p. 775, col. 1.]

O. XX, r. 14 of the Civil Procedure Code implies that, in a suit for pre-emption, a future date should be fixed for the payment of the purchase-money, and indicates that the intention of the Legislature was not that payment should be made on the day on which judgment is announced. [p. 775, cols. 1 & 2.]

Obiter.—When a pre-emptor is given a decree on condition of paying the purchase-money within a certain period, and the Court is open during the earlier part of that period but closed during the latter part, payment on the day the Court re-opens is not a sufficient compliance with the decree. Miscellaneous second appeal from the order of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 29th March 1920, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Jagraon, District Ludhiana, dated the 18th November 1919.

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

CHEVIS, J.—(November 12, 1920).—On the 29th August 1919 the plaintiff obtained a decree for pre-emption on condition of payment of Rs. 500 within a month. The Court was closed during September and the early part of October, and opened on the 7th October. On that day plaintiff appeared in Court and tendered Rs. 400, the balance of the Rs. 500, Rs. 100 having already been paid in on 5th July 1919. The Court called for a report, and the next day the money was actually paid in. The vendee-defendant then objected that, as the pre-emption money had not been paid in within the period fixed by the decree, the decree had lapsed. The First Court accepted this as the correct view. The learned District Judge on appeal held that the decree had not lapsed. He referred to Naba v. Pathana (1) as authority for holding that time could be extended by reason of section 148, Civil Procedure Code, and held that time should be extended up to the re-opening of the Court, and that tender of the money on the 7th October was sufficient. The vendee-defendant appeals to this Court

HIMMUN v. PAUJA.

His Counsel's main contention is that the fact of the Court being closed on the 29th September does not prevent the lapsing of the decree when the money was not paid in on that date. This contention we will deal with later on.

In the first place, we note that we find ourselves quite unable to accept the view put forth in Naba v. Pathana (1) that section 148 applies to such cases. We are of opinion that this section was never intended to allow a Court to alter a decree. A decree can be altered by review, on appeal or on revision, but we do not think that either section 148 or 151 can be utilized for the purpose of altering a decree. And in support of this we cite Suranjan Singh v. Rambahal Lal (2).

Supposing for the moment that payment of the money on the day the Court re-opened was sufficient compliance with the decree, there is the fact that the money was not actually paid till the following day. But this was not the plaintiff's fault, and in several cases tender has been held to be sufficient, see Nathu v. Imam Din (3), Ahmad Din v. Rihan (4), Mir Zaman v. Fyzo (5), Prabhu v. Nishala (6) and Gaya Baksh Singh v. Tilak Singh (7). And Mr. Jai Gopal admits that the money was tendered on the 7th October, and does not press the contention that tender was not equivalent to payment.

The main question in the case is, whether the principle laid down in section 4 of the Limitation Act, and in section 10 of General Clauses Act (X of 1897) and in section 8 of the Punjab General Clauses Act (I of 1898) is applicable to such cases. Section 4 of the Limitation Act is not applicable as that relates only to the period of limitation prescribed by the Act for suits, appeals and applications and cannot be applied to the period of limitation prescribed by a decree for the payment of money. Similarly, the sections in the General Clauses Acts cannot be applied, as the limitation there spoken of is the limitation prescribed by an Act and not by a decree. Mr. Jai Gopal relies on Hirday Narain v. Alam Singh (8). In that case the six months allowed to the plaintiff for depositing the pre-emption money expired on a holiday, and the money was tendered on the following day. It was held that the decree had lapsed. There are two rulings of this Court on the point. In Shams-ud-din v. Fir Baksh (9) it was held by a majority, Boulnois, J., dissenting, that payment on the re-opening of the Court was sufficient. In Baghela v. Musammatt Sallo (10) a similar view is held. So, too, in Dabi Din Rai v. Muhammad Ali (11).

It is urged by Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi that these judgments give no clear reasons for their decision that in cases where the period fixed by the decree for payment expires on a day on which the Court is closed payment may be made on the day on which the Court re-opens. The decision presumably rests on what has been stated to be a general principle of law, viz., that though a party cannot himself extend the time allowed for doing an act in Court, yet if delay in the performance of the act is caused, not by any act of the party, but some act of the Court itself, such as the fact of the Court being closed, he is entitled to do the act on the following day. This has been followed as a principle in certain cases, see Sambasiva Ohari v. Ramasami Reddi (12), Shooshee Bhushan v. Gobind Chunder Roy (13) and other cases cited on page 27 of Starling's Limitation Act, fifth Edition. In these cases certain English cases are cited which we will now notice.

In Mayer v. Harding (14) the appellant, having applied to the Justices to state a case and having received it on Good Friday had to transmit it to the proper Court within three days. The offices of the Court were closed from Friday till Wednesday. The case was transmitted on the Wednesday, and this was held to be sufficient, as it was a case in which it was impossible for the appellant to transmit it earlier.

In Waterton v. Baker (15) appellant had to give notice of appeal and to give security to be approved by the Registrar for costs of appeal within 10 days. He gave notice and tendered good security within the ten days but the security was not approved till after the ten days had expired. It was held that he had done all that it was possible for him to do, and that the requirements of law had been complied with.

But there are two earlier cases which require to be noticed, as they are more applicable to the case before us.

In Peacock v. Reg. (16) it was held that where the three days allowed for an application to Justices to state a case expired on a Sunday an application presented on the Monday was not in time. This ruling was followed in Pennell v. Churchwardens of Uxbridge (17). These two rulings are in no way dissented from in the later English rulings. On the contrary, in Mayer v. Harding (14) we find Mellor, J., saying, "where a Statute requires a thing to be done within three days, or six months, or within any prescribed period, the time may no doubt be circumscribed by the fact of its being impossible to comply with the Statute on the last day of the period so fixed."

So all that the English rulings amount to is this, that where it is impossible to do the required act at any time during the prescribed period it may be done on the next possible occasion. They do not lay down that where the doing of the act is left till the latter part of the period and it is then found impossible to do the act during that latter part it may be done after the period has expired; quite the reverse.

In the particular case before us the pre-emption money might have been paid into Court on the 30th August 1919 (not on 31st for that was a Sunday). No doubt one day is a very short time to allow for payment of pre-emption money; but the pre-emptor might have asked for review, or might have appealed on the ground that he could not possibly go home and get the money and return in one day. It is certainly a hard case, and we note that such hard cases would be avoided if the Courts would take the trouble to comply with the provisions of O. XX, r. 14, of the Civil Procedure Code, and fix, not a period, but a date by which the money should be paid, taking care also to see that the date fixed is one on which, so far as can be foreseen, the Court will not be closed.

But we must decide the case in accordance with law. In our opinion there is neither any particular law nor any general principle which enables a person who is directed to do an act within a certain period and who is able to do it within the earlier part of that period to do it after the completion of the period, merely because the Court was closed during the latter part of that period.

As at present advised, we are, therefore, of opinion that the Allahabad ruling Hirday Narain v. Alam Singh (8) lays down the correct law, and that this appeal should be accepted. But as the former rulings of this Court are to the contrary the case must be referred to a Full Bench.

We refer to a Full Bench the following question. When a pre-emptor is given a decree on condition of payment within a certain period, and the Court is open during the earlier part of that period but closed during the latter part, is payment on the day on which the Court re-opens a sufficient compliance with the decree?

Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT OF THE FULL BENCH.

The facts are fully stated in the order of the Division Bench, dated the 12th November 1920 referring this case to a Full Bench. When the case was referred the Division Bench apprehended that the Court was open on the 30th August 1919. This, however, was a mistake, for the 30th August was a last Saturday in the month, on which day the Court is always closed. So the case now stands as follows:—

On the 29th August 1919 the plaintiff was given a decree for possession by pre-emption, on condition of payment of Rs. 500 within one month from the date of judgment. From that day onwards the Court remained closed until the 7th of October on which day the plaintiff appeared in Court and tendered the balance of the pre-emption money. The question, therefore, which was referred to the Full Bench, viz., whether when a pre-emptor is given a decree on condition of payment within a certain period and the Court is open during the earlier part of that period but closed during the latter part, payment on the day on which the Court re-opens is a sufficient compliance with the decree, does not really arise in the present case, since it is now found that the Court was closed during the whole of the period. Had the question really arisen we are of opinion that we should have followed that interpretation of the law which is laid down in Hirday Narain v. Alam Singh (8). We need not give our full reasons for saying this, as anything we might say would be obiter dictum; it is sufficient simply to say that we agree with what has been said in the Order of Reference.

On behalf of the appellant it is urged that payment might have been made on the 29th of August 1919, i. e., the very day on which the judgment was pronounced. We note that the last hearing of the case was on the 20th August 1919, when arguments were heard and the 29th August 1919 was fixed for pronouncing judgment. It seems to us, therefore, very likely that judgment was written at home and was delivered early on the 29th of August. But this does not necessarily follow, and it is by no means impossible, that judgment was delivered at the close of the day on the 29th August, and in that case it might, perhaps, be absolutely impossible for the plaintiff to have paid or tendered the money into Court on that day. It is, of course, extremely improbable that the plaintiff had the money with him that day, as pre-emptors do not bring with them to Court the pre-emption money on the day on which judgment is to be pronounced, and until judgment is pronounced they do not know what sum they will be required to pay. Further, O. XX, r. 14, lays down that the decree shall specify the day on or before which the purchase-money shall be paid into Court. This clearly implies that a future date shall be fixed for payment and seems to us an indication that the Legislature regards it as impossible for a person to come to Court on the day on which judgment is to be pronounced bringing with him for payment into Court on that day a sum which has yet not been fixed by the Court. We consider, therefore, that it was quite impracticable for the plaintiff to pay the purchase-money into Court on the 29th August. The plaintiff tendered the money into Court on the next day on which the Court was open. He might possibly, had he attempted to do so, have found the Nazir on the Court premises on one of the days during which the Court was closed, but he could not anticipate that he would do so, and we think that in such a case it should be held that payment on the day on which the Court re-opened was all that could possibly be expected of the plaintiff.

We, therefore, uphold the order of the District Judge and dismiss the appeal with costs.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Probodh Kumar Das, for the Appellant.—The decision of the Special Judge was a decision settling a rent. Hence having regard to the provisions contained in section 109A, sub-section (3), of the Bengal Tenancy Act, no second appeal lay to the High Court. The decision of Mr. Justice Walmsley was consequently without jurisdiction. As regards the merits, the question whether the landlords were entitled to have the rent enhanced under section 7 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, is a question of fact the finding whereon of the Special Judge could not be attacked in second appeal.

Babu Mahes Chandra Banerjee for Babu Pramadha Nath Bandopadhyaya, was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of Mr. Justice Walmsley in a proceeding under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The appellants who were the landlords instituted these proceedings against the respondent, their tenant, with a view to have fair and equitable rent settled in respect of the tenure held by him. The case as presented to the Settlement Officer was that the defendant was in occupation of an area in excess of what he paid rent for and was consequently liable to have his rent increased. Two issues were raised to cover this point; namely, first does the defendant hold any area in excess of what he is paying rent for? and secondly, what should be the fair rate of rent for assessment of the excess area, if any? The Settlement Officer came to the conclusion that the defendant held an excess area of 5.95 acres, and that the rate of rent, should be fixed at 2 annas 6 pies per bigha which was the average rate fixed upon the original area. The consequence was that the rent was increased by Rs. 5-10-6. The landlords appealed against this decision and argued before the Special Judge that they were entitled to have the rent enhanced under section 7. The Special Judge assented to this contention and held that the rent payable by the defendant should be fixed at Rs. 139. The tenant thereupon preferred a second appeal to this Court. A preliminary objection was taken to the competence of the appeal on the ground that the decision of the Special Judge was a decision settling a rent within the meaning of sub-section (2) of section 109A and was consequently not liable to be challenged by way of an appeal to this Court. Mr. Justice Walmsley overruled this contention, and held that the decision of the Special Judge had been founded on a basis never put forward before the Settlement Officer. He accordingly allowed the appeal, set aside the decision of the Special Judge and restored the decree of the Settlement Officer.

On the present appeal it has been contended that the appeal heard by Mr. Justice Walmsley was incompetent. We are of opinion that there is no foundation for this contention and that it is opposed to the decision of the Full Bench in the case of Jnanada Sundari Chowdhurani v. Abdur Rahman [Amudi Sarkar] (1). The principle applicable to cases of this character was explained in that decision: "If in any proceeding under section 105 questions under section 105A have been investigated and determined, the order of the Settlement Officer, though in form an order which settles a fair and equitable rent, does in substance embody a decision of question within the scope of section 105A and consequently of section 106. Such a decision is not one merely settling a rent within the meaning of section 109A and is consequently liable to be challenged by way of second appeal to the High Court." In the case before us, the decision of the Special Judge is founded on two essential facts, namely, first, that the defendant held an area in excess of the original area of the tenancy and was consequently liable to have the rent assessed on such excess area; and secondly, that the tenure held by the defendant was of such a description that its rent was liable to be enhanced. Consequently, the decision of the Special Judge involves a determination of two fundamental questions in connection with the tenancy held by the defendant, namely, the extent of area and the liability to enhancement. There can be no room for argument that a decision of this character was not a decision merely settling rent within the meaning of section 109A and the appeal was consequently competent.

As regards the merits, we entirely agree with the view taken by Mr. Justice Walmsley. The record does not disclose the faintest trace of a contention in the Court of first instance that the defendant was liable to have his rent enhanced under section 7. The argument which was advanced for the first time before the Special Judge, should not have been entertained by him for decision on the materials available on the record. Section 7 provides that the rent of a tenure-holder, when it is liable to enhancement, may, subject to any contract between the parties, be enhanced up to the limit of the customary rate payable by persons holding similar tenures in the vicinity. It is only where no such customary rate exists, that it may, subject as aforesaid, be enhanced up to such limit as the Court thinks fair and equitable. The section then proceeds to lay down a rule for the ascertainment of the fair and equitable rent. Consequently, where the landlord seeks to have the rent of a tenure-holder enhanced, the first point for investigation is whether the rent is liable to enhancement. When this has been made out, the next point for determination is, whether there is a customary rate payable by persons holding similar tenures in the vicinity. It is only when this has been answered in the negative that the rent can be enhanced up to such limit as the Court thinks fair and equitable. None of these matters had been investigated in the Court of first instance for the reason that the question was not raised in that Court. In these circumstances, Mr. Justice Walmsley properly allowed the appeal and restored the decree of the primary Court.

The result is that the judgment of Mr. Justice Walmsley is affirmed and this appeal is dismissed with costs.

A contract of insurance is a contract of indemnity. It is a contract by the insurer to indemnify the insured against the loss that he may suffer in certain conditions. It is not a contract to indemnify any other persons, and there is no privity of contract between the insurer and any third party. A 'total loss' means the destruction of the property or injury to it to such an extent as to render the insurer liable to pay the total sum insured. [p. 779, col. 1.]

When the insured has been indemnified to the full extent for a total loss, any salvage belonging to the insured is presumed, under such circumstances, to have been abandoned, and anything that may remain of the property belongs to the insurers to reimburse themselves so far as they can by selling the salvage for what it will fetch. That is an essential element in a contract of insurance. [p. 780, col. 1.]

Apart from Statute, the mortgagee is not prima facie entitled to the benefit of an insurance effected on the property by the mortgagor. JUDGMENT.

ROBINSON, C. J.—One Maung Po Sin owed the plaintiff-appellant firm Rs. 6,000 and as security for the re-payment of that sum with interest he executed in their favour a deed of mortgage on certain paddy land together with a mill and the machinery contents standing on the land. The mortgage was executed on the 7th November 1917. Subsequent to that, Maung Po Sin insured the premises mortgaged for their full value with the respondent Company. In June 1918 the mill was completely destroyed by fire. All that remained was certain items of the machinery consisting of a damaged boiler, a steam-engine, an iron chimney, a large number of sheets of corrugated iron, more or less damaged, and certain other machinery—huller, pulleys, shafting, etc., which were badly damaged.

Maung Po Sin claimed from the Insurance Company payment of the insurance money.

On the 29th June 1918 Counsel for appellants wrote to the Insurance Company informing them of the debt due by Maung Po Sin and claiming that their clients were entitled to receive the insurance moneys. They requested them to withhold payment and to make no payment to Maung Po Sin without reference to their clients who, they said, were about to file a suit on their mortgage. The defendant Company took no notice of that letter, and on the 3rd and 8th of July they duly made payment in full of the whole amount due under the insurance policy.

On filing the suit on the mortgage plaintiffs-appellants obtained an order from the District Court restraining the Insurance Company from paying Rs. 7,500 out of the insurance money to Maung Po Sin. This order was conveyed by telegram, but it is admitted that full payment had been made by the Insurance Company before they received that telegram.

Courts are forbidden to issue prohibitory orders by telegram, but the money having been already paid, the order was of no effect.

Plaintiffs appellants obtained a decree against Maung Po Sin on the 29th of July 1918. By that decree it was ordered that, if Maung Po Sin did not pay the sum decreed for principal, interest and costs within the time allowed, the mortgaged property or a sufficient part thereof shall be sold and the proceeds paid into Court and applied in payment of what was due to the plaintiffs with subsequent interest, and the balance, if any, to be paid to the defendant.

There was no reservation of rights to obtain a personal decree. On the 3rd July 1918, the salvage was sold, and the insurance Company received Rs. 7,900 for it. The plaintiffs-appellants now bring this suit claiming to be entitled to recover the amount due on his mortgage from the Insurance Company and from the alleged purchasers of the salvage.

As regards the latter, apparently a mistake was made, and the 2nd defendant is not the purchaser and it is admitted that as against him there is no claim.

Against the Insurance Company the claim is based on two grounds: First, it is based on the policy of insurance issued to Maung Po Sin, and secondly, on the deed of mortgage which, it is claimed, subsists as against the salvage property.

As regards the claim based on the policy, I am of opinion that the appellants are entitled to no relief. A contract of insurance is a contract of indemnity. It is a contract by the insurer to indemnify the insured against the loss that he may suffer in certain conditions. It is not a contract to indemnify any other persons, and there is no privity of contract between the insurer and any third party.

As regards the contract being one of indemnity, this is well recognised, and it is not necessary to do more than to quote one passage from the judgment of Bratt, L. J., in the case of Castellain v. Preston (1):—"The very foundation, in my opinion, of every rule which has been applied to insurance law is this, namely, that the contract of insurance contained in a marine or fire policy is a contract of indemnity; and of indemnity only, and that this contract means that the assured, in case of a loss against which the policy has been made, shall be fully indemnified, but shall never be more than fully indemnified. That is the fundamental principle of insurance, and if ever a proposition is brought forward which is at variance with it, that is to say, which either will prevent the assured from obtaining a full indemnity, or which will give to the assured more than a full indemnity, that proposition must certainly be wrong." And it is pointed out in Macgillivray's Insurance Law, at page 773, that, "apart from Statute, the mortgagee is not prima facie entitled to the benefit of an insurance effected on the property by the mortgagor..... In order to entitle the mortgagee to any claim on the policy there must be a covenant not only to insure but to insure for the benefit of the mortgagee or to apply the policy moneys in reinstatement or otherwise for the benefit of the mortgagee."

The deed of mortgage is silent as to insurance. There was no covenant by the mortgagor to insure for the benefit of the mortgagee, or at all. The mortgagee could not sue on the policy unless the mortgagor's right to sue had been assigned to him by a proper and legal assignment. There has been no such assignment, and the mortgagor has been paid in full for the loss that he suffered.

The loss was a "total loss," and a total loss means the destruction of the property or injury to it to such an extent as to render the insurer liable to pay the total sum insured. (Bunyon, on Fire Insurance, at page 267).

It was suggested that by the theory of subrogation the mortgagee would be entitled to the mortgagor's rights on this policy. The mortgagor has no rights left on the policy such as are now claimed by the mortgagee.

As to any right conferred by Statute, we have been referred to sections 49, 72 and 76 of the Transfer of Property Act.

Section 49 embodies a principle of law which was subsequently the view taken by James, L. J., in the case of Rayner v. Preston (2), in which he dissented from the opinion of the other two learned Lords Justices. It deals with the case of the transfer of immoveable property which was then insured against loss by fire, and in terms it only gives the right to the transferee, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, to require any money which the transferor actually receives under the policy or so much thereof as may be necessary to be applied in reinstating the property. It deals with an entirely different subject and has no application to the present case.

Section 72 deals with the case when, during the continuance of a mortgage, the mortgagee takes possession of the mortgaged property and it allows him to insure the property subject to certain limitations. Further, it lays down that nothing in the section shall be deemed to authorise the mortgagee to insure when an insurance of the property is kept up by or on behalf of the mortgagor to the amount in which the mortgagee is authorised to insure.

Section 76 lays down the liabilities of a mortgagee who, during the continuance of the mortgage, takes possession of the mortgaged property. There is no Statute provision by which the mortgagee is entitled to the benefit of the insurance effected by the mortgagor.

For these reasons, the first part of the claim fails, and the decree of the Court below must be confirmed.

BIDHURANJAN MOZUMDAR v. MANGAN SARKAR.

So far as the alternative claim which is based on the mortgagee's own mortgage rights is concerned, it is to be noted that in this case immovable property was mortgaged, but owing to its destruction by fire all that remained was certain moveable property, and it is the moveable property that has been brought to sale by the insurer. What the effect of this may be it is not, I think, necessary to decide. The right that the mortgagee possesses under his mortgage and under the decree that has been granted him is to bring the mortgaged property to sale. If the property had been alienated by the mortgagor, any person purchasing the property would purchase it subject to the rights of the mortgagee and to the charge on the property, and it would be open to the mortgagee to follow the property in his hands. The purchaser would be liable to have the property sold and the mortgage-debt paid out of the proceeds of sale so far as they would go. Those rights the mortgagee does not attempt to enforce.

A contract of insurance, as has been pointed out above, is one of indemnity, and, when the insured has been indemnified to the full extent for a total loss, any salvage belonging to the insurers (insured ?) is presumed under such circumstances to have been abandoned, and anything that may remain of the property belongs to the insurers to reimburse themselves so far as they can by selling the salvage for what it will fetch. That is an essential element in a contract of insurance. The mortgagor having been paid in full could not recover anything that the insurers may have realised by the sale of the salvage from them.

In this case the mortgagor has no rights left as regards the property which could pass to the mortgagees. In the passage that I have already quoted in Castellain v. Preston (1) it is pointed out that the contract between the insurer and the insured does not permit of the insured obtaining more than full indemnity. If in addition to obtaining full indemnity, as he has done, his debts were also to be paid, that would be in contravention of the first principle of the contract into which he entered, and, as Brett, L. J., pointed out, any proposition which would have this effect must certainly be wrong. The rights that the mortgagee possessed under his mortgage have been embodied in a decree of the Court, and that right is to bring the mortgaged property to sale.

In my opinion, therefore, the plaintiffs-appellants have no rights against the Insurance Company before us on their mortgage, and I would confirm the decree of the Court below in its entirety and dismiss this appeal with costs throughout.

The attestation referred to in section 2, sub-section (5) clause (b) of the Indian Stamp Act means attestation on the face of the instrument. [p. 781, col. 2.]

Reference under Stamp Act I of 1879, s. 49, 17 A. 211; A. W. N. (1895) 61; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 460 (F. B.), referred to.

Reference made by the Officiating Sub-Judge, First Court, Pabna, through the District Judge, Pabna under section 60 of the Stamp Act.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Dwarka Nath Chakraverty, Senior Government Pleader (with him Babu Surendra Nath Guha, Junior Government Pleader), for the Government.—The facts leading to this reference are briefly these:—The instrument in question purports to be a promissory-note for a loan of Rs. 71 re-payable on demand to the creditor, without the words "or order" or "bearer" and is attested by the writer who is a third person, but it has been stamped with an adhesive stamp of one anna. It was proved that the writer was actually present at the time of the execution of the document and saw the execution. The learned Officiating Subordinate Judge of Pabna who is trying the case has made this reference on the following points:—(1) Whether an instrument attested by a witness containing an unconditional undertaking signed by the maker to pay a certain sum of money to a person without the addition of the words, 'or order' or 'bearer' and without any words prohibiting its transfer, comes within the definition of a bond as given in the Indian Stamp Act, after the amendment of section 13 of the Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881) and addition of the Explanation (i) by section 3 of Act VIII of 1919? (2) If the above question be answered in the negative, whether the answer will be applicable to an instrument executed before Act VIII of 1919 came into operation?

I submit the learned Judge ought not to have made this reference in view of the fact, as appears from his letter, that the plaintiff has preferred to pay the stamp duty and penalty as on a bond. Attestation under section 2 (5), clause (b) of the Stamp Act means attestation on the face of the instrument. Refers to Reference under Stamp Act I of 1879, s. 49 (1). I submit the stamp payable was one anna only.

No one appeared to oppose.

JUDGMENT.

WOODROFFE, J.—This is a Reference under section 60 of the Indian Stamp Act. No appearance has been made by the person liable to pay the stamp. The learned Government Pleader has rightly pointed out to us that as the penalty has already been levied, it may be a question whether the learned Judge was right in making this Reference; but seeing that the learned Judge states in his Reference that "pending the decision on this Reference the plaintiff in this suit has preferred to pay the stamp duty and penalty," I think that the inference is that before the penalty was levied, the learned Judge had determined to make this Reference; and all that happened was that the Reference was actually framed later on. Upon the facts submitted to us, I think that the attestation referred to in section 2 sub-section (5) clause (b) of the Indian Stamp Act means attestation on the face of the instrument. In this connection I may refer to Reference under Stamp Act I of 1879, s. 49 (1). The decision in the case of Jagannath Khan v. Bajrang Das Agarwala (2), to which the learned Judge has referred, is not, I think, in point. It does not hold that the person who signs as writer of an instrument must be regarded as an attesting witness, but that a person who is present and witnesses execution of a mortgage bond and whose name appears in the document though he is therein described merely as a writer of the deed is a competent witness to prove the execution of the mortgage bond. Inasmuch as the words "attested by the witness" refer to attestation on the face of the instrument the findings on the evidence are, in my opinion, irrelevant for the purpose of determining the stamp payable. On this view of the case it is unnecessary to decide any other question to which the learned Judge has referred and I would answer the Reference by saying that the stamp payable on the document in question was one anna and, therefore, the document was properly stamped.

(1) 17 A. 211; A. W. N. (1895) 61; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 460 (F. B.).

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA

—RESPONDENT.

Income Tax Act (VII of 1918), s. 8—"House property," meaning of—Interpretation of fiscal and taxing Statutes—Occupation of house rent-free, whether "income."

MESSRS. ROWE & CO. v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

The business premises, built by a Company for their own use as a shop, godown and office and occupied by themselves for carrying on their business there, are not assessable as "house property" under section 8 of the Income Tax Act (VII of 1918). [p. 785, col. 2.]

Per Robinson, C. J.—The expression "house property" conveys the idea of buildings used for residential purposes. The word "house" does not mean any building erected for the use of man and, therefore, does not include all buildings of any description. [p. 784, col. 2.]

It is for the Crown to show that business premises fall within the expression "house property." The Crown seeking to recover the tax, must bring the subject within the letter of the law, otherwise the subject is free, however much within the spirit of the law the case might appear to be. There can be no equitable construction admissible in a fiscal Statute, the benefit of the doubt is the right of the subject. [p. 784, col. 1.]

Per Maunder, J.—The ordinary meaning of the word "house" is a building used for human habitation or as the dwelling place of human beings and when it is used with other words, as in "coffee-house," "play-house," "ware-house," the previous word is regarded as the defining prefix indicating a meaning different to the ordinary meaning of the general word "house". The word must, therefore, be construed as a dwelling house unless, reading the Statute as a whole, the context directs a departure from that meaning. [p. 786, col. 2.]

In Statutes of taxation the imposition of a duty must be in plain terms. Such a Statute must be construed strictly and the onus lies upon the Crown to show that the person whom it is sought to tax falls clearly within its operation. [p. 785, col. 2; p. 786, col. 1.]

If the person sought to be taxed comes within the letter of the law he must be taxed, however great the hardship may appear to the judicial mind to be. On the other hand, if the Crown seeking to recover the tax, cannot bring the subject within the letter of the law, the subject is free, however apparently within the spirit of the law the case might otherwise appear to be. In other words, if there be admissible, in any Statute, what is called an equitable construction, certainly such a construction is not admissible in a taxing Statute, where simply the words of the Statute must be adhered to. [p. 786, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

ROBINSON, C. J.—This is a Reference under the Income Tax Act, VII of 1918. It refers to the business premises occupied by Messrs. Rowe and Company. They built these premises for their own use as a shop, godown and offices, and they occupy them themselves and carry on their business there.

The Collector of Income Tax held that the premises owned by Messrs. Rowe and Company were assessable under section 8 as "house property," and that in consequence thereof they were entitled to the allowance set out in section 9 (2) (1) of the Income Tax Act, 1918.

Messrs. Rowe and Company appealed to the Commissioner who relied on the words "in respect of sums paid" which appear in section 9 (2) of the Act. He held that as no sum was paid in respect of the allowance made for the annual value of their premises, no allowance was permissible under section 9 (2) (1), and though apparently he was of opinion that these premises would be included in the expression "house property," he held that there was no need to re-assess such value under section 8.

Messrs. Rowe and Company appealed to the Financial Commissioner, who would restore the order of the Collector, but he has referred two questions to this Court for decision:—

(1) Are business premises, such as shops, offices and godowns, included in the term "house property" as used in section 8 of the Indian Income Tax Act, 1918, previous to its amendment by the Act of 1920? and

MESSRS. ROWE & CO. v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

(2) If the answer to the above is in the affirmative, does the allowance in respect of the bona fide annual value of business premises occupied by the owner made under section 9 (2) (1) bar the assessment of the said annual value under section 8 or section 11 of the Act?

As regards the second question referred, I do not fully appreciate the points raised by it, and the learned Government Advocate in addressing us said that it need not be considered.

In the first place, if the annual value of these premises is assessable under section 8 of the Act, there can be no question that section 11 would not apply, since that section deals only with income derived from other sources if not included under any of the preceding heads. If the question refers to the grant of an allowance in itself, excluding assessment of the same income, then it appears to me that it is an entirely different matter and that the question of liability under section 8 is entirely separate from the question of an allowance under section 9. However, in view of the opinion that I have arrived at with reference to the answer to be given to the first question referred, it is not necessary for me to say anything more on this point.

Under the Act in question what is liable to assessment is income; all income, subject to the exceptions laid down in sections 3 and 4. Section 5 then specifies various classes of income that are chargeable to Income Tax and the following sections deal with each of these classes separately:—

Section 8 deals with income derived from house property and lays down that the tax shall be payable by an assessee under this head in respect of the bona fide annual value of any house property of which he is the owner. The section provides a definition of the expression "annual value" for the purposes of sections 8 and 9.

Section 9 deals with income derived from business in respect of the profits of the business, and it grants certain allowances in respect of sums paid or, in the case of depreciation, debited, and the first of these allowances is the rent paid for the premises in which such business is carried on or, where the premises are owned by the assessee, the bona fide annual value thereof.

It is agreed on all hands that Messrs. Rowe and Company are entitled to this allowance, and the only question that we have to decide is whether they are liable to be assessed on the annual value of these premises under section 8; in other words, the sole question is whether business premises such as these fall within the expression "house property."

It will be well first to consider what are the rules governing the interpretation of Taxing Acts. In Tennant v. Smith (1) Lord Halsbury, L. C., said:—"This is an Income Tax Act, and what is intended to be taxed is income. And when I say 'what is intended to be taxed,' I mean what is the intention of the Act as expressed in its provisions, because in a Taxing Act it is impossible, I believe, to assume any intention, any governing purpose in the Act, to do more than take such tax as the Statute imposes. In various cases the principle of construction of a Taxing Act has been referred to in various forms, but I believe they may be all reduced to this, that inasmuch as you have no right to assume that there is any governing object which a Taxing Act is intended to attain other than that which it has expressed by making such and such objects the intended subject for taxation, you must see whether a tax is expressly imposed. Cases, therefore, under the Taxing Acts always resolve themselves into a question whether or not the words of the Act have reached the alleged subject of taxation. Lord Wensleydale said in Micklethwait, In re, (2) 'it is a well-established rule, that the subject is not to be taxed without clear words for that purpose; and also, that every Act of Parliament must be read according to the natural construction of its words.'"

In Attorney-General v. Milne (3) Viscount Haldane, L. C., said:—"It may be that, if probabilities, apart from the words used, are to be looked at, there is, on the construction which the Court of Appeal have put on the Statute, a casus omissus which the Legislature was unlikely to have contemplated. But, my Lords, all we are permitted to look at is the language used. If it has a natural meaning we cannot depart from that meaning unless, reading the Statute as a whole, the context directs us to do so. Speculation as to a different construction having been contemplated by those who framed the Act is inadmissible, above all in a Statute which imposes taxation," and in the same case Lord Atkinson said:—"To succeed the Crown must bring the case within the letter of that enactment. It is not enough to bring the case within the spirit of it, or to show that if the section be not construed as the Crown contends it should be construed property which ought to be taxed will escape taxation, or will enjoy . . . an immunity from successive levies of estate duty. These evils, if such they be, must, if they exist, be cured by legislation. Judicial Tribunals must in interpreting these Taxing Acts stick to the letter of the Statute." Again in Lumsden v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (4) Viscount Haldane, L. C., said:—

"The duty of a Court of construction in such cases is not to speculate on what was likely to have been said if those who framed the Statute had thought of the point which has arisen; but, recognizing that the words leave the intention obscure, to construe them as they stand, with only such extraneous light as is reflected from within the four corners of the Statute itself read as a whole."

The High Court of Calcutta, relying on those and other cases, in Killing Valley Tea Company, Limited v. Secretary of State for India (5), said:—"Now there is no room for controversy that the Crown seeking to recover the tax, must bring the subject within the letter of the law, otherwise the subject is free, however much within the spirit of the law the case might appear to be. There can be no equitable construction admissible in a fiscal Statute: the benefit of the doubt is the right of the subject."

What has to be considered, therefore, is whether premises built for and used as business premises are included in the expression "house property," if their natural meaning be assigned to these words. It is not for the Court to speculate what classes of property the Legislature meant to include in the term "house property," nor is it for the Court to speculate what the result will be from deciding the question in this way or that. There is nothing in the Act that I have discovered, or to which we have been referred, which throws any light on the interpretation to be given to these words. To my mind, the expression "house property" would convey to the ordinary person the idea of buildings used for residential purposes. It is for the Crown to show that Messrs. Rowe and Company's premises are "house property," and that can only be done by saying that "property" is the general word, while the expression "house" preceding it describes the kind of property referred to.

It is argued that the word "house" means any building erected for the use of man and, therefore, includes all buildings of any description. If this argument were sound, the expression "house property" would include mills, lime-kilns, godowns, warehouses and various other classes of buildings. I find it quite impossible to hold that in the ordinary sense of the words a lime-kiln, or rice-mill could be described as a "house."

It is argued that the allowance is granted under section 9, because that property would already be liable for taxation under section 8, and that, therefore, it is clear that the language used by the Legislature must be given its widest sense. It is not, however, by any means certain that the allowance was given for these reasons. What is taxable under section 9 is the income derived from, that is, the profits of, a business, and as it is obviously just and proper that essential expenses that must be incurred before profits can be realized should be deducted in arriving at the profits to be taxed, therefore, the allowance was granted. But, as I have said above, it is not open to the Court to speculate on the intention of the Legislature.

Again, it is argued that if a man builds business premises, such as these, and hires them out, the rent received by him would be liable to taxation as part of his income under section 8 of the Act, and that if such premises be not included in the expression "house property," the result of the interpretation would be that the owner who rented them out would be liable to be taxed, while the owner who occupied them himself would not.

Again, it may be doubted if this argument is sound. It assumes that he would be liable to be taxed under section 8; whereas, it may well be that he would not be liable under section 8, but under section 11 of the Act. In the one case, income is actually received, in the other case no income is actually received, though a benefit is obtained in that the owner occupier has not to pay rent for other premises that he would have to occupy for his business.

On this point the case of Tennant v. Smith (1) is instructive. It dealt with the question whether a Bank Manager who was required to live in a part of the Bank's business premises as custodian of the whole premises, and also for the transaction of any special Bank business after Bank hours, was liable to have included in his total income the yearly value of his privilege of free residence in the Bank's premises. Lord Halsbury said:—"Now, it is certainly true that the occupation of a house rent-free is not income," and again "Now, Mr. Tennant occupies this house without paying any rent for it. It may be conceded that if he did not occupy it under his contract with the Bank rent-free, he would be obliged to hire a house elsewhere, pay rent for it, and pro tanto diminish his income. And if any words could be found in the Statute which provided that besides paying income-tax on income, people should pay for advantages or emoluments in its widest sense, ...there is no doubt of Mr. Tennant's possession of a material advantage, which makes his salary of higher value to him than if he did not possess it, and upon the hypothesis which I have just indicated would be taxable accordingly."

While, therefore, the rent received by the owner is taxable as a part of his income the advantage derived by the owner who occupies his own premises could not be regarded as income.

The Chief Controlling Revenue Authority has referred to a case decided by the late Chief Judge and myself and has drawn attention to a sentence in Sir Daniel Twomey's judgment: "These Bazar companies are admittedly not businesses for the purposes of the Income Tax Act any more than professions are business for the purposes of the Act. They are assessed to income-tax as house property and not as businesses."

The question that was before us in that case was whether the Bazar companies carried on a business which made them liable to Excess Profits Duty under the Excess Profits Duty Act. The question as to whether they were liable to taxation under section 8 was not before us, and the extract cannot be used for the purpose it is sought to put it to. There is nothing in my judgment which would support that statement, and it was not one that in any way influenced our decision.

It is my opinion, therefore, that it is for the Crown to show that these premises fall within the expression "house property" and that that could only be done by giving a very wide and extended meaning to the expression, straining the language used and that it is not the right interpretation; and that, therefore, Messrs. Rowe and Company are not liable to be assessed under section 8. Nor are they liable, in my opinion, to be assessed under any other section of the Act on this head. If the intention of the Legislature was that they should get an allowance under section 9, only because they were liable to assessment under section 8, then much clearer language should have been used than has been employed, and if the result is not what was in the contemplation of the Legislature, that is the result of faulty drafting, which it is not open to the Court to make good.

I would, therefore, answer the first question referred in the negative; and this renders any answer to the second question unnecessary.

The respondent must pay the costs of this reference. Advocates' fee ten gold mohurs.

MAUNG KIN, J.—I have had the advantage of reading the learned Chief Judge's judgment and I have very little to add.

It is a commonplace that in Statutes of taxation the imposition of a duty must be in plain terms [Per Buckley, L. C., in Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Gribble (6)]; such a Statute must be construed strictly and the onus lies upon the Crown to show that the person whom it is sought to tax falls clearly within its operation [Per Lord Alversstone, C. J. in Whiteley v. Burns (7).] In Partington v. Attorney-General (8) Lord Cairns says: "I am not at all sure that in a case of this kind—a fiscal case—form is not amply sufficient; because, as I understand the principle of all fiscal legislation, it is this: If the person sought to be taxed comes within the letter of the law he must be taxed, however great the hardship may appear to the judicial mind to be. On the other hand, if the Crown seeking to recover the tax cannot bring the subject within the letter of the law, the subject is free, however apparently within the spirit of the law the case might otherwise appear to be. In other words, if there be admissible in any Statute what is called an equitable construction, certainly such a construction is not admissible in a Taxing Statute, where you can simply adhere to the words of the Statute." These observations were cited by Collins, M.R. in Attorney-General v. Selborne (Earl of) (9) and the learned Judge proceeded to say: "Therefore, the Crown fails, if the case is not brought within the words of the Statute, interpreted according to their natural meaning; and if there is a case which is not covered by the Statute so interpreted that can only be cured by legislation, and not by an attempt to construe the Statute benevolently in favour of the Crown."

In Oriental Bank v. Wright (10) Lord Blackburn, who delivered the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council, observed with regard to a fiscal Act that if the Legislature, from want of foresight or for any other cause, has omitted to provide for a case, it is the province of the Legislature itself, and not of the Courts, to supply the omission.

In Finance Act, 1894 and Studdert; In re (11) Fitzgibbon, L. J., said: "The benefit of the doubt is the right of the subject."

We have to construe the expression, "house property" in section 8 of the Indian Income Tax Act of 1918. I think the word "property" is a general word and the word "house" limits its meaning. What is, therefore, referred to by the expression is house which is a kind of property. The Legislature might very well have used the word "house" alone and say "Income derived from a house" instead of what it has used, "Income derived from house property." That being the case, what is the meaning of the word "house"?

In John & Co., In the matter of (12) the point arose as to whether mill premises could be treated as house property and two out of three learned Judges who disposed of the case held that they could not be so treated. Piggot, J., inclined to the view that the premises in question fell within the meaning of the expression.

To my mind the ordinary meaning of the word "house" is a building used for human habitation or as the dwelling place of human beings and when it is used with other words, as in "coffee-house," "play-house," "ware-house," the previous word is regarded as the defining prefix indicating a meaning different to the ordinary meaning of the general word "house." We must, therefore, construe it as meaning a dwelling house, unless, as Viscount Haldane, L. C., said, reading the Statute as a whole the context directs us to depart from that meaning. It was pointed out by the Chief Revenue Authority which made the above reference to the Allahabad High Court that the whole tenor of section 8 concerns property of the nature of residential property. There does not appear to be any good reason for departing from this view. Piggot, J. in the course of his judgment observed that the difficulty which he had felt throughout was that, if a firm in the position of the assessee in that case had been called upon for a return of its "house property" in or about the city of Agra, he thought it would have been expected to include ware-houses and factories as falling within the meaning of that expression. These remarks came immediately after the learned Judge had indicated the view that coffee-houses, play-houses and ware houses would fall within the meaning of the expression "house property." But my view, as above stated, is that in those hyphenated expressions, the previous word is only a prefix defining or limiting the ordinary meaning of the word "house." So that it is not of much importance whether a man may run a factory and shop as his "house property."

Moreover, under section (9) (2) (i) the assessee is given an allowance to the extent of the annual value of the premises when they are owned by him. In fact he is taxed on his balance sheet. The question then arises as to whether this allowance can be taken into consideration for the purposes of taxation under any other section, for instance, section 8. We may speculate on this question but the rules of construction of a Taxing Act debar us from doing so. If it was the intention of the Legislature to use the allowance made under section 9 (2) (i) for the purposes of section 8, clear words should have been used, and we are not at liberty to supply the omission. I have expressed this view, although the expression "house property" may probably be capable of being given the most liberal and extensive interpretation.

I would answer the first question referred in the negative. In this view it is not necessary to answer the second question referred.

Answered in the negative.

Evidence—Ex parte rent-decree—Evidence of relation of landlord and tenant—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 11, 13—Relevant fact—Ejectment suit by landlord—Defendant claiming occupancy rights as being in possession for 2 years after abandonment by recorded tenant—Rent-decree obtained by landlord against heirs of recorded tenant within 12 years of suit, admissibility of.

An ex parte rent-decree obtained by a landlord against the heirs of a tenant which is satisfied by payment of the decretal amount is evidence sufficient to show that, at the date of the decree, the heirs were paying rent and occupying the position of tenants [p. 784, col. 2.]

In a suit by a landlord to eject the transferee of a non-transferable occupancy holding where the defendant alleges that he is entitled to remain in possession on payment of rent on the ground that he has been in possession for more than 12 years after the abandonment of the tenancy by the previous tenant, an ex parte decree obtained by the landlord against the heirs of the latter within 12 years of the suit is admissible in evidence to show that there was no abandonment of the tenancy at the date of the decree [p. 788, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Tipperah, dated the 16th of February 1920, affirming that of the Munsif, Second Court, at Comilla, dated the 19th of September 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Krishna Kamal Moitra for Babu Sasadhar Roy, for the appellant.—The suit for khas possession is clearly barred by limitation. The plaintiff is entitled to rent only. The view taken by the lower Appellate Court that the cause of action did not arise at the date of the transfer is wrong. Reads Ram Narain Rai v. Ram Coomar Ohunder Poddar (1). Ohattapadhya v. Maharaj Bahadur Singh (3). The right of re entry of the landlord arises on the date of the transfer of the whole holding. The case in Raktoo Singh v. Sudhram Ahir (4) relied upon by the lower Appellate Court is really in my favour.

[GREAVES, J. refers to Ishan Ohandra Dhupi v. Nishi Ohandra Dhupi (5)].

That case is not against me. The ex parte rent decree is not admissible in evidence against me because I was not a party to the decree nor do I claim through the recorded tenant. See Ram Narain Rai v. Ram Coomar Ohunder Poddar (1).

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak (with him Babu Bhagirath Ohandra Das), for the Respondents.—The decision in Ram Narain Rai v. Ram Coomar Ohunder Poddar (1) is based on the decision in Gujja Lall v. Fatteh Lall (6) which has been considerably modified by the decision of the Privy Council reported as Ram Ran an v. Ram Narain Singh (7). The ex parte rent-decree was also admissible in evidence under sections 11 and 13 of the Evidence Act. Refers to Tepu Khan v. Rojoni Mohun Das (8).

Babu Krishna Kamal Moitra in reply.—The case in Tepu Khan v. Rojoni Mohun Das (8) has, it is true, considerably modified the decision in Gujja Lall v. Fatteh Lall (6). But the modification is to this extent only that the decree was admissible in evidence to show that there was such a decree. But no authority has been cited by my learned friend to show that an ex parte decree for rent was evidence of possession in favour of the landlord against the transferee of a non-transferable occupancy holding.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendant against a decision of the Additional District Judge confirming a decision of the Munsif. The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought by a co sharer landlord to recover khas possession from the purchaser of a non-transferable occupancy holding. The defense alleged was that the defendant had been in possession of the holding for a period of some 16 or 17 years and that, under the circumstances, the plaintiff could not recover khas possession but could only get rent. The only question that really arises in the appeal is with regard to the admissibility of a certain ex parte rent-decree passed in the year 1912 against the heirs of the recorded tenant Rafi Mahomed. It is urged on behalf of the appellant that as he was not a party to this decree it cannot be used in evidence against him and it has been further urged that, even if it is admissible in evidence, it is only admissible with regard to the fact that such a decree was in fact passed. We should say that, although the decree was an ex parte decree, it was satisfied by payment of the decretal amount. Now, the learned Vakil for the appellant in support of his argument with regard to the non-admissibility of the ex parte decree referred to the case of Ram Narain Rai v. Ram Coomar Ohunder Poddar (1). As against this it has been pointed out that that decision is based upon the Full Bench case of Gujja Lall v. Fatteh Lall (6) referred to at page 566 of the judgment and that the case of Gujja Lall v. Fatteh Lall (6) has been considerably modified by recent decisions of the Judicial Committee; and we were further referred in answer to the appellant's contention as to the non-admissibility of the decree to section 11 and also to section 13 of the Indian Evidence Act, it being urged that the ex parte decree is admissible in evidence to show the existence of the relevant fact of the existence of the tenancy of Rafi Mahomed as lately as the year 1912 and, accordingly, the landlord's rights as arising from such tenancy. We think that these arguments are well-founded and that the ex parte decree has rightly been admitted in evidence to show that there was no abandonment of the tenancy by Rafi Mahomed or his heirs prior to the year 1912. It may be that, as licensee or otherwise, the appellant was in possession for the period stated, namely, 16 or 17 years, but that is not, in our opinion, sufficient. It must be shown that the appellant has been in possession for a period of more than 12 years after Rafi Mahomed abandoned the tenancy.

MAYA WANTI v. ISHAR SINGH.

It appears to us, therefore, that there is satisfactory evidence that, as lately as 1912, Rafi Mahomed, or, rather, his heirs were paying rent in respect of the land and occupying the position of tenants. This being so, we think both the lower Courts have rightly decided in favour of the plaintiff's contention and have passed the decree for khas possession.

The appeal, accordingly, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal, second—Hindu joint family—Question of jointness—Question of fact, when.

A decision whether persons form a Hindu joint family or not is ordinarily a question of fact, when the correct legal principles on which the point should be decided have been appreciated, and as such cannot be assailed in second appeal.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 20th June 1917, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Rawalpindi, dated the 18th March 1917.

Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., and Mr. M. S. Bhagat, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Aziz Ahmad and Sewaram Singh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this case between Lal Singh and his deceased brother's wife, Musammât Maya Wanti, is, whether the two brothers constituted a joint Hindu family and whether succession goes by survivorship or not.

The lower Courts have both found that the two brothers formed a joint Hindu family and that succession goes by survivorship. Against this decree Musammât Maya Wanti has preferred a second appeal and we have heard her case argued by Mr. Sheo Narain.

The learned Counsel's main argument is that there is a good ground for second appeal, inasmuch as the lower Courts have not appreciated that a separation of interest is all that it was necessary for his client to prove and not a partition by metes and bounds or any other form of partition. He cites Shyamananda Das v. Ramkanta Das (1) and other judgments and his views on this point are not contested as, indeed, they cannot be by Counsel for the respondents. The reply, however, to Mr. Sheo Narain's arguments is that this principle of Hindu Law was thoroughly appreciated by the lower Appellate Court and that, in the light of these principles, the District Judge has discussed the evidence produced and that his finding is, therefore, a finding of fact. We agree with this contention, and we think that a decision whether persons form members of the joint Hindu family or not is ordinarily a question of fact when the correct legal principles on which the point should be decided have been appreciated.

We think that no ground of second appeal has been made out in this case and we dismiss it with costs.

In a suit to enforce a debt incurred by the manager of a joint Hindu family, if the plea of want of necessity of the particular rate of interest at which the money was borrowed is to be taken in addition to that of want of necessity for the debt itself, it must be raised in the pleadings. The facts necessary to prove legal necessity for the debt may be entirely different from those which may be necessary to prove the necessity for borrowing money at the particular rate of interest, and unless the plea is taken in the pleadings, the only onus which remains on the plaintiff is that of proving that the borrowing of the money was justified by legal necessity. A defendant cannot be allowed to raise the plea for the first time in appeal. [p. 79, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—In this case the defendants have appealed under the Letters Patent from a decision of Mr. Justice Ross, dated the 26th July last year, in which he set aside the decree of the District Judge and restored that of the Munsif.

The only question for our decision in this case is, whether the learned District Judge was right or not in refusing the interest payable under the mortgage-bond at the compound rate, and, in order to determine that question, it becomes necessary to consider whether or not the plea was taken in the written statements of the defendants to the effect that the interest prescribed by the mortgage-bond was not justified by legal necessity.

The defendants were the sons and grandsons of the mortgagor who had executed a mortgage bond in favour of the plaintiffs at a rate of interest of Rs. 1-9-0 per month compounded with yearly rests. The defendants raised various pleas by their written statements, amongst others, that the mortgage-bond was not executed for legal necessity and did not benefit the defendants. They further contended that the interest was excessive and by way of penalty. But assuming that the issue as to legal necessity for the execution of the bond was decided against them, they nowhere in their written statements took the specific plea that the rate of interest was not justified by legal necessity.

There were two written statements delivered in this case, the first on behalf of Aithan Gope, the defendant No. 2, and the second on behalf of Ramrup Gope, the defendant No. 3, who appeared through his guardian, Babu Makund Krishna Das, a reader. In the first written statement the plea with regard to interest was in these terms:—

"That a reference to the plaint will show that the plaintiff's claim for mesne profits is quite invalid and useless and it is by way of penalty. The plaintiff is not entitled to get compound interest."

That plea is set out in paragraph 6 of the written statement of the defendant No. 2. Then, the plea with regard to legal necessity is in these terms:—

"That even if it be proved that this defendant's father took the loan and executed the bond, as is falsely alleged by plaintiffs and totally denied by the defendant, then as the debt was not applied to legal necessities and it did not benefit this defendant or any other defendant, the plaintiffs are not entitled to a decree, nor can a mortgage-decree be passed (paragraph 10)."

ATHAN GOPE v. KHAKHAR SAHU.

The written statement of the defendant Ramrup Gope denied that the bond was genuine and in paragraph 2 pleaded: "that even if the bond be genuine, it cannot be binding upon this defendant as it did not benefit the joint family, either the exesutant of the bond or this defendant."

In paragraph 3 he pleaded that the stipulation for compound interest is by way of penalty and the plaintiffs are not entitled to get it. He further raised a somewhat extraordinary plea that he, the defendant No. 3, being the grandson of the exesutant of the bond, was not liable on that account to pay interest. These are the only pleas raised material for the present purpose. The learned Munsif came to the conclusion that the bond was justified by legal necessity, that the money raised thereunder was required for the purpose of paying rent, purchasing bullocks for the family cultivation, and some paddy for the use of the family, and he decreed the suit as prayed, coming to the conclusion that there was nothing unreasonable or unusual, certainly not unconscionable, in the rate of interest stipulated in the bond.

When the matter came before the District Judge, that learned Judge accepted the findings of the Munsif on the question of legal necessity for the raising of the money, but arrived at a conclusion that, although the rate of interest was not unusual as found by the Munsif, nevertheless, there was no legal necessity proved by the plaintiffs for borrowing money at compound interest. He, therefore, reduced the interest awarded allowing only simple interest at the bond-rate and not compound interest.

On appeal to this Court, the learned Judge before whom the appeal came, after considering the authorities which were referred to him on the point, dissented from the view taken by the District Judge and restored the decree of the Munsif, and the conclusion he came to was that, although the onus is undoubtedly upon the plaintiffs suing under the mortgage bond executed by the karta of the family, where the interest of minor members are concerned, to prove not only the necessity for the loan but the necessity for the interest at the rate stipulated, still the onus thus arising on the plaintiffs was discharged if the defendants did not raise specifically the plea, and that, unless it was specifically pleaded that the interest was not justified by legal necessity, there was no burden upon the plaintiff to prove by evidence that issue. In the present case I have referred to the issues which were raised by the defendants, and it seems to me that, although it may be said that the issue of legal necessity for the execution of the bond was raised, there was clearly no issue raised in the pleadings as to the necessity for the onerous interest stipulated in the bond. The facts necessary to prove legal necessity for the execution of the bond may be entirely different from those which are necessary to prove that there was necessity for borrowing money at a particular rate of interest or compound interest, and unless the plea is taken by the defendants it seems to me that the only onus which remains upon the plaintiffs is that of proving that the bond itself was justified by legal necessity, that is to say, that the borrowing of the money was justified by legal necessity. That fact in the present case has been found by all the Courts in favour of the plaintiffs, and I think it would be creating an altogether unjust burden upon the plaintiffs, where the question has not been specifically raised, if we were to allow the defendants in appeal to raise the point that the plaintiffs had failed to discharge the burden of proof upon an issue which was never in fact raised.

We have been referred to certain cases, some of them decisions of the Judicial Committee, in order to support the contention that in cases of a suit by a mortgagee against the members of the joint family it is not necessary in the pleadings for the defendants to raise the specific plea that the rate of interest stipulated in the bond was not justified by legal necessity and that it is sufficient merely to raise the general question as to whether the loan itself was justified by legal necessity. In the first case, that of Hurro Nath Bai Chowdhri v. Randhir Singh (1), the interest was reduced by the High Court at Calcutta from 18 per cent. to 12 per cent. and this decision was affirmed by their Lordships of the Privy Council. But in that case no question at all was raised that the pleadings and issues did not permit of such a course, and even if it is left in doubt, as it certainly is, as to what the exact form of the plea taken by the defendant was, as the point was never raised before their Lordships, it is certainly no authority in favour of the view now put forward by the defendant, and one must assume that the point decided both by the High Court of Calcutta and by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee was a point which it was competent for them to decide upon the pleadings as originally framed or at all events upon the issues framed in the suit. The next case was that of Nawab Nazir Begam v. Rao Raghunath Singh (2). The passage relied upon in that case in which the interest was reduced is a passage in the judgment of Lord Phillimore on page 702* of the report. It is in these terms:—

"In the written statement filed on behalf of the defendants, one of the points taken was that the property mortgaged was ancestral property, and that there was no legal necessity to execute the document sued upon. In the view which the High Court took of this plea, a view from which their Lordships see no reason to differ, it made it open for the defendants to contend that though the necessity for borrowing the principal sum was accepted, there was no necessity to borrow on the very onerous terms of this mortgage."

The plea taken in that particular case is merely referred to in general terms by Lord Phillimore in his judgment and it must be presumed that their Lordships had before them in that case the actual words of the plea as they appeared in the pleadings, and on referring to the decision of the High Court, which is reported as Rao Raghunath Singh v. Nazir Begam (3), one finds the defence of the defendants referred to on page 640†. It is there stated:—

"The defence of the sons and grandsons was that there was no legal necessity either for the loan or for the exorbitant rate of interest agreed to be paid such as would render the family property liable for it."

It appears, therefore, quite clear on a closer reference to the actual document in the case that the plea as to the necessity or the rate of interest was specifically pleaded; and the decision of the Judicial Committee in Nawab Nazir Begam v. Rao Raghunath Singh (2) is certainly no authority for the contention put forward before us in this appeal. But the whole question was carefully considered in a recent judgment of this Court in the case of Jag Shu v. Radha Kishun (4) where the cases I have referred to and several others were considered, and the learned Judge, of whom my learned brother sitting with me to-day was one, came to the conclusion that, before the defendants can raise the point that the plaintiff had failed to satisfy the burden of proof as to the rate of interest being justified by legal necessity, there must be a specific plea to that effect in the written statement. If in fact no plea of that sort was taken then it must be assumed that the defendants did not intend to raise the plea and no proof is required from the plaintiff; in other words, the burden of proof which is originally on the plaintiff is either waived or satisfied by reason of the absence of any plea requiring him to discharge that burden. Indeed, it would be most unjust and unfair upon the plaintiff where no issue has been raised in the case, to turn round afterwards and say, there is no evidence in support of the issue, the initial burden of proving it was upon you and, therefore, your case must fail, if in fact the point has never been taken from the beginning and no issue has been raised upon it. In my opinion, the learned Judge of this Court was quite right in the decision which he arrived at and this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), mortgage, invalid under—Personal covenant to pay mortgage-debt, whether enforceable—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 24, application of.

Where a mortgage is unenforceable, being in contravention of the provisions of the Agra Tenancy Act, any personal covenant entered into by the mortgagor and embodied in the mortgage-deed, to pay the mortgage-debt in the event of the mortgage being held to be invalid, is also unenforceable, as to enforce such an agreement would be contrary to the provisions of section 24 of the Contract Act.

Kanhai v. Tilak, 16 Ind. Cas. 42, followed.

Second appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Jaunpur, dated the 2nd of March 1920.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Appellant.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We have heard the learned Counsel for the appellant in this case and we think the appeal ought to fail. The facts are that the defendant-respondent, Sheo Gobind Tewari, made three mortgages of property in favour of the plaintiff on successive dates. These mortgages were usufructuary mortgages and in the case of the first two the property mortgaged was admittedly portions of an occupancy holding. In the third mortgage the property consisted partly of fixed-rate tenancy and partly of occupancy holding. It appears that after these mortgages were executed, two-thirds of the mortgaged property was lost to the mortgages owing to its being discovered that the mortgagor had a right in these properties only to the extent of one-third. Having thus been deprived of a portion of the mortgage security this suit was brought by the plaintiff purporting to be a suit under section 68 of the Transfer of Property Act. The plaintiff asked for a simple money-decree. Both Courts have refused to give him one on the ground that the mortgage contracts were void, being forbidden by the provisions of the Agra Tenancy Act. It has been argued before us that, inasmuch as there was a personal covenant in each of these mortgages, the plaintiff was entitled to resort to those covenants and to ask at least for a simple money-decree. It seems that when these mortgage-deeds were executed a covenant was entered into by the mortgagor on behalf of himself and his successors-in-interest whereby he undertook to pay interest at the rate of 2 per cent. per mensem on the principal sum in case the mortgagee lost possession owing to any default on the part of the mortgagor. We may mention here that the arrangement was that the mortgagee was to be in possession under these mortgages in lieu of interest.

It appears to us that the decision of the Courts below ought to be upheld and we have an authority directly in point in this case in a decision of Mr. Justice Chamer which is reported as Kanhai v. Tilak (1). That case purports to follow the decision of a Full Bench in Murlidhar v. Pem Roj (2). That Full Bench ruling in turn followed the ruling of a Division Bench in Bhawani Prasad v. Ghulam Muhammad (3). It is true that both these latter cases related to transactions of sale. Those were cases in which the vendee sought to get back the purchase money from his vendor when it was found that possession could not be obtained inasmuch as the transaction involved the transfer of sir land and the relinquishment of ex-proprietary rights. We agree with the view taken by Mr. Justice Chamer in the case above mentioned that to enforce an agreement of this kind would be contrary to the provisions of section 24 of the Contract Act. Under that section the entire contract is deemed to be void, and that being so, the personal covenants upon which the plaintiff relies in this case and which are embodied in these three mortgage-bonds must fall along with the contract of mortgage. The decision of the Court below must be upheld. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

MISCELLANEOUS SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 10

—OFFICIAL RECEIVER—RESPONDENTS.Punjab Laws Act (IV of 1872), insolvency proceedings under, whether "suit"—Order, whether decree—Appeal.

Insolvency proceedings under the special provisions of the Punjab Laws Act do not amount to a "suit", as the term is used in section 13 of the Civil Procedure Code; an order in such proceedings, therefore, is not a decree, and is, consequently, not appealable.

Ram Lal v. Ladda Singh, 62 P. R. 1886, Amanullah v. Abdul Ghafur, 13 Ind. Cas. 808; 85 P. R. 1911; 209 P. W. R. 1911, Chiranjil Mal v. 145 Creditors, 145 P. R. 1884, relied upon.

Miscellaneous second appeal from an order of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 20th of August 1920, affirming that of the Judge, Insolvents' Estates Court, at Amritsar, dated the 7th of April 1920.

Messrs. Manohar Lal and D. O. Ralli, for the Appellant.

Bakshi Tek Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of proceedings in insolvency in the Insolvents' Estates Court at Amritsar under Punjab Laws Act IV of 1872. Madan Gopal was adjudicated an insolvent under the provisions of that Act, and in accordance with the conditions of a trust deed the Judge of the Insolvents' Estates Court has released from attachment the insolvent's residential house. From this order Seth Radha Kishen, one of the creditors, filed an appeal to the District Judge who held that as the order appealed from was one under Act IV of 1872 and did not amount to a decree no appeal lay. He, therefore, dismissed the appeal. From this order a second appeal has been preferred to this Court.

In Ram Lal v. Ladda Singh (1) it was held, following the previous decision that no appeal lies against an order passed in insolvency proceedings under Act IV of 1872 unless "the order amounts to a decree." This was followed in Amanullah v. Abdul Ghafur (2). It was nowhere stated in either of those decisions that an order passed under the provisions of Act IV of 1872 could in any case be a decree. On the contrary, in Ram Lal v. Ladda Singh (1) the view was expressed that such insolvency proceedings could not be held to be a "suit" within the definition of the term "decree" in the Civil Procedure Code of 1882. Mr. Manohar Lal, on behalf of the appellant, refers to the definition of "decree," in section 2 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908. He says that the order of the Insolvents' Estates Court amounts to a "decree" because it was the formal expression of an adjudication which conclusively determined the rights of the parties with regard to a matter in controversy in the suit. He urges that the proceedings in the Insolvency Court are a "suit" within the meaning of the definition. Mr. Mulla, in his commentary of the Civil Procedure Code, 7th Edition, at page 5 says: "There are several Acts relating to special subjects, under which proceedings have to be commenced by a petition and not by a plaint. Decisions on petitions under those Acts would not, therefore, be decrees. Thus, a decision on a petition under the Religious Endowments Act appointing a new member to fill a vacancy in a committee of trustees of an endowment is not a decree." The meaning of the word "suit" in the definition of decree was also considered in Chiranjil Mal v. 145 Creditors (3) where it was held that insolvency proceedings under the special provisions of the Punjab Laws Act do not amount to a "suit" as the term is used in section 13 of the Civil Procedure Code. Counsel for the appellant is unable to point to any decision of this Court or the Chief Court wherein it was held that proceedings under the special provisions of the Punjab Laws Act amount to a suit. I am of opinion that they do not amount to a suit, and that the order appealed from is, therefore, not a decree. I, therefore, hold that the District Judge was right in his view that no appeal lay from the order of the First Court.

(2) 13 Ind. Cas. 808; 85 P. R. 1911; 209 P. W. R. 1911.

Counsel asked that, if I was of opinion that no appeal lay, I should consider the order of the First Court on the revision side. Certain evidence was heard by the Insolvents' Estates Court as to whether the insolvent had complied with the conditions of the trust-deed. The Judge has not referred to this evidence, which has been read to me, and after hearing it I am of opinion that there is no ground for revision of the order complained of. I accordingly decline to interfere with it. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Gaya.

Messrs. Susil Madhab Mullick, S. N. Rai and S. N. Bose, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Manuk and Nawal K. Prasad, No. II, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

COURTS, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of possession of a 2-anna share in village Manikpore on the allegation of the plaintiffs' ijara right. It appears that the plaintiffs' ancestor took a 2-anna ijara from one Fazal Hussain who had a 4-anna mokarrari interest in the village.

This was in the year 1879. In 1882 the defendants' ancestor purchased Fazal Hussain's 4-anna mokarrari but before this date Fazal Hussain had mortgaged his remaining 2-annas to the plaintiffs' ancestor. In the year 1897 the plaintiffs sued on the mortgage and got a decree, and the position of the parties now is, that the plaintiffs are the 2-anna ijaradars and the defendants are the 2-anna mokarraridars. The suit was decreed in the Court of first instance and this decree was upheld on appeal by the District Judge. The defendants have now appealed to this Court.

The point taken in appeal is that the suit being one in ejectment the plaintiffs must show possession within 12 years and it is contended that on the finding of the District Judge the suit is governed by the Full Bench decision of this Court in the case of Shiva Prasad Singh v. Hira Singh (1) and that the plaintiffs' suit must fail. The finding of the District Judge on this point is as follows:

"On the evidence I feel constrained to agree with the Subordinate Judge that neither party has satisfactorily proved his possession during the period between 1304 and 1315." But the District Judge has brought to his aid the title which the plaintiffs admittedly had in the year 1304 and has decreed the plaintiffs' suit. The learned Vakil for the appellants contends that the learned District Judge should not have brought to his aid the title of the plaintiffs and for this he relies on the Full Bench decision already referred to, where the learned Judges have said: "If it is found that the evidence produced by both the plaintiff and the defendant as to possession is unworthy of credit the plaintiff's suit must fail, inasmuch as the presumption which arises upon proof of title cannot be called in aid to give weight to evidence unworthy of credit any more than if no evidence at all had been given." On the other hand, Mr. Manuk appearing on behalf of the respondents relies on that portion of the judgment of the Full Bench where the decision in the case of Maharajah Koowur Baboo Nitrasur Singh v. Babu Nund Loll Singh (2) is relied on, viz., "where there is evidence on both sides of more or less equal weight so as to create a doubt as to where the truth lies, the probabilities may be regarded and may supply the additional weight necessary to turn the scale in favour of one side or the other." In the present case it is somewhat difficult to discover under which of these categories the finding of the learned District Judge comes, and if this appeal had to be decided on this point alone I should be inclined to direct that the appeal be remanded for clear decision by the District Judge. The appeal before us, however, must be dismissed on another ground.

The position of the parties, as I have already said, is that the plaintiffs are ijaradars in respect of 2-annas and the defendants are nokarraridars of another 2-annas. There was a partition between the defendants and their co-sharers and the learned District Judge says that, "it is admitted that up to the time of the Civil Court partition collection was Ijmal." No question of limitation, therefore, can arise, because the collection being joint there could be no adverse possession by the defendants until, at all events, the year 1906, and 1906 was within 12 years of the institution of the suit. As the learned District Judge says: "If there was joint collection at the time then any failure to deliver to the plaintiffs their share of the rent can hardly be held to amount to assertion of adverse title to or to dispossession until it is shown that the plaintiffs' title was definitely denied." The decision of the learned District Judge is certainly correct and I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

Under section 22 (1) of the Punjab Pre-emption Act, it is imperative for the Court to fix a time within which the deposit must be made, and if the Court fails to do so, and the pre-emptors do not pay in the deposit, they cannot be penalized for having disobeyed an order which was never made.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Dera Ghazi Khan, dated the 9th of October 1920, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Dera Ghazi Khan, dated the 6th of May 1920.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellants.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this suit for pre-emption the plaint was lodged on December the 11th and on the same date pre-emptor was ordered to deposit one-fifth of the sale price and the case was fixed for the 15th January. An adjournment took place to the 4th February and another to the 11th March when issues were struck. On the 11th March the vendees applied that the plaint should be rejected as the necessary deposit had not been put in. It was put in on the 12th March. On this the Court rejected the plaint as the deposit was not put in within time. An appeal to the District Judge was unsuccessful and the pre-emptors have preferred a second appeal to this Court. It is urged on their behalf that, under section 22 (1) of the Punjab Pre-emption Act of 1913, it is imperative for the Court to fix a time within which the deposit must be made and that the Court having failed to do so the pre-emptors could not be penalized for having disobeyed an order which was not made. This proposition appears to me obvious. The view of the lower Courts was that the deposit should have been made at the next hearing or, at any rate, at the settlement of issues, but there is no authority to this effect.

JUDGMENT.—In order to understand the facts of this case the following pedigree will be useful:—

The suit out of which this appeal arises was for possession of a 14 annas 4 pies share in a house and shop which had belonged to Khuda Bakhsh and for Rs. 60 on account of mesne profits. Musammāt Abbas Bandi and Musammāt Qasim Bandi, Taluqdars, obtained a decree for rent against Abdul Shakur, Abdul Razzak, Abdul Rahman and Musammāt Shakuran on the 14th of November 1912. In execution of this decree the house and the shop in suit were put to sale but in the application for execution they were shown as the property of Abdul Shakur alone. At the auction-sale, which took place in November 1914, they were purchased by Muhammad Hajjam, defendant No. 1. The sale was confirmed on the 2nd of February 1915. On the 5th of December 1918 Muhammad

ABDUL RAZZAQ & MUHAMMAD HAJJAM.

Hajjam obtained possession. On the 2nd of April 1918 he mortgaged the property to Shaif Muhammad, defendant No. 2, and on the 2nd of January 1919 he sold his equity of redemption to Nur Muhammad, defendant No. 3. It would appear that after possession had been given an objection was filed by Abdul Rahman, Abdul Razzak, Musammat Shakuran and one Khalil Ahmad but that objection was dismissed by an order of the 6th of March 1919. It has not been explained what interest the fourth objector, Khalil Ahmad, had in the property in suit. The third objector Musammat Shakuran was the transferee of the share of her husband, Abdul Ghani, under a registered sale deed dated the 5th of November 1910. The plaintiffs alleged that they with Abdul Shakur held joint possession of the property in suit, that their share amounted to 14 annas 4 pies and that they were unlawfully dispossessed on the 5th of December 1918.

The defendants pleaded that the property in suit never belonged to the plaintiffs, but it was owned solely by Abdul Shakur. They also pleaded an alleged custom by which daughters were excluded from inheritance and that the suit was barred by limitation. It was further urged that the plaintiffs were estopped from claiming any share in the house and shop and that the defendant No. 3 was the purchaser in good faith for valuable consideration from the ostensible owner and the suit was, therefore, barred by section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act.

The Court of first instance found that the custom of exclusion of daughters from inheritance was proved and that, therefore, the share of the remaining plaintiffs amounted to 13 annas 8 pies but it further found that Abdul Shakur was the sole proprietor of the house in suit by virtue of a private partition. It held that the suit was not barred by limitation but the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were transferees in good faith for consideration from the ostensible owner and in view of these findings it dismissed the plaintiffs' suit without deciding the question of estoppel.

Against this decision the plaintiffs appealed. Their grounds of appeal were that the custom of exclusion of daughters had not been proved, that the plaintiffs had been proved to be owners of the shares claimed by them, that in any case as they had been found to be the owners of a 13 annas 8 pies share a decree should have been passed in their favour to that extent, that the suit was not barred by time and that as the defendants had not set up partition in their pleadings they ought not to have been allowed to make out a new case which the plaintiffs had no opportunity to meet. The lower Appellate Court has held that the custom of exclusion of daughters is proved, that the defendants did not set up a new case inconsistent with or additional to their pleadings, that the plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 3 and 7 and 8 were the owners of the property in suit, along with Abdul Shakur, that their share amounted to 13 annas 8 pies and that the suit was not barred by limitation. It held, however, that the plaintiffs were estopped by their conduct from bringing the suit; and that as the plaintiffs had not in their grounds of appeal impeached the finding of the Court of first instance that the suit was barred by section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act and had not even attempted to raise the point in their opening arguments they could not be allowed in reply to re-open the question and the finding of the Court of first instance on that point was final and was fatal to the suit.

The decision of the lower Appellate Court has been attacked in this Court on two grounds: first, that the plaintiffs were not estopped from asserting their title, and, secondly, that they should have been allowed by the lower Appellate Court to dispute the finding of the Court of first instance that the suit was barred by section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act and it should have been found that the suit was not so barred. I may note here that the learned Counsel for the appellants in the course of arguments wished to dispute the finding of the lower Appellate Court that Abdul Shakur was not the sole owner of the property in suit but as that finding is a pure finding of fact based on a consideration of the evidence it cannot be disputed in second appeal. A patent mistake has, however, been made in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court which is admitted by both sides, and which I think ought to be corrected.

ABBUL RAZZAQ V. MUHAMMAD HAJJAM.

The lower Appellate Court, while holding that the custom of exclusion of daughters from inheritance has been proved, has mentioned plaintiffs Nos. 7 and 8, who claim through Musammât Shadi, the daughter of Ghure, as co sharers in the property along with plaintiffs Nos. 1, 2 and 3 and has omitted to mention Musammât Nasiba, the widow of Wafati, as a co-sharer. This is patently an error and the sharers in the property, according to the finding of the lower Appellate Court, are in addition to Abdul Shakur, plaintiffs Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4. Plaintiffs Nos. 7 and 8 can have no share in the property.

The plea of estoppel put forward by the defendants respondents is based on the fact that the plaintiffs, though parties to the decree and the execution proceedings, allowed the sale of the property to take place as belonging to Abdul Shakur alone, that it was their duty to assert their title to a share in the property, that they failed to do so and thereby permitted the purchaser defendant No. 1 to believe that Abdul Shakur alone was the owner of the property and to act upon that belief and purchase the property as belonging to Abdul Shakur alone. The learned Counsel for the appellants urges that there was no misrepresentation, that the defendant No. 1 knew that Abdul Shakur's interest alone was put up for sale and that his clients were not bound to assert their title in the course of the execution proceedings. At the outset I may state that Musammât Nasiba, the widow of Wafati, was no party to the decree or to the execution proceedings, and clearly there can be no estoppel as against her. With regard to plaintiffs appellants Nos 1, 2 and 3, however, the case is different. They were parties to the execution proceedings and had knowledge of those proceedings. They knew that the house was being sold as belonging to Abdul Shakur alone. They were present at the sale and yet they raised no objection whatsoever to the proceedings and allowed the sale to take place and the defendant No. 1 to purchase the house as if it belonged to Abdul Shakur alone. The defendant was a stranger, and even by the exercise of reasonable care he could not have discovered that the plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 3 were co-sharers in the property, as the khasra shows that the house and shop are the sole property of

Abdul Shakur. Even after the sale had taken place, the plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 3 did not object to its confirmation on the ground that they had an interest in the property. The plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 and the husband of plaintiff No. 3 filed an objection to the sale (Exhibit C-1) not on the ground that they had a share in the property but on the ground that it had been sold for an insufficient price. They allowed the sale to be confirmed on the 2nd of February 1915 and it was not until after the purchaser obtained possession on the 5th of December 1918 that they made any attempt whatsoever to assert their title. In the case of Arunachellam Chetti v. Arunachellam Chetti (1), it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that where the mort-debtors allowed the execution sale of the whole of their property to proceed without raising any objection of insufficient description or to the effect that part ought to have been sold instead of the whole, the sale could not afterwards be set aside at their instance on those grounds, and at page 174 their Lordships remarked: "The judgment-debtors knowing, as they must have known, what the description was in the proclamation, allowed the whole matter to proceed until the sale is completed, and then asked to have it set aside on account of this, as they say, misdescription. It appears to come within what was laid down by this Board in Olpherts v. Mahabir Pershad Singh (2), that if there was really a ground of complaint, and if the judgment-debtors would have been injured by these proceedings in attaching and selling the whole of the property whilst the interest was such as it was, they ought to have come and complained. It would be very difficult indeed to conduct proceedings in execution of decrees by attachment and sale of property if the judgment debtor could lie by and afterwards take advantage of any misdescription of the property attached, and about to be sold, which he knew well but of which the execution-creditor or decree holder might be perfectly ignorant that they should take no notice of that, allow the sale to proceed, and then come forward and say the whole proceedings were vitiated. That, in their Lordships' opinion, cannot be allowed." In that case the sale took place on the 22nd of July 1882 and objection was first made on the 29th of July 1882, only seven days after the sale and before the sale was confirmed. In the case before me the sale took place in November 1914, and was confirmed on the 2nd of February 1915 and yet the plaintiffs-appellants remained quiet and made no attempt whatsoever to assert their title until some time in the beginning of 1919.

I have no hesitation in holding on the facts before me that the plaintiffs-appellants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 are estopped from bringing the present suit. In this view of the case it is unnecessary to consider the application of section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act. The learned Counsel for the respondents admits that that provision is not applicable as against Musammât Nasiba, the widow of Wafati, as she was no party to the decree and she was not bound to take any action until she was ousted from possession on the 5th of December 1918. The property had actually been mortgaged to the defendant No. 2 long before that date and the sale-deed in favour of defendant No. 3 was executed on the 2nd of January 1919 and there is nothing to show that the defendant No. 1 was the ostensible owner of the property with her consent, express or implied.

The result is that I allow the appeal to the extent that I give Musammât Nasiba a decree for possession of a 1 anna share in the property in dispute. In other respects the appeal is dismissed. Musammât Nasiba will be allowed proportionate costs in all Courts. The defendants-respondents will get proportionate costs in all Courts in respect of the portion of the claim which is dismissed from the other appellants who will bear their own costs.

Appeal against the decrees of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, Rangpur, dated the 4th of August 1919, modifying that of the Munsif, Second Court at Kurigram, dated the 4th of May 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Nagendra Nath Ghose (with him Babu Jatindra Nath Sanyal), for the Appellant.—The facts shortly are that plaintiffs purchased a jote of 2¼ bighas at a sale held in execution of a rent decree. He then brought a suit against Helaluddin and others for declaration of title and recovery of possession inasmuch as they had been in possession of a portion of the jote. The suit was compromised and by the solenama the defendants took lease of the entire jote. They also agreed to pay mesne profits. The present suit is for rent of the entire jote. The defence is that the defendant not having been given possession of 19 bighas was not bound to pay any rent at all. The lower Courts have given decree for proportionate rent. Hence the appeal is by the defendant. I submit there was one entire rent for the entire jote and it is impossible to assess a proportionate rent. Refers to Manindra Chandra Nandi v. Narendra Chandra Lahiri (1). The case in Annada Prasad Mukhopadhyaya v. Mathura Lal Nag Mazumdar (2), Saroda Prasad Bhattacharjee v. Rai Munmotho Nath Mitter Bahadur (3) are distinguishable. The case in Annada Prasad Mukhopadhyaya v. Mathura Lal Nag Mazumdar (2) has been disapproved by Fletcher, J., in Manindra Chandra Nandi v. Narendra Chandra Lahiri (1). Refers to Smith v. Raleigh (4), Reeve v. Bird (5). The landlord is bound, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, to give the lessee possession of the land demised. Refers to section 108, Transfer of Property Act, clause (6); Hurish Chunder Koondoo v. Mohinso Mohun Mitter (6), Bullan v. Lalit Jha (7), Udhab Chandra Singh v. Narain Manjhi (8). If the land is in possession of a third person to the knowledge of both the lessor and the lessee, even in that case it would be the duty of the lessor to make it possible for the lessee to take possession. Refers to Narainsawmy Naidu Garu v. Yerramali Ram Krishnaya (9), Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume XVIII, page 485. Zamindar of Vizianagram v. Behara Suryanarayana Patru (10). To make out a case for suspension of rent it is not necessary to establish that the landlord has been guilty of tortious dispossession. It is enough that he has failed to do his part of the duty. The question of the bona fide or otherwise of the landlord is immaterial.

Babu Ram Charan Pitter (with him Babus Ram Chandra Majumdar, Dwarka Nath Chatter-butty, Hemendra Nath Sen, Jyoti Prasad Parvadhikari and Sarat Kumar Pitter), for the Respondents.—I submit the case in Manindra Chandra Nandi v. Narendra Chandra Lahiri (1) is quite distinguishable. Here the land was in possession of a trespasser to the knowledge of both the parties and the defendant had paid mesne profits for the three years at the proportionate rate. That amounts to acquiescence. The settlement was taken with full knowledge that the land was in possession of a trespasser. This clearly indicates an intention that the liability to pay rent did not depend on the delivery of possession of that part of the jote. Further neither has there been any request to be put in possession.

Babu Nagendra Nath Ghose in reply.—We state in the written statement that repeated requests had been made. This question was gone into by the Courts below.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for rent. It appears that the plaintiff purchased a jote of 244 bighas 18 cottas 14 chittaks at a sale for arrears of rent, but found that 225 bighas was in the possession of the defendant and the rest in the possession of one Helaluddin and others. He thereupon brought a suit for declaration of his title to and khas possession of the 225 and odd bighas in the possession of the defendant against him. The suit was compromised, and under the compromise the defendant took a lease of the entire land 244 bighas 18 cottas 14 chittaks at a rent of Rs. 200 from the plaintiff from the year 1321 B. S. It was stated in the solanama that the defendant would pay mesne profits for the 225 bighas of land which were in his possession for the years 1317 to 1320 at the rate of Rs. 184 per year, that being the proportionate rent payable in respect of the lands which were in his possession. A decree was accordingly passed upon the solanama. It is found that the defendant did not obtain possession of the 19 and odd bighas of land which were in the possession of Helaluddin. The Courts below held that the entire rent should not be suspended and gave the plaintiff a decree for proportionate rent in respect of the 225 bighas in the possession of the defendant, and disallowed the rent for the 19 bighas and odd which were not in his possession.

NARENDRA CHANDRA LAHIRI v. MANINDRA CHANDRA NANDI.

The defendant has appealed to this Court, and it is contended that the plaintiff having failed to deliver possession of the 19 and odd bighas of land, there should be suspension of the entire rent.

There is no doubt that where the lessor has evicted the lessee from a part of the land demised the entire rent is suspended [see the cases on the point collected in Saroda Prasad Bhattacharjee v. Rai Man-motho Nath Mitter Bahadur (3)]. In the present case, however, there is no question of any eviction by the lessor or by anyone claiming under him or by his procurement. The question is whether the plaintiff not having delivered possession of the 19 bighas of land which was in the wrongful possession of a third party, the entire rent should be suspended. That question was not directly decided in any of the cases cited before us. In the cases of Hurish Ohunder Koondoo v. Mohinee Mohun Mitter (6), and Bullan v. Lalit Jha (7), the tenant did not obtain possession of the demised land at all, and it was held that he was not liable to pay rent. In Narainsawmy Naidu Garu v. Yerramali Ram Krishnaya (9), it was held that where the lessor does not put the lessee in possession but there is no obstruction or likelihood of obstruction to the lessee taking possession of the same, and he neither tries nor requests the lessor to put him in possession, the lessee is bound to pay rent. In that case the learned Judge (sitting singly) observed: "But if the land is already in possession of a third person to the knowledge both of the lessor and the lessee, I should be inclined to hold that it would be the duty of the lessor to make it possible for the lessee to take possession by removing the third person from the possession thereof, even though no express request for the purpose is made by the lessee." The lessee in that case appears not to have obtained possession of the land demised at all, and the observations were obiter. In Annada Prasad Mukhopadhyay v. Mathura Lal Nag Mazumdar (2) the lessee was prevented from taking possession of a proportion of the demised land by another lessee to whom the said portion was demised by a subsequent lease. One of the Judges, Chitty, J., was of opinion that there was no eviction properly so called of the lessee by the landlord, while Vincent, J., was of opinion that there was eviction of the first lessee by the second by the procurement of the landlord. The land in that case was in the Sunderbans; there was a dispute as to the boundaries of the lands let out to the two lessees respectively, and the landlord was found not to have acted mala fide. The lessee (under the first lease) so far from repudiating the lease kept possession of the remaining portion and even paid rent subsequently to the creation of the second lease, and it was held by both the learned Judges that the lessee could not ask for a suspension of the whole rent and was bound to pay proportionate rent. Chitty, J., in that case observed: "It may be questioned how far the technicalities to be found in the English Law should be allowed to affect the relations of landlord and tenant in this country. In one respect the principle underlying the English decisions appears to be inapplicable to this present case. Eviction is regarded as a wrong done by the landlord to this tenant, for which the former is to be penalised. Here not only, as I have said, was there no eviction properly so called, but there is no proof of mala fides on the landlord's part. It may be that by a careless statement of boundaries in the two pottas lands which should be included in the defendant's holding are also included in those of Rasik Lal Dutta. But that is all that can be alleged against the plaintiff on the facts of this case as admitted and as found by the lower Appellate Court. I think that the defendant has no defence to the plaintiff's suit for rent."

In the case of Manindra Chandra Nandi v. Narendra Chandra Lahiri (1) (which was between the same parties as in the present case) Fletcher, J., appears to have taken a different view. He pointed out that the case of Stokes v. Cooper (11) relied upon by Chitty, J., had been disapproved of in Smith v. Raleigh (4) and also in another case [Reeve v. Bird (5)] and that in England there is no difference between the case where the landlord has ousted the tenant from a portion of the holding and the case where the landlord has let out the property to the lessee having already put an earlier and prior lessee in possession of it, and referred to the case of Neale v. Mockenzie (12).

(11) (1814) 3 Camp. 514n; 14 R. R. 829n.

Those cases, however, are distinguishable from the present, as the lessee in those cases could not obtain possession, nor could the lessor deliver possession by reason of the lessor having granted a lease in favour of a third person in respect of a portion of the land demised to the lessee in question. The defendant in the present case pleaded that the plaintiff was in possession of the 19 bighas by letting out the same to Helaluddin. That case has not been accepted by the Courts below. The learned Vakil for the appellant, however, referred to a passage in Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume XVIII, page 485 where it is stated: "where part of the premises is held by a third person rightfully claiming under a title adverse to the lessor, so that the lessee cannot obtain possession, the result is the same as in the case of unlawful eviction by the lessor, and no part of the rent is recoverable." [Holgate v. Kay (13)]. Reference was also made to section 108 (b) of the Transfer of Property Act which provides that, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, the lessor is bound on the lessee's request to put him in possession of the property. It is pointed out that the defendant in the written statement stated that he had requested the plaintiff to put him in possession of the land. The question, however, does not appear to have gone into in either of the Courts below.

It is unnecessary in the present case to consider the broad question whether, ordinarily, the entire rent should be suspended when the lessor is unable to deliver possession of a portion of the land demised whatever might be the reason for his inability and whether the view taken by Chitty, J., in the case of Annada Prasad Mukhopadhyaya v. Mathura Lal Nag Mazumdar (2) that the English rule should not be applied to this country is correct.

The present case is not an ordinary case of settlement, where the lessor has to deliver possession of the land demised to the lessee. The defendant was already in possession (though wrongful) of 225 bighas for several years and, as stated above, 19 bighas of land was at the date of the solanama, in the possession of Helaluddin. The solanama was executed on the 30th May, 1914 corresponding to the 16th Jaistha 1321 but the tenancy in respect of 244 bighas was to be operative retrospectively from the beginning of 1321 i.e., 1st Baisakh 1321. The defendant took a settlement of the entire 244 bighas though he was perfectly aware that a portion of it, viz., 19 bighas, was in the wrongful possession of a third party. These indicate an intention that the liability of the defendant to pay rent in respect of the 225 bighas which was in his possession already did not depend upon the delivery of possession of the 19 bighas which was in the possession of Helaluddin. The plaintiff never put any obstruction in the way of defendants recovering possession, and there is no question of malā fides on the part of the plaintiff. We think that, in the circumstances of the case, the Courts below were right in holding that the entire rent should not be suspended, and that the defendant is liable to pay proportionate rent in respect of the 225 bighas of land in his possession.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed. Each party to bear his own costs.

but by custom as recorded in the wajib-ul-arz, the entry in that document being—"aur hissa malik mutvaffi ka woh shakhs pawega jo qarib hai," the word "qarib," in the absence of words limiting the succession to relatives in the male line only, means that relatives "nearest in degree" succeed, and not those "nearer in degree through the male line." Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated 10th August 1921, confirming with a little modification the decree of the Munsif, Sultanpur, dated the 14th September 1920.

Mr. Niamat Ullah, for the Appellant,

Mr. Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought for possession of a half share of certain property which had belonged to one Muhammad Bakhsh, a Sunni Muhammadan, and for Rs. 200 mesne profits for two years. The plaintiff's case was that, on the death of Muhammad Bakhsh, the property devolved on his widow, Musammat Abadi, for her life by virtue of a family custom, that Musammat Abadi had executed a deed of gift on the 10th of October 1880 in favour of Niamat Ali, the defendant, and that that deed of gift could have effect only for the lifetime of Musammat Abadi. It was claimed that, on the death of Musammat Abadi in May 1918, by virtue of the family custom, the nearest heirs of the husband were entitled to succeed to the property and that daughters and daughters' sons were excluded, and the plaintiff alleged that he and one Wajid Ali were the nearest heirs to Muhammad Bakhsh both according to the custom and under the Muhammadan Law, and that he (the plaintiff) was entitled to recover possession from the defendant of a one half share in the property and to mesne profits for the previous two years.

The defendant denied the pedigree put forward by the plaintiff. He pleaded that he himself was the nearest heir of Muhammad Bakhsh, and that, both under the custom and under the Muhammadan Law, he was entitled to succeed. He further pleaded that he had been in possession of the property ever since execution of the deed of gift in 1880 and that the suit was barred by limitation.

The Court of first instance held that the pedigree set up by the plaintiff was proved, and that as Musammat Abadi died in the year 1918 and the cause of action arose at the time of her death the suit was within limitation. It also held that the custom set up by the plaintiff was proved and that the plaintiff was entitled under that custom to a half share in the property. It gave the plaintiff a decree for possession of a half share and for Rs. 70 mesne profits and dismissed the rest of the claim.

From this decision the defendant appealed and it was urged that the pedigree put forward by the plaintiff was not proved, that the Court of first instance had wrongly interpreted the village wajib-ul-arz, that the claim was time-barred, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to possession of a half share in the property or to mesne profits. The lower Appellate Court has found that the suit is not barred by limitation, that the pedigree put forward by the plaintiff is established and under the custom the plaintiff is entitled to a half share in the property with the exception of a house which was not proved to have belonged to Muhammad Bakhsh. The lower Appellate Court held that all the oral evidence relative to the alleged custom was valueless and based its finding as to the custom solely on the entry relating to the custom in the wajib-ul-arz.

The defendant has come to this Court in second appeal and he bases his appeal on two grounds, first, that the pedigree set up by the plaintiff has not been proved, and, secondly, that the lower Appellate Court has wrongly interpreted the entry in the wajib-ul-arz relating to the claim. He admits that Musammat Abadi had only a life-interest and that succession to the estate left by Muhammad Bakhsh is governed not by the ordinary rule of Muhammadan Law but by the custom set forth in the wajib-ul-arz but he contends that, according to that custom, he and he alone is entitled to succeed.

NIAMAT ALI v. ASHIQ ALI.

The finding of both the Courts below that the pedigree set up by the plaintiff has been established is a pure finding of fact based on evidence and cannot be disputed in second appeal. That pedigree, so far as it affects the parties, is as follows:—

It will be seen from this pedigree that the defendant is the son of Muhammad Bakhsh's sister, while the plaintiff is the great-great-great-grandson of Muhammad Bakhsh's great-grandfather, that is, he is in the eighth degree from Muhammad Bakhsh. The words used in the wajib-ul-arz on which both the parties rely are as follows:— "aur hissa malik mutavafi ka woh shakhs parwaga in qarib hoga." The learned Counsel for the defendant-appellant argues that, even though the pedigree put forward by the plaintiff-respondent be accepted as correct, his client must be held to be "qarib" as against the plaintiff, the word "qarib" meaning nearest in degree. For the plaintiff-respondent, on the other hand, it is urged that the word "qarib" must be interpreted as meaning nearest in degree through the male line. In this connection, it is difficult to understand the reasoning of the learned Subordinate Judge. He says: "It has been contended before me that the word 'qarib' does not mean to include the descendants of a common ancestor. I do not see that this contention has any force. The word 'qarib,' used without any restrictions, should be interpreted in its widest meaning, and it does mean that descendants of a common ancestor were meant." Yet, the learned Subordinate Judge goes on to hold that the plaintiff has a better title than the defendant under the custom as recorded in the wajib-ul-arz and, in coming to that decision, he appears to have been influenced by the fact that, under the ordinary Muhammadan law, the plaintiff would be entitled to succeed as a residuary in preference to the defendant who is merely one of the distant kindred. I agree with the remark of the learned Subordinate Judge that as the word "qarib" stands alone it must be interpreted in its widest sense, that is, near in degree, and we are not entitled to restrict its meaning and interpret it as meaning near in degree through the male line. Nor do I think, where it has been proved that inheritance is governed not by the Muhammadan Law but by the custom, we are entitled to put a strained or limited interpretation on the words used in defining the custom merely because in some instances, if the words were interpreted in their ordinary sense, succession would not be in accordance with the rule of Muhammadan Law. An examination of this wajib-ul-arz shows that in this family there are many customs which cannot be reconciled with the Muhammadan Law: for example, there is a custom of adoption, there is a custom by which a widow takes a life-estate and there is a custom by which daughters are excluded from inheritance in the presence of sons. It seems to me that, had it been the intention to record a custom by which relatives in the male line only were entitled to succeed, the necessary limiting words would have been placed in the wajib-ul-arz. As there are no such words, we must interpret the word "qarib" in its widest sense as "nearest in degree" and the defendant is certainly much nearer in degree to Muhammad Bakhsh than the plaintiff.

The result is that the appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and the plaintiff's suit will stand dismissed with costs in all Courts.

ORDER.—The facts of this case may be briefly stated as follows. The plaintiff Nanhil with her two sons, Haziralal and Gorelal, of whom the latter is still a minor, owned a part of certain premises in Mouza Gadola, the rest of which belongs to the minor Dhannalal, the son of Nanhil's deceased brother Motilal. Dhannalal lives at Khurai, five miles from Gadola, with his paternal uncle Mangulal who is his natural guardian. Dhannalal was only six years old when the suit was filed in March 1920. Early in 1917 Mangulal decided to sell Dhannalal's part of the premises as the minor did not require it. A purchaser was found for Rs. 240 in one Khushalehand, but before the sale could be completed Musammal Nanhil and Haziralal deposited Rs. 240 with Mangulal on the understanding that Dhannalal's house would be sold to them and Gorelal for Rs. 300 if Khushalehand could be induced to relinquish his claim. Khushalehand on being approached agreed to relinquish his right, but the plaintiffs did not carry out the bargain. The suit was brought to recover the sum deposited with interest on the ground that there was no binding agreement on the plaintiffs' part to purchase the house and that, even if such an agreement was reached, it could not be enforced by either side because the plaintiff Gorelal and the defendant Dhannalal are both minors.

The Trial Judge held that there was a binding agreement by the plaintiffs to buy the house for Rs. 300 and that the plaintiffs could not claim refund of their deposit in the absence of anything to show that the minor defendant's guardian was unwilling to execute the necessary conveyance.

The plaintiffs appealed to the District Court which held that the plaintiffs' agreement to buy was void and unenforceable. The reasons given for this view are, firstly, that the defendant Dhannalal and the plaintiff Gorelal are minors, so that, by reason of section 10, Indian Contract Act, the agreement does not amount to a contract, and, second, that there being no mutuality between the parties the contract is unenforceable and, therefore, void. It was further held that Mangulal who received the money and subsequently transferred it to the credit of his ward Dhannalal, must repay it but without interest.

Mangulal has applied to this Court in revision and at his request his place as Dhannalal's guardian ad litem has been taken by Musammal Kesar, a sister of Dhannalal's father. It is urged on behalf of the applicant that section 10, Indian Contract Act, has no application, inasmuch as the agreement was made not with the minor defendant but with his natural guardian, while Haziralal as Gorelal's adult brother, was competent to act for him so as to bind him by the transaction. For the plaintiffs, on the other hand, it is contended that the decision of the District Court really rested upon the view that the agreement between the parties did not amount to a contract, and that, even if the District Judge was wrong in his application of section 10, Indian Contract Act, this Court is powerless to interfere.

It is certainly difficult to understand why section 10, Indian Contract Act, was cited at all, for the lower Appellate Court went on to treat the agreement as a contract which it then pronounced to be void because neither side could in its opinion claim specific performance. In my opinion the District Judge acted with material irregularity in assuming that Dhannalal himself made the agreement, the obvious fact being that it was made by his natural guardian on his behalf and under circumstances which show that the minor was to be benefited. The plaintiffs were willing to pay Rs. 60 more than Khushalchand and a period of 12 years at least will have to elapse before Dhannalal can require a house of his own. Moreover, it is settled law that a minor is bound by the act of his guardian done bona fide and for his benefit in the management of his estate. See Seth Ghasiram v. Musammal Binia (1). Lastly, it was no part of the plaintiffs' case that the agreement did not amount to a contract. In these circumstances, I consider it open to me to interfere under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, with the obviously incorrect finding that there was no contract between the parties.

With regard to the conclusion of the District Court that the contract between the parties was void because there was no such mutuality as would enable either side to enforce specific performance, it is urged for the applicant that the authorities cited by the District Judge, namely, Jhilibai v. Tajmal (2) and Mulibai v. Garud (3) do not support the finding that the contract was void. It is also urged that the decision of the Privy Council in Sarwarjan v. Fakhrudin Mahomed (4), cited in the Trial Judge's judgment, does no more than lay down that a minor cannot obtain specific performance of a contract for the purchase of immoveable property made by his guardian on his behalf. For the plaintiffs it is contended that the District Court's conclusion upon a point of law cannot be interfered with in revision.

In my views the conclusion that the contract was void merely because specific performance could be obtained by neither side is a pure non sequitur. For reasons already given, the contract was certainly not void; at most, any conveyance executed under it could be avoided entirely by Dhannalal or partly by Gorelal on attaining majority. Each of the minors was represented in the matter by a person competent to act for him. The applicant, as Dhannalal's natural guardian, is still willing to execute a conveyance in favour of the plaintiffs and I agree with the Trial Judge in thinking that the question whether specific performance can be claimed does not really arise at all. The plaintiffs do not allege that the contract for sale went off owing to any default by the vendor and they seek to be put in the same position as if they were entitled to resile from the contract, a position for which no authority is cited. It was for the plaintiffs to tender the necessary conveyance for execution by Dhannalal's guardian and, as already stated, he is still willing to execute such a document. Where a contract goes off by default of the purchaser, the vendor is entitled to retain the deposit: See Natesa Aiyar v. Appavu Patayachi (5), Bishan Chand v. Radha Kishan Das (6) and Roshan Lal v. Delhi Cloth & General Mills Company Limited (7). Thus, the District Court has, in my view, while professing to decide one question, decided quite another, there being no real connection between the two. In "Fry, on Specific Performance" (6th Edition, page 319) it is laid down on the authority of Lindley, C. J., in Lumley v. Ravenscroft (8), that an infant cannot sue because he could not be sued for specific performance, and at page 400 of the same work the cases in which the want of mutuality may be a ground justifying rescission of a contract are mentioned. Those cases do not include one like the present, nor would the plaintiffs be entitled to rescission under Chapter IV of the Specific Relief Act, 1877. The circumstances in which a contract is voidable are given in sections 19, 19A, 39, 53 and 55 of the Indian Contract Act, and none of these are pleaded or proved in the present case.

My conclusion is, that the District Court failed to decide the real question which Landlord and tenant—Biswi mortgage—Right of redemption, extinction of—Paramsana rent, recovery of—Paramsana rent, what is—Suit for recovery whether lies in Revenue Court—Revenue Court—Exclusive jurisdiction—Decision, whether assailable in Civil Court—Hindu Law—Joint family—Manager, whether sufficient party in proceeding against family.

Where land held by a tenant is mortgaged to him by the proprietor in consideration of a sum of money, it is not unusual for the tenant to appropriate a portion of the rent, for which he was originally liable, towards interest due on his loan and to pay the balance to the mortgagor. Biswi is the name usually given in Eastern Oudh to such mortgages of land in sub-tenure. The sum representing the difference between the full rent and the interest of the money advanced, which is still payable to the mortgagor landlord, is called paramsana. [p. 810, col. 1.]

The extinction of the right of redemption of a mortgage of this kind does not destroy the right of the mortgagor or of his successor to claim the paramsana as rent, because the paramsana does not fall within the rights to which the mortgagee is entitled. It is payable to the mortgagor irrespective of the mortgage on account of the extra profits which the mortgagee derives from the occupation of the mortgaged property. A decree for arrears of this paramsana can be executed against the mortgagee-tenant even after the landlord has lost the right to redeem the mortgage itself. [p. 810, col. 2.]

A suit for arrears of paramsana rent lies in a Court of Revenue under section 108, clause (2) of the Oudh Rent Act in the same way as a suit for arrears of rent of any other kind payable in respect of a cultivatory holding. [p. 811, col. 1.]

A suit for a declaration that the decree of a Revenue Court in a matter in which that Court had exclusive jurisdiction is void and ineffectual is not maintainable in the Civil Court on the bare ground that the proceedings in that Court were contrary to law. [p. 811, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated the 8th July 1921, modifying a decree of the Munsif, Sultanpur, dated the 14th September 1920.

Mr. Niamat Ullah, for the Appellant,

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs for possession of certain plots of land with mesne profits. Their allegation was that the said plots were held by them and Adnath, the brother of the plaintiff No. 1, and the father of plaintiffs Nos. 3, 4 and 5, as mortgagees, that the time for the redemption of the mortgage had expired and that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, who are the proprietors of the village in which the disputed plots are situated, wrongfully obtained a decree for arrears of rent against them and in execution thereof brought the mortgagee rights of the plaintiffs and of defendant No. 4 therein to sale. There was a further allegation that the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 were minors and were represented in that suit by their brother Adnath, who had not been formally appointed their guardian ad litem, that Adnath had been guilty of gross negligence in taking no steps to protect the rights of his minor brothers and that the decree aforesaid and the sale held in execution thereof, in respect of the mortgagee rights, were without jurisdiction and not binding on the plaintiffs. The auction-purchaser is the defendant No. 3 who is alleged to have ejected the plaintiffs from the disputed plots in February 1919.

The suit was resisted on various grounds. The Courts below found in favour of the plaintiffs and decreed the claim for possession of a 11-12hs share in the plots in suit and for Rs. 150 damages. The Court of first instance had passed a decree for damages as against the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 but the lower Appellate Court exempted the defendant No. 3 from liability.

The plots in dispute were originally in the cultivation of Chaudhari, the great-grand-father of the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2, and of Adnath, the father of the plaintiffs Nos. 3, 4 and 5. At some time, long before the annexation of Oudh, they had been mortgaged by the then proprietor of the village in which they are situated, with the predeceasing-in-title of Chaudhari for a sum of Rs. 50-4-0. At the time of the first Regular Settlement, which took place in 1274 Fasli, Chaudhari was entered as holding the said plots on a rental of Rs. 23 per year (Exhibit B4). In 1879 Umresh Singh, the then proprietor of the village, issued a notice of ejectment against Chaudhari who contested its validity on the ground that he was a mortgagee. He said at the time that he held four mortgage-deeds for an aggregate sum of Rs. 50-4-0 in his possession, ranging from the years 1804 to 1816 Sambat, that he was in possession of 10 bighas 8 biswas of land rented at Rs. 23-12-0 in that capacity, that he had constructed six wells thereon at a cost of Rs. 850 and that he was not liable to ejectment (Exhibit 1). His claim was decreed on the 7th August 1879 and the notice of ejectment was cancelled (Exhibit 4). The name of Chaudhari, however, still continued to be recorded as a tenant of the disputed plots. In fact, in the year 1299 Fasli he was recorded as holding 10 bighas 8 biswas 10 biswasais of culturable, and 13 biswas of non-culturable land, rented at Rs. 18-6-0, out of which a portion had been paid by him in that very year (Exhibits B5 and B6).

In 1293 when the new Settlement operations were in progress Chaudhari made an application, stating that he was an old Biswadar in respect of 11 bighas 9 biswas of land rented at Rs. 17-9-3 and that he might be recorded as the holder of that Biswadi in the Settlement papers (Exhibit 5).

Gauri Shankar, the general agent of Ugrasen Singh, the proprietor of the village, appeared and stated that the said land, measuring 11 bighas 9 biswas and rented at Rs. 17-9-3, had been mortgaged by the previous proprietor with the then applicant who was in possession and that he had no objection to his name being entered as a mortgagee (Exhibit B1). Chaudhari made a similar statement, admitting that 11 bighas 9 biswas of land aforesaid, rented at Rs. 17-9-3, was biswadi land in his possession from a long time and that he might be entered as a mortgagee (Exhibit B2). An order was passed accordingly on the 19th October 1893, directing an entry of the mortgage to be made, as desired by the parties (Exhibit B3). Ugrasen Singh was, therefore, recorded as the mortgagor and Chaudhari as the mortgagee (Exhibit 9).

After the death of Chaudhari an application was made by Behari Pande and Chandrika, who had succeeded to the rights of Ugrasen Singh, for the correction of the entry in the revenue papers, stating that Adnath was only an ordinary tenant of the disputed land and that he was improperly recorded as a mortgagee. This application was rejected on the 10th August 1914 (Exhibit 16). A suit was then filed by Behari Pande and Chandrika for a declaration that the present plaintiffs and the defendant No. 4 did not hold any mortgage rights in the disputed land. That suit was dismissed and it was held that though the original deeds of mortgage were not forthcoming and the terms thereof had not been proved the then defendants had acquired right to hold the plots in question as mortgagees by reason of their adverse possession of such limited interest since 1879 (Exhibits 10 to 15).

A suit for arrears of rent was thereafter filed by Behari and Chandrika against the present plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 and Adnath, their brother, for the recovery of arrears of rent for 1322 to 1324 Fasli which was decreed ex parte by the Revenue Court. In that suit the present plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 were described as minors under the guardianship of their brother, Adnath, but no formal application was made for the appointment of Adnath as their guardian ad litem. In the plaint it was stated that the present plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 and the defendant No. 4 held the disputed land as mortgagees and were liable to pay the rent claimed. No defence was put forward on their behalf. The Courts below have treated that decree as invalid and without jurisdiction, holding that the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 were not duly represented by a guardian ad litem appointed in the manner required by law, and there was gross negligence on the part of Adnath to protect the rights of his minor brothers. It is said that the suit should have been defended by Adnath on behalf of the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 on the ground that the mortgages had lapsed by reason of limitation and that the said plaintiffs could not have been made liable for any rent in view of the decision of the Civil Court in the previous suit.

Where land held by a tenant is mortgaged by the proprietor with the tenant in consideration of money paid by the latter, it is not unusual for the tenant to appropriate a portion of the rent, for which he was originally liable, towards interest due on his loan and to pay the balance to the mortgagor. Biswi is the name usually given in Eastern Oudh to mortgages of land in sub tenure. The old Settlement report of the Fyzabad District states that, "when a whole village or an entire share was mortgaged under the native rule it was usual for the mortgagee to obtain both possession of the land and engagement with the Government. Occasionally, however, the mortgagee obtained possession only without direct engagement, and in such cases, after deducting his interest from the assumed rental, he paid the estimated difference in the shape of a quit rent to the mortgagor under the name of paramsana. The tenure, so formed, was called biswi and the holder a biswidar. In the case of land less in extent than an entire share of a village, such holding under the Native Government always remained attached to the parent village. The gross rental of the mortgaged lands was estimated at the time of the transaction. The interest of the loan was then deducted from the amount so formed and the difference, called paramsana, was the quit rent to be paid by the mortgagee to the mortgagor." Lieutenant Colonel MacAndrew similarly describes biswi as a mortgage by a proprietor to a cultivator of the latter's holding for a sum of money paid down, reserving a low rent representing the difference between the full rent and the interest on the money, generally known as paramsana (MacAndrew's Some Revenue Matters, page 39). Sykes discusses the same and describes biswi as a kind of under-proprietary tenure arising out of a special class of mortgage by the proprietor to a cultivator of the latter's holding for a sum of money paid down, for which a low rent, called paramsana, is generally reserved to the mortgagor (Chhail Bihari Lal's Taluqdari Law of Oudh, Second Edition, page 210).

It is unnecessary to consider whether on the expiry of the period of limitation for the redemption of such a mortgage, the biswi right becomes an under-proprietary right. It is sufficient for the purposes of this case to say that the extinction of the right of redemption of a mortgage of that kind does not destroy the right of the mortgagor or his successor to claim the paramsana as rent, because the paramsana does not fall within the rights to which the mortgagee is entitled. It is payable to the mortgagor irrespective of the mortgage on account of the extra profits which the mortgagee derives from the occupation of the mortgaged property. If the mortgage becomes irredeemable, the mortgagee still continues to be liable for the paramsana or quit rent, payable to the mortgagor on account of surplus rent of the land in his possession. The decision in the previous suit upheld the right of the descendants of Chaudhari to hold the disputed land as mortgagees so long as the mortgages were not redeemed. If the mortgages have become irredeemable, a matter on which no opinion need be expressed here, their liability to pay the paramsana rent to the present proprietors of the village, to whom the rights of the original mortgagor have passed, remains unaffected. In the suit filed by Chaudhari to contest the notice of ejectment the land in dispute was described as biswi land and it was not asserted that no rent was payable to the mortgagor. In fact a rent of Rs. 23-12-0 was actually mentioned as assessed on the land from which the ejectment was sought to be made. In the proceedings which took place in 1893 Chaudhari made a statement admitting that he held 11 bighas 9 biswas of land rented at Rs. 17-9-3.

It is suggested on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents that the rent then mentioned was the rent which Chaudhari was entitled to recover from his tenants but it does not appear from the revenue papers that the land had been let out by Chaudhari or his descendants to other persons. A rental of Rs. 17-9-3 in respect of an area of 11 bighas 9 biyas of land can only be explained on the hypothesis that the land was held under a mortgage and that the rent aforesaid was only the paramsana or quit-rent which the mortgagee was liable to pay to the mortgagor after appropriating the interest due on his mortgage money. A suit for arrears of paramsana rent would lie in a Court of Revenue under section 102, clause (2), of the Oudh Rent Act (XXI of 1886) in the same way as a suit for arrears of rent of any other kind payable in respect of a cultivatory holding. The plaintiffs might have acquired the rights of the mortgagor qua the rights mortgaged on the expiry of the period of limitation prescribed for the redemption of the mortgages, but qua the extra rent payable to the mortgagor or his successors in interest the liability of the mortgagee to pay the same can still be enforced whether the mortgage has expired or not.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-respondents refers to the decision in the previous suit in which it was held that no such rent had actually been received by Behari and Chandrika and contends that the question of tenancy cannot now be re-opened. But the only question directly and substantially in issue in the previous suit was whether the present plaintiffs and Adnath held the disputed land as mortgagees or not. Any incidental decision arrived at in that case, upholding their right to remain in possession of the said land as mortgagees, does not affect the right of the successors of the mortgagor to claim the rent, which was payable to the mortgagor in excess of the mortgage. The suit for arrears of rent was filed in a Court which had exclusive jurisdiction to entertain it. There was no formal order appointing Adnath as guardian ad litem of the plaintiffs. Nos. 1 and 2 but Adnath was the manager of the joint family of which the plaintiffs were parties, and as such he sufficiently represented the members of the family who cannot escape their liability for the decree passed in that suit on the bare ground that no formal order of appointment of Adnath as their guardian ad litem had been made. In Sheo Shankar Ram v. Jaddo Kunwar (1) it was held that where the members of a joint Hindu family were properly and effectively represented in a suit by the managing members the Court was not bound to set aside the execution proceedings, where substantial justice had been done, merely because every existing member of the family was not formally made a party to the suit. In Rai Krishen Chand v. Mahadeo Singh (2) and Uman Shanker v. Bhagwan Din (3) it was held that a suit for a declaration that the decree of the Revenue Court in a matter in which that Court had exclusive jurisdiction was void and ineffectual was not maintainable in the Civil Court on the bare ground that the proceedings in that Court were contrary to law.

In view of the facts stated above, there was indeed no defence open to Adnath, which he could have effectively put up on behalf of the minors, and no grounds for attributing gross negligence to him have been made out. The Courts below thought that Chaudhari held a mortgage of the entire interest of the mortgagor in the disputed plots, but that was not really so, because the subsequent conduct and admissions disclosed by the proceedings of 1879 and 1893 read with the jamabandi for 1299 Fasli show that a paramsana or quit-rent had been reserved to the mortgagor, which his successors were entitled to recover. The sale held in execution of the decree for arrears of rent, so far as it affected the mortgagee rights sold for Rs. 100 on the 20th December 1918 (Exhibit B13) was not invalid and is binding on the plaintiffs. Any antecedent rights, proprietary or under-proprietary, possessed by them will not be affected by it.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the suit of the plaintiffs, so far it affects the mortgagee rights sold by auction and purchased by the defendant-appellant, will be dismissed with costs, throughout.

Lala Jagan Nath, for the Appellant.

Dr. Gokal Chand Narang, for the Plaintiffs Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The house in dispute belonged to the plaintiff, the first defendant Jumma Ram, and their uncle Tabla Ram, who were members of a joint Hindu family. Tabla Ram died in 1915 leaving a Will, which he had made in 1913, bequeathing all his property to the plaintiff, who accordingly was for possession of two-thirds of the house. Jumma Ram maintains that the plaintiff is entitled only to half of the house disputing the competency of Tabla Ram to make the Will. The Subordinate Judge held that as no partition had taken place, Tabla Ram was not competent to make the Will, and he gave the plaintiff a decree for half of the house. On appeal the District Judge has passed a decree for two-thirds of the house, holding that a document D-1, executed by the parties and Tabla Ram on the 14th June 1914, in which it was stated that they had equal shares in the house, and that one Tara Chand was appointed to partition the house according to their shares, showed that from that date the joint Hindu family ceased to exist, and that, therefore, Tabla Ram had power to devise his share to the plaintiff. Jumma Ram has preferred a second appeal to this Court.

The learned District Judge appears to have overlooked the fact that the Will executed by Tabla Ram is of an earlier date than Exhibit D-1, and was not, therefore, rendered valid by the fact that the shares of the members of the family were specified in the later document. Nevertheless, there is the fact that the shares are specified also in the Will, the testator's share being mentioned therein as one-third, and we think that this would suffice to constitute a separation in law, an unequivocal declaration by a member of the co-parcenary body of his intention to be divided in status being sufficient to effect a severance without an agreement between all the co-parceners being required. Among the authorities on this point there are Sikhamani Pandithar v. Ammani Ammal (1), Girja Bai v. Sadashiv Dhundiraj (2), Suraj Narain v. Iqbal Narain (3), Amritrao v. Mukundrao (4), Vanjapuri Goundan v. Pachamuthu Goundan (5), and Sashi Bhusan Panigrahi v. Labanyabati Debya (6). There having been a severance of the joint status, Tabla Ram was competent to bequeath his share in the property to the plaintiff, and we, therefore, affirm the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Letters Patent Appeal against a decree of Mr. Justice Panton, dated the 18th August 1920, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 121 of 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Bankim Chandra Mukerjee, for Babu Kalinkar Chakravarty, for the Appellants. —The plaintiffs are the appellants. The appeal arises out of a suit for rent, at the rate of Rs. 22-1-0 per year. The defence was that rent was payable at the rate of Rs. 12-2. All the Courts decreed the suit at the admitted rate. The question now is whether the tenants are entitled to dispute the rate claimed which was also settled in a proceeding under section 105, Bengal Tenancy Act. I submit that decision would operate as res judicata. Section 109, Bengal Tenancy Act, would apply. The date of the institution of that proceeding is to be taken into account and not the date of the judgment. Refers to Apurba Krishna Roy v. Syama Charan Pramanik (1).

Babu Annada Charan Karkoon, for the Respondent, was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of Mr. Justice Panton in a suit for recovery of arrears of rent.

The plaintiff claimed rent at the rate of Rs. 22-1 per year in respect of four years from the 14th April 1913 to the 13th April 1917. The defendants pleaded that rent was payable at the rate of Rs. 12-2 per annum. The suit was instituted on the 21st April 1917 and was decided by the First Court on the 16th April 1918. The claim of the plaintiffs was founded upon a kabuliyat executed by the predecessors of the defendants on the 19th April 1894. The rent payable thereunder was that claimed in the suit. The defendants contended that the kabuliyat was in contravention of section 29 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Trial Court held that the defendants had successfully proved by the production of Road-Cess Return filed by the landlords on the 26th May 1885 that the rent was originally fixed at the rate of Rs. 12-2. Consequently, there was, prima facie, an increase of Rs. 9-15 by means of the contract of the 19th April 1894. This was plainly in contravention of section 29. In these circumstances, from the decision of this Court in the case of Manindra Chandra Nandi v. Upendra Chandra Hazra (2), it followed that as the previous rent of the tenant had been proved, it was for the plaintiffs to justify the enhancement of the rent claimed which was obviously in excess of the enhancement allowed by the Statute. The plaintiffs tried to discharge this burden by the allegation that at the time of the execution of the kabuliyat it was discovered that the defendants were in occupation of excess lands. But this was not established to the satisfaction of the Trial Judge who consequently held that the rent as fixed in the kabuliyat was not recoverable. The plaintiffs, however, contended that they were entitled to the benefit of a decision under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act which had been pronounced on the 19th September 1917 subsequent to the institution of this suit for arrears of rent and before the trial thereof. This contention was overruled and the rent was decreed at the rate admitted by the defendants. On appeal to the Subordinate Judge the decision of the Primary Court was affirmed and Mr. Justice Panton has confirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge.

In this Court the substantial contention on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant is that, by virtue of section 109, it is not open to the tenants to contend, contrary to the decision in the proceeding under section 105, that the rent was payable, not at the rate of Rs. 22-1 but at the rate of Rs. 12-2. In support of this proposition reliance has been placed upon the decision of this Court in the case of Apurba Krishna Roy v. Syama Oharan Pramanik (1). We are of opinion that this contention cannot be supported, however much the plain language of section 109 may be strained.

Section 109 is in the following terms: "Subject to the provisions of section 109A, a Civil Court shall not entertain any application or suit concerning any matter which is or has already been the subject of an application made, suit instituted or proceedings taken under sections 105 to 108 both inclusive." Let it be assumed for the moment that the expression "entertain an application or suit" includes an application or suit made or instituted before the date of the application, suit or proceeding under sections 105 to 108. It is clear that what is barred is the entertainment of an application or suit and not the entertainment of a defence to an application or suit. In the case before us, if the contention of the appellants were to prevail, the Court would be incompetent to entertain their suit for rent, and this undoubtedly is not their object in invoking the aid of section 109. The decision in Apurba Krishna Roy v. Syama Oharan Pramanik (1) is of no assistance to them. It was there ruled that section 109 was a bar to a civil suit by a person claiming a rent-free title when in a proceeding under section 105 the same question arose and rent was assessed on account of the failure of the defendant in the proceeding under section 105 to adduce evidence in support of his allegation of the rent-free title. In that case, the suit which was held to be barred under section 109 had been instituted by the tenant who had failed to adduce evidence in support of his defence in the proceedings for settlement of fair rent under section 105. In the present case the suit has been instituted by the landlord. It is clear that the fair rent which had been settled in the proceeding under section 105 cannot possibly have retrospective effect. The rent was claimed from the 14th April 1913 to the 13th April 1917. The proceeding for the assessment of fair rent was instituted under section 105 in 1914 and the decision thereunder was pronounced on the 19th September 1917. Under section 110 the rent settled by the Revenue Officer would take effect from the beginning of the agricultural year next after the date of the decision fixing the rent, that is next after the 19th September 1917. This could not alter the liability for rent already incurred in respect of the period between the 14th April 1913 and the 13th April 1917. We are clearly of opinion that the view taken by Mr. Justice Panton is correct and his judgment must be affirmed.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Mr. Niamat Ullah, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ali Mohammad, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—Bihari, Gajadhar and Ram Asre were three brothers constituting a Hindu joint family. In 1904 Bihari was of age while the other two were minors. On 24th May 1904 a sale-deed of the shares of all three brothers was executed in favour of Bhagwan Dat, father of the defendant-appellant Mahesh Dat. The sale-deed was executed by Bihari on his own behalf and by Musammatt Sukhdei as mother and guardian of the two younger brothers. The plaintiff Ram Asre has now attained majority but is deaf and dumb. It is said that he became deaf and dumb owing to an illness about ten years before this suit. The present suit was filed on his behalf by his uncle Data Ram, as his next friend, to recover the property on the ground that the sale was invalid and without legal necessity and that his mother was not entitled to execute the sale-deed on his behalf. The suit has been decreed by both the Courts below subject to payment of Rs. 62 which has been found to be for legal necessity.

The defendant appeals on the ground that, on the findings of the Court below, the suit should only have been decreed for recovery of the plaintiff's one-third share in the property subject to payment of one-third of the amount found to be for legal necessity. Other grounds of appeal are not pressed.

It is pointed out that if the suit had been brought on behalf of all the members of the joint family equities would have arisen, at any rate, against Bihari, which do not arise against the plaintiff. Bihari, having executed the sale-deed in respect of his own share at a time when he was under no disability, could not have recovered the share without, at any rate, refunding the benefit which he had received under the sale-deed. Jamuna Parshad v. Ganga Pershad Singh (1). In this case if the other two brothers had attempted to join in the suit, limitation would have been successfully pleaded against them—in the case of Bihari because the alienation was made nearly sixteen years before the suit and in the case of Gajadhar because he attained majority more than three years before the suit was brought. The defendant cannot be placed in a worse position owing to the fact that against two out of three members of the family a claim to recover the property has become time-barred.

The case of Babu Bhan Partab Sahi v. Babu Sudisht Narain Singh (2) is a direct authority in the appellant's favour. In that case it was held that while the manager of a Hindu joint family can sue to recover the entire property on behalf of the family individual members cannot claim to do so but can only maintain the suit in respect of their own shares. That case is on all fours with the case now before me. If the sale-deed in question had been executed by either of the defendants as manager of the family it is now fully established that it would not bind any part of the family property and could not be enforced even against his own share. Here, although Bihari was at the time the only adult member of the family, he did not purport to execute the sale-deed as manager. The sale deed purported to be executed on behalf of all the members of the joint family, the two younger brothers being represented by their mother. The rulings applicable to sales by the karta of the family as such are, therefore, not applicable. As the present suit has been brought on behalf of Ram Asre alone and a claim by the other brothers to recover has become barred by time I see no reason for not following the Bench ruling of this Court in Babu Bhan Partab Sahi v. Babu Sudisht Narain Singh (2).

I accordingly allow the appeal and modify the lower Court's decree by giving a decree for possession of the plaintiff's one third share only on payment of one-third of the sum of Rs. 62. As the memorandum of appeal raised other points which have not been pressed I direct that the parties bear their own costs in this Court. In the Courts below the plaintiffs will get their costs on the amount awarded to them.

Agricultural land in Municipality, sale of—Non-

Although a non-agriculturist may buy land from a member of an agricultural tribe without restriction in a Municipality, he cannot pre-empt a sale of such land.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 27th March 1920, reversing that of the Sub-Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 23rd December 1919.

Messrs. M. L. Puri and Mr. Bishen Narain, for the Appellant.

Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., for Sundar Das, Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This judgment deals with Civil Second Appeals Nos. 1559 and 2270 of 1920. They arise out of a sale of agricultural land, within the limits of Rawalpindi Municipality, by one Nathu Khan to a non-agriculturist. Four suits for pre-emption were brought regarding this sale and all four were dismissed on appeal by the District Judge. The present appeals are by two of the pre-emptors, and they are on common grounds, both of which have been argued only by Mr. M. L. Puri, Counsel for the appellant in Appeal No. 1559, Mr. Bishen Narain not arguing his case separately.

Only two points have been discussed. In ground No. 3 of Appeal No. 1559 it is urged, that the lower Courts are wrong in holding that "Trunds," (the tribe to which Nathu Khan belongs) are Rajputs. This ground of appeal obviously recognizes the finding of the District Judge that Nathu Khan is a member of an agricultural tribe as one of fact. Counsel for the appellant has, however, attempted to argue that the finding is uncertain because Mr. Bird, the District Judge, who has a penchant for indefinite language, has remarked that "the matter is not wholly clear but Nathu Khan appears to be a 'Rajput'," but he went on later to say that "the Senior Sub-Judge appears to be justified in his finding" and there is no doubt that that is the conclusion to which the District Judge himself arrived although as usual he has clothed it in words indicative of hesitation. This finding is one of fact which cannot be touched on second appeal nor can Counsel for the appellant be allowed now to take new ground that the evidence on which the finding was based is inadmissible.

The second point is an argument that section 14 of Act I of 1913 is of no application to land sold within the Municipal limits. It is urged that, as according to Notification No. 84, dated 14th May 1902, passed under the Alienation of Land Act, a non-agriculturist may buy land from a member of an agricultural tribe without restriction in a Municipality, it is anomalous that a non-agriculturist should be unable to pre-empt such land and that section 14 of the Pre-emption Act must be taken to be governed by the aforesaid notification. Counsel for the appellant is, however, unable to cite any authority for this proposition, and it is not for the Courts to go into the objects of the Legislature. They are concerned only with what the law says and section 14 of the Pre-emption Act is quite clear.

Both the appeals fail and are dismissed with costs.

Kanwar Dalip Singh, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Carden Nood, Additional Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—A petition for revision has been filed on behalf of three men, Waryam Singh, Ram Singh and Gurnam Singh, praying that a sanction for their prosecution under section 193, Indian Penal Code, granted by the Sessions Judge of Jullundur may be revoked as having been made without jurisdiction. The circumstances of this case are somewhat peculiar and may be explained at some length. Bhagwan Singh was accused for having caused the death of his brother Mihan Singh in a fight that followed an altercation between them by hitting him on the head and leg with a heavy axe taken out of a wheel. Owing to near relationship between the parties, the village people first tried to hush up the matter and the dead body was specially cremated without any report being made to the Police. A few days later, however, the Police got information and investigated the case. They were told that the three petitioners were eye witnesses of the occurrence. They took the witnesses as well as Bhagwan Singh to an Honorary Magistrate, Second Class, to have their statements recorded, so that, on account of the strong tendency in the village to hush up the matter, the witnesses may not deny in Court the facts they were ready to admit before the Police. These statements were recorded on 31st May 1919 before the Second Class Magistrate, where each of the three witnesses stated that he had seen Bhagwan Singh striking the deceased with the axe. Bhagwan Singh was then challanged and placed before a First Class Magistrate, who recorded statements on the spot, on 24th June 1919, when the said three witnesses went back on the statements recorded under section 164, Criminal Procedure Code, and stated that they had seen the two brothers grappling with one another and catching one another by the hair but no blow with any sort of weapon had been struck in their presence. The prosecution thus failed and Bhagwan Singh was discharged for want of proof. The Court Inspector then applied to the Magistrate, First Class, that as each of the petitioners had told a deliberate lie in his Court, sanction to prosecute each one of them should be granted. Without passing any order on the merits the Magistrate ordered on 23rd April 1920 that separate applications for sanction against each witness should be filed. The Police, instead of complying with this order, decided to apply for sanction to the Sessions Judge, as they proposed to charge the men in the alternative for having perjured themselves either before the Second Class Magistrate or the First Class Magistrate. Applications on that basis were made to the Sessions Judge by the Public Prosecutor. It was urged before him that he could not grant a sanction with regard to an offence, if any, committed before the Second Class Magistrate, as the latter was subordinate to the District Magistrate. While recognising the validity of this objection, he took the view that as a Second Class Magistrate was subject to his control as a Court of Revision, he might grant the sanction as the witnesses had undoubtedly perjured themselves on one occasion or the other. He, therefore, granted the sanction asked for by his order dated 9th August 1920.

EMPEROR V. AMIRUDDIN SALEBHOY.

It is contended in revision by Kanwar Dalip Singh, on behalf of the petitioners, that this order was without jurisdiction. Reference is made to Sobha Singh v. Lal Chand (1) for the dictum that, where the accused made contradictory statements in the Courts of a First Class Magistrate and of an Honorary Magistrate, the Court competent to grant sanction under such circumstances is the Court to which both the said Courts are subordinate, and it is argued that the two Courts in the present case were not subordinate to the Sessions Judge. A recent ruling of this High Court, Dina Nath v. Muhammad Abdulla (2), is referred to, in which it has been held by a Division Bench that, for granting sanction to prosecute, a Munsif's Court is subordinate to the Court of a Subordinate Judge, First Class, and an application for sanction has to be made to the Subordinate Judge and not to the District Judge. Following the principle laid down in Dina Nath v. Muhammad Abdulla (2), it must be held that the Sessions Judge could not grant sanction so as to cover an offense committed in either of the two Courts, as one of them was subordinate to the District Magistrate and the other to himself.

I have heard the learned Government Advocate on the point. He admits that the Sessions Judge was probably not the proper authority to give the requisite sanction in the present case but invites attention to the seriousness of the perjury committed by the petitioners in an important criminal case which renders some action necessary against them. Mr. Dalip Singh, in this connection, points out the possibility of these men not having been real eye-witnesses and of there having given false evidence in their statements under section 164, Criminal Procedure Code and relies on Emperor v. Sailendra Kumar Das [Tripura Shankar] (3) where sanction was refused on the ground that a man who first told a lie and in a subsequent contradictory statement told the truth, sanction should not be granted for his prosecution for perjury. In this case, however, it is difficult to say on facts that these men made false statements before the Honorary Magistrate, in the face of distinct indications to the contrary. The Government Advocate points out that subsequent statements before the Magistrate, First Class, are presumably false. Under these circumstances, all that I can do is to cancel the sanction granted by the Sessions Judge as not granted according to law, leaving it open to the Public Prosecutor to obtain a proper sanction, if so advised.

CRIMINAL APPEAL No. 855 OF 1921.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 116, 161,

The accused called on C., a Municipal Commissioner, to express acknowledgments for the withdrawal of objections against a building which a cousin of his wished to erect. In the course of the conversation the accused enquired if he should put in a tender for some cement about which the Municipality had advertised, remarking that it was no good putting in a tender unless one had influence. After this the accused said to C. "when shall I see you again." C. replied that there was no need. The accused again said, "shall I see you here or elsewhere?" C. said, "what about?" Accused said, "about that Rs 5,000." C. enquired, "what Rs 5,000?" Accused replied, "my cousin wishes to give you Rs. 5,000." C. became suspicious and called a colleague K. who was in the adjoining room and told him that the accused had offered him a bribe. The accused in the presence of the colleague admitted that he offered the money on behalf of his cousin. When asked to leave the office, the accused was profuse in his apologies and reluctantly withdrew. The accused was charged under section 116, Indian Penal Code, for the abetment of an offence under section 161. He stated in his defence that the sum offered was for certain charities in which C. was interested, and that C. did not allow him to make himself clear. As a matter of fact C. was interested in certain charities and had requested many gentlemen to subscribe to them. The accused was acquitted at the trial. The Government appealed:

Held, per Shah, J. (1) that the appeal failed and the accused was rightly acquitted as the conversation did not amount to an offer, nor did it amount to an instigation within the meaning of section 107 of the Indian Penal Code; [p. 823, col. 2.]

(2) that even assuming that the words amounted to an instigation within the meaning of section 107 of the Indian Penal Code the question was whether it was for doing anything which, if done, would be punishable under section 161, Indian Penal Code, but the sum which the cousin was to pay could have reference only to the objections against the building already withdrawn and could not refer to any future act such as the tender with which the cousin had no connection; [p. 824, cols. 1 & 2.]

(3) that although the explanation of the accused that the sum was meant for charities in which C. was interested was undoubtedly open to criticism, as the inference suggested by what happened at the interview was equivocal and the explanation put forward by the accused was reasonably possible, the theory of innocence could not be said to have been sufficiently negated by the prosecution; [p. 825, col. 2.]

(4) that no inference could be drawn against the accused from his omission to mention that the sum was meant for charities when C. called in K. and told him that he had been offered a bribe as in such a position some persons may act with coolness while others may not be able to do so [p. 825, col. 2.]

Per Macleod, C. J.—That the words "my cousin wishes to give you Rs. 5,000," did not legally amount to an offer, but they indicated a state of mind on the part of the cousin that, if asked, he might give the sum, that the words were an instigation stimulating C. towards making an attempt to get the amount and that even if it was assumed that the accused was instigating C. to get the sum for one of his funds, that would amount to no more than a mitigation of the offence since under section 161 gratification was not restricted to pecuniary gratification or to gratification estimable in money. [p. 821, col. 2; p. 822, col. 1.]

The distinction between offer and invitation to offer is well-recognised in the law of contract and there is no reason why the same should not be observed in a criminal case if the sole question is whether an offer has been made or not. [p. 821, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The accused was charged before the Acting Chief Presidency Magistrate that he on or about the 14th day of October 1921 at Bombay abetted the commission by H. B. Clayton, Esquire, Municipal Commissioner of Bombay, a public servant, of an offence of taking gratification, as the said public servant, other than legal remuneration, as a motive for doing a future official act, viz., giving contracts, punishable with imprisonment under section 161 of the Indian Penal Code, which said offence was not committed in consequence of the said abetment and thereby committed an offence punishable under sections 116 and 161 of the Indian Penal Code.

The accused was acquitted and Government have appealed.

The facts are shortly as follows:—A cousin of the accused, one Ebrahim Mahomedally, had submitted plans to the Municipality for a building on the Queen's Road, to which objections were raised. On the 21st September, accused called on Mr. Clayton and handed him a memorandum in respect of the objections. The Commissioner sent the memo. to the Executive Engineer for report and on his report the objections were eventually withdrawn. On the 21st September, the accused had spoken to the Commissioner about a tender he had made for the supply of sleepers in reply to an advertisement of the Municipality, and asked the Commissioner whether the result of the tenders was known. As a matter of fact, a tender was sent by the accused's firm over his signature on the 22nd September. On the 8th October, a notice was sent to Ebrahim that the objections B and C to the construction of his building had been waived by the Commissioner and he was asked to inform the accused of that fact. On the 12th October, the accused wrote to the Commissioner thanking him for waiving the objections and asking him to dine at the Willingdon Sports Club on any day that might suit him. On the 14th October, before the reply which was endorsed on the letter of invitation could be sent, the accused came to see the Commissioner. I give the Commissioner's account of the conversation which then took place:—

"The accused thanked me for the concession I had made in respect of his cousin's building. He then referred to the tender he had put in for the sleepers. I told him that the contract was not disposed of and that I had not seen the papers. He then said: 'I think that the Municipality is asking for tender for 5,000 tons cement' or words to that effect. He asked me whether it was any good to put in a tender for the same. I told him that I would be glad if he would put in a tender because I wanted to have as many tenders as possible and he remarked that it was no good putting in a tender unless he had influence. I remember the word 'influence,' but I am not certain whether he said 'unless one had influence' or 'unless I had influence.' I told him that the tenderer who put in a tender for cement as per British specification and at the cheapest price would probably get the contract. I expected the accused to leave me at this stage and I asked whether he had anything else to say and the accused said: 'when shall I see you again.' I told him there was no necessity for him to see me again. He said, 'shall I see you here or elsewhere.' I said, 'what about.' He said, 'about that Rs. 5,000.' I said, 'what Rs. 5,000.' He replied, 'my cousin wishes to give you Rs. 5,000.' I began to get suspicious about the accused's intention since he had mentioned the word 'influence.'"

The Commissioner then called in Mr. Kirpalani who was sitting in a screened off portion in the same room and said:—

"This gentleman has just offered me a bribe of Rs. 5,000'...The accused in the presence of Mr. Kirpalani admitted that he had offered me a sum of money on behalf not of himself but of his cousin. I then requested the accused to leave my office at once and never to come back again. The accused was very reluctant to do so. He was profuse in his apologies."

In this statement to the Court the accused was asked:—

Q. Did you in your conversation with Mr. Clayton mention Rs. 5,000?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you offer that sum as a bribe?

A. No.

Q. Do you wish to say in what connection you made mention of that sum?

A. That offer was made on behalf of my cousin towards one of the funds.

Q. Do you wish to say to what funds?

A. I do not know to what funds the Commissioner was interested, but I thought the suggestion would come from the side of the Commissioner.

In the written statement, which was put in, the accused said that his cousin saw him and expressed his gratification at the result of the appeal to the Commissioner. Accused understood from him that he was contributing through Mr. Clayton a sum of Rs. 5,000 or so to some fund in which Mr. Clayton might be interested.

Paragraph 7 runs as follows:—

"I do not remember the exact words in which I replied (to the question 'what about') but I intended to convey to him that it was about that sum of Rs. 5,000 which my cousin was contributing through him to some fund and about which I believed that my cousin had spoken to or arranged with Mr. Clayton."

Nows, to bribe or to attempt to bribe a public servant is only punishable under the Indian Penal Code as an abetment of the substantive offence of a public servant accepting or attempting to obtain an illegal gratification.

Under section 161 of the Indian Penal Code "whoever, being...a public servant, accepts or obtains, or agrees to accept or attempts to obtain, from any person, for himself or for any other person, any gratification whatever, other than legal remuneration, as a motive or reward for doing, or forbearing to do, any official act, etc., etc., shall be punished with imprisonment...or with fine, or with both." Section 116 deals with the abetment of an offence punishable with imprisonment if that offence be not committed in consequence of that abetment.

Under section 107 a person abets the doing of a thing who instigates any person to do that thing.

The question, therefore, in this case is whether the accused instigated the Commissioner to attempt to obtain an illegal gratification.

It was argued by the Advocate-General that what the accused said amounted to an offer of money as a bribe.

The learned Magistrate also in his judgment appeared to think that the only question was whether an offer was made, or whether the accused was merely making preparation to make the offer.

I think the real aspect of the case has been obscured by the failure to observe that illustration (a) to section 116 is only an example of abetment of an offence under section 161. There are many other ways of instigating a public servant to commit an offence under section 161 besides by means of a direct offer of a bribe.

The words "my cousin wishes to give you rupees five thousand" do not legally amount to an offer. But they do indicate a state of mind on the part of the cousin that, if asked, he might give Rs. 5,000. The distinction between an offer and an invitation for offers to be made is well-recognised in the law of contract, and there is no reason why in a criminal case the same distinction should not be observed, if the sole question is whether an offer has been made or not.

Now, a person is said to instigate another to an act when he actively suggests or stimulates him to the act by any means or language, direct or indirect, whether it takes the form of express solicitation or of hints, insinuation or encouragement: 1 Russell on Crimes, page 164. Taken in connection with what had previously occurred, the conversation on the 21st September about the tenders for the sleepers, the tender actually made by the accused on 22nd September, the conversation with regard to the tender for cement on 14th October, it cannot be denied that the words 'my cousin wishes to give you Rs. 5,000,' can perfectly fairly be considered as an instigation to the Commissioner to attempt to get the Rs. 5,000.

But the defence is that the Commissioner did not allow the accused to finish the sentence, he wanted to add the words "for one of your funds." That when Mr. Kirpalani was called in and told by the Commissioner that accused had offered a bribe, accused was pushed out of the office and was given no chance of explaining what he meant or of clearing up the misunderstanding which arose in the mind of the Commissioner, because the accused wrongly assumed that his cousin must have spoken to the Commissioner about the sum the accused thought his cousin was contributing.

This story is not borne out by the evidence of the Commissioner and Mr. Kirpalani. The Commissioner said he asked accused to repent his offer in the presence of Mr. Kirpalani and accused said he offered the money not on behalf of himself but on behalf of his cousin. He was reluctant to leave the office and was profuse in his apologies. He was not asked in cross examination whether he pushed the accused out of his office without giving him any chance of explaining what he had said. The Commissioner is corroborated by Mr. Kirpalani. It is clear, therefore, that the accused had sufficient opportunity to explain, if he had wished to do so, that the money his cousin was willing to give was for one of the funds in which the Commissioner was interested, and nothing would have been simpler than for him to say, if, as a matter of fact, he was under the impression that his cousin had already spoken to the Commissioner about contributing Rs. 5,000 to some fund: "I was not suggesting that my cousin should give you Rs. 5,000 but that he should contribute Rs. 5,000 to one of your funds." I have not the slightest doubt in my own mind that at that time the accused had had no talk with his cousin about any contribution to some fund, and that he was not under the impression that his cousin had mentioned the matter to the Commissioner. His cousin had succeeded in getting the objections to his building removed and unless he went into the witness-box to say that he intended as a thanks-offering to contribute Rs. 5,000 to one of the Commissioner's funds there is not the slightest reason why we should infer that he was prepared to add another Rs. 5,000 to the cost of the building without any necessity therefor.

On the evidence for the prosecution there is a clear case of instigation. The Commissioner was stimulated towards making an attempt to get Rs. 5,000, and if he succeeded the accused might hope that his tenders would be considered more favourably in competition with others.

It was open to the accused to satisfy the Court by his own statement either alone, or supported by evidence, that the view of the prosecution evidence was not the right one. In my opinion he has failed to do so. He has relied solely on his own statement which is entirely opposed to the evidence and the probabilities of the case. But even if I assume that the accused was merely instigating the Commissioner to make an attempt to get Rs. 5,000, for one of his funds, I do not see how that could do more than mitigate the offence since under section 161, gratification is not restricted to pecuniary gratification or to gratification estimable in money.

If, during the period prescribed for the making of tenders in answer to his invitation, the Commissioner was to accept or to attempt to obtain from the tenderers or their relations sums of money not for himself but for one of the funds in which he was interested, there can be no doubt he would be liable to be prosecuted under section 161, and any tenderer who paid him money or offered to pay him money in these circumstances, the obvious object being to induce the Commissioner to look favourably on his tender, would be guilty of abetment.

Mr. Inverarity contended that if offering monies for a charity amounted to offering a bribe a good many persons would be in jail, as many Indian Princes and others contributed large sums towards charities in which the Viceroy or the Governor of a Province was interested. They did so not because they cared for the charities but because they wanted to ingratiate themselves with the Viceroy or the Governor. I trust that persons of wealth take a higher view of their duties to humanity, but I am only concerned with the case before us, and I should be establishing a very dangerous precedent if I were to hold that an officer is protected if he agrees to allow his official acts to be swayed by the motive of accepting a gratification to be used not for his own personal benefit but for some public object such as charity, science or religion. The object of the abettor remains the same, to influence the public servant in his favour. In Imperatrix v. Appaji (1) Jardine, J., held that the plain words of section 161 of the Indian Penal Code excluded such a defence.

But having stated what I consider to be the law in the case, and what I consider to be the proper inferences to be drawn from the evidence, it remains to be considered whether the appeal should be allowed and the accused convicted. If I had been the Trying Magistrate I should not have taken a very serious view of the conduct of the accused considering all the circumstances of the case. If I had convicted, I should not have imposed a heavy penalty, and if it had been in my power I would have discharged the accused with a caution. Sitting to hear an appeal by Government from the order of acquittal, considering that my brother Shah is not in favour of a conviction, I am content to refrain from expressing an opinion which would necessitate another hearing. I feel quite sure that the accused must have realised by this time that at the best he acted very foolishly in using words which might be construed as an attempt to influence the Commissioner in his favour by suggesting that the Commissioner might be able to secure for himself or for some charity a monetary advantage. If he had only been wiser he should have known that nothing could be more likely to damage his case.

SHAH, J.—In this case Mr. Clayton, the Municipal Commissioner of Bombay, is the complainant. His complaint was that the accused offered him a bribe of Rs. 5,000 on the 14th October 1921 in his office, that the fact was admitted in the presence of his Deputy, Mr. Kirpalani, and that the accused was guilty of abetment of an offence under section 161, punishable under sections 161 and 116, Indian Penal Code. The complainant and his Deputy were examined as witnesses and a charge was framed against the accused to the effect that he abetted the commission of an offence by a public servant of taking gratification in that capacity other than legal remuneration as a motive for doing a future official act, viz., giving contracts, and that as the offence was not committed in consequence of the said abetment his act was punishable under section 161 and 116, Indian Penal Code. The learned Chief Presidency Magistrate came to the conclusion that the abetment was not proved as the matter had not reached the stage of offer, that there was locus penitentie, that it was not clear beyond doubt that the alleged offer to the public servant was really as a motive or reward for any official favour, and accordingly acquitted the accused.

The present appeal is preferred by the Local Government against the order of acquittal.

EMPEROR V. AMIRUDDIN SALEHROY.

It is urged on behalf of the Crown that what the accused said to the complainant at the interview amounted to an offer of Rs. 5,000 as a bribe, that whether it was an offer or not it amounted to instigating the public servant to agree to accept or to attempt to obtain a bribe or rather to do something which, if done, would amount to an offence punishable under section 161, Indian Penal Code. It is urged that in view of the proved conduct of the accused there was no locus penitentie and that the instigation, however feeble and ineffective, was complete, so as to bring the case within the scope of section 107 (a) read with section 161.

On behalf of the accused it is urged that there was no offer of the bribe, that the statement that his cousin wanted to give Rs. 5,000 had really no reference to any future official act, that, according to his then knowledge, he thought he intended to give it as a thanks offering to one of the public charitable funds in which the complainant was interested, that an innocent act of his was misinterpreted by the complainant without sufficient ground, and that owing to the somewhat unexpected and embarrassing position in which the accused found himself when Mr. Kirpalani was suddenly called in by the complainant he got confused and could not explain what he could have explained, if left to himself. The real nature of his statement, it is suggested, was misunderstood much too readily.

I may add that it is urged on behalf of the Crown that the accused has adduced no evidence in support of his statement made at the trial that his cousin intended to give the sum for the benefit of one of the funds and that he has not examined his cousin. On the other hand, it is pointed out that it was not thought necessary to do so, that, apart from the evidence of the cousin, there was no reason to distrust the explanation offered by the accused, and that his cousin can be examined even now, if his evidence is thought to be material by the Court.

There is really no dispute as to what happened in fact at the interview between the accused and the complainant. The real dispute is as to its effect and as to the intention of the accused. I do not consider it necessary to recapitulate the facts preceding the interview, which have been fully stated in the judgment of the lower Court nor do I consider it necessary to quote here the passage from the complainant's evidence as to the account of the interview. It is contained in the passage in the latter part of his examination in chief commencing from his statement that, on the 14th October, the accused called on him in his office. I adopt that in its entirety as representing what happened then. This, too, has been stated with sufficient fulness in the judgment of the Trial Court. Mr. Kirpalani's evidence supports this account of the interview so far as it took place in his presence after he was called in. Both the witnesses are agreed that the accused was not in the room for more than two minutes after Mr. Kirpalani was called in. As regards the public funds the complainant's statement is as follows:—

"I am interested in getting contributions from persons of wealth for certain funds. The fund I am particularly responsible for is the Asworth Lepar Asylum and I am the President of the Board of Management. I am interested in collecting subscriptions for a great many deserving objects. On certain occasions I have requested some of the leading men in Bombay to subscribe to a particular fund."

The evidence has been fully discussed before us, and after a careful consideration of the arguments and the evidence, I am unable to hold that the acquittal is wrong or that the accused has been shown to be guilty of having instigated the complainant to do something which, if done, would be punishable under section 161.

I shall briefly deal with the arguments in the light of the evidence.

It is urged that there was an offer of a sum of Rs. 5,000 by the accused. This position is taken up with reference to illustration (a) to section 116, Indian Penal Code. The illustration assumes the fact of an offer for an improper purpose as stated in section 161. It is in dispute here. All that the accused asked was as to when he could see the complainant again and explained that it was with reference to a sum of Rs. 5,000 which his cousin wanted to give. I do not think that the conversation amounted to an offer. I do not desire to elaborate this point as the lower Court has taken this view and as the learned Chief Justice also takes the same view.

It is urged, however, that whether it was an offer or not, it really amounted to an instigation to do a thing punishable under section 161, Indian Penal Code, and that the accused is guilty of abetment. This argument requires a closer examination. A careful perusal of the evidence as to the interview shows that the accused inquired of the complainant as to when he could be seen again in connection with "that sum of Rs. 5,000," which the cousin of the accused wanted to give him. In order to bring the case within the ambit of the Penal Code, the prosecution must show that this was an instigation, and, further, it was an instigation to a public servant to agree to accept or to attempt to obtain from the accused or his cousin for himself or for any other person a gratification other than legal remuneration as a motive or reward for doing some official act or for showing any favour in the exercise of his official functions. In my opinion, it is far from clear that this conversation was really an instigation. It is not easy to define the word: and really it must be decided with reference to the facts of each case whether the words used have the natural effect—not necessarily effect in fact—of instigating a person to do that thing. I do not think that without straining the meaning of the language used it could be said that the accused instigated the complainant to do anything. Particularly where the conversation does not amount to an offer the Court should be slow to infer a sinister purpose from words, which do not naturally bear that interpretation.

Assuming, however, that it was instigation within the meaning of section 107 (a), the question is whether it was for doing something, which, if done, would be punishable under section 161. That is really the most important question and, in my opinion, more difficult than the question whether the conversation does amount to instigation; and it may be said at once that if the sinister purpose of the accused was clear, it might induce the Court to hold that there was instigation on his part from his conduct and words, which might not otherwise bear that interpretation.

In order to appreciate this part of the case it must be remembered that the cousin of the accused was building a house on the Queen's Road; and that there were certain conditions imposed by the Municipal Authorities, which were of a restrictive nature. On a representation made on his behalf these conditions were dispensed with by the complainant after reference to, and on the recommendation of, the Executive Engineer. These conditions were of a technical nature from the Municipal point of view as stated by the Authorities, but involved restrictions of a substantial character so far as the builder was concerned. The removal of these restrictions would naturally please the builder and the accused so far as he was interceding on his behalf. At the date of the interview this concession was an accomplished fact. Further, at that time the accused had put in a tender and was likely to put in another tender for certain contracts: and he might expect official favour in respect thereof. The charge refers to a future act and not to the act already done by the complainant. Though this limitation in the charge was not realised in the course of the argument it is as well to bear it in mind in determining the intention of the accused. The words used indicate an inquiry by the accused of the complainant as to that sum of Rs. 5,000 which his cousin wanted to give. That might refer and would refer to the favour already shown to him, if it has any reference to any favour. It does not refer to the favour which the accused might expect in respect of his tenders. If the case made in the charge is to be considered, and if the future act is to be looked to, as stated in the charge, I do not think that the conversation justifies such an inference. Of course, it is possible that the accused may have the prospect of such a favour in view. But the complainant did not make any further inquiry of the accused as to the reason why the cousin of the accused wanted to give Rs. 5,000, and in the absence of any indication to connect it with the future act, I do not think that any inference against the accused could be reasonably drawn. The fact that he had expressed his opinion that without influence his (or one's) chance in respect of the tenders would not be worth considering is not sufficient, in my opinion, to alter the character of his statement. It is not suggested that his cousin had anything to do with the tenders and it is clear that his cousin was the person benefited by the restrictive conditions as to his building having been removed. On the statements made by the accused at the interview the theory that his cousin may have thought of giving Rs. 5,000 is perfectly possible, and, unless by implication or in terms that suggestion can be said to be excluded by the evidence in the case, I do not see how it could be said that the sum mentioned at the interview had any reference to any future act in respect of which the charge is framed.

There is a further difficulty in the way of the prosecution. It is not a necessary inference from the conversation between the accused and the complainant that the cousin proposed to give the sum for an improper purpose, that is, as a motive or reward for any favour having been shown to him by the complainant in the exercise of his public functions. The benefit, which he got from the removal of the restrictions on his building, was substantial, and there is nothing unlikely in his entertaining or, at any rate it is well within the range of reasonable possibility, that he may entertain a desire to please the Commissioner without meaning to offer it as a motive or reward for his official acts. If the complainant had pursued the inquiry a little further and ascertained or elicited some further facts to enable him to ascertain that it was really offered as a motive or reward for showing some official favour and not for any innocent purpose, the case would have been different. But, as he says, he began to get suspicious about the accused's intention since he had mentioned the word 'influence'. He at once called Mr. Kirpalani, and when he came in instead of allowing the accused to state what he liked, he stated to Mr. Kirpalani that the accused had offered him a bribe and asked the accused to repeat what he had stated to him already. The interview ended in a very short time. The accused was very profuse in his apologies and admitted what he had stated to the complainant before Mr. Kirpalani came in. I am unable to draw any inference against the accused from his omission to mention during that short interval that the sum was really intended by his cousin for a contribution to some fund and for an innocent purpose. The accused saw that the complainant had already put a definite interpretation upon his conduct, and in the confusion of the moment, he might omit to mention what might be true from his point of view. Some persons in such a condition may act with coolness and composure and some may not: but I do not think that in a Criminal case it could be fairly treated as giving him an opportunity of explaining his position. He was at once told to go out: and though his reluctance to move out promptly has been referred to by the learned Advocate-General as telling against him I do not think that the circumstance can be treated as having any such significance. Thus the accused had really his first opportunity at the trial to explain his position. The accused has explained in his statement that his cousin wanted to contribute to one of the funds in which the complainant was interested, and that his information about it was incomplete and that he was under the impression that his cousin had spoken to the complainant about it. In short his defence is that his statement as to the sum of Rs. 5,000 had nothing to do with a future act of the complainant and that his enquiry about it was merely casual and on behalf of his cousin without the slightest intention of offering it as a motive or reward for any official act of the complainant. This explanation is undoubtedly open to the criticism that it may be—and it is contended by the Crown that it is—an afterthought and not true. Indeed if the case for the defence on this point rested on its being made out that it was true it might fail for want of evidence. But where the inference suggested by what happened at the interview is equivocal and where the explanation put forward by the accused is reasonably possible the theory of innocence cannot be said to have been sufficiently negatived by the prosecution. The absence of the cousin from the witness-box does not matter under the circumstances. It would matter, if the accused had to establish affirmatively the truth of his allegation. In view of the fact that the complainant was interested in the collection of several funds, it was particularly desirable for him to put it beyond question by further inquiry that the proposed donation was not meant for any such innocent purpose.

Taking a general view of all the facts and circumstances of the case, I think the complainant was justified in feeling suspicious about the accused's intention; but he was not justified in inferring, as he did by the time Mr. Kirpalani arrived on the scene, that the accused had offered him a bribe of Rs. 5,000. The case for the prosecution is not free from doubt and difficulty. On the whole I am not satisfied that there was any offer of a bribe nor am I satisfied that there was any instigation to the complainant to do something which is prohibited by section 161, Indian Penal Code. It is not clear that the instigation, if any, was to make the complainant agree to accept or attempt to obtain the sum as a motive or reward for any official act.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the appeal fails and must be dismissed.

I desire to make it clear that I do not wish to be understood as approving of the conduct of the accused in any sense, even taking it in the light most favourable to him. All that I hold is that the facts necessary to constitute the offence charged have not been made out, and that is all that I am concerned with in this appeal.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 250, whether applicable to enquiry under s. 107.

Section 250 of the Criminal Procedure Code is only applicable in a case instituted by complaint, or on information given to a Police Officer, or to a Magistrate whereupon a person is accused before a Magistrate of an "offence," and does not apply to an enquiry under section 107 of that Code.

Ram Sukh Rai v. Mahadeo Rai, 7 Ind. Cas. 290; 7 A. L. J. 743; 11 Cr. L. J. 448 and Queen-Empress v. Lakhpat, 15 A. 365; A. W. N. (1893) 114; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 952, followed.

Criminal Reference made by the District Magistrate, Gorakhpur.

JUDGMENT.—Mannu Khan laid information before the Magistrate in consequence of which action was taken under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code against a number of persons. After enquiry, the Magistrate discharged these persons under section 119 of the Criminal Procedure Code and held that the complaint made against them was vexatious and frivolous, and ordered the complainant to pay them each Rs. 15 as compensation under section 250 of the Criminal Procedure Code. On revision before the learned District Magistrate he has referred the case to this Court with a recommendation that the order under section 250 be set aside. Section 250 is only applicable in a case instituted by complaint or on information given to a Police Officer or to a Magistrate whereupon a person is accused before a Magistrate of "an offence." It has been held by this Court in Ram Sukh Rai v. Mahadeo Rai (1) that section 250 does not apply to an enquiry under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code. That ruling followed an earlier ruling of this Court which laid down the same principle, viz., Queen-Empress v. Lakhpat (2). It seems to me that those cases are in point. I accordingly accept the reference and direct that if the fines ordered to be paid under section 250 have been paid they be refunded, otherwise the order for payment is set aside.

KANSHI RAM V. EMPEROR.

LAHORE HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 508 OF 1921.

December 23, 1921.

Present: — Mr. Justice Chevis.

KANSHI RAM—CONVICT—APPELLANT

versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 376—Rape—Conviction based solely on evidence of woman raped, whether justified.

In cases of rape, where the prosecution evidence is not sufficiently strong to warrant a conviction, it is unsafe to convict merely on the accusation of the woman who has been raped.

Appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Hissar, dated the 27th June 1921.

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit, for the Appellant.

The Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant, Kanshi Ram, has been convicted of raping Musammat Maro and sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment and fine. That Musammat Maro was raped by somebody there can be little room for doubt. The only difficulty in the case is whether there is sufficient evidence in the case to convict the appellant of the crime. Musammat Maro's story is that she was coming back with three other little girls after collecting wood for fuel when the offence was committed. Hakim and Ramzan are two witnesses who corroborate her. They say that they came to the spot on hearing her cries and that the appellant then ran away, but the defence has succeeded in proving enmity between both of these witnesses and the appellant's family and the learned Sessions Judge himself seems rather to hesitate in relying on the evidence of these two witnesses. The learned Government Advocate states that he himself does not rely on these witnesses and that in his opinion the case rests simply on the evidence of Musammat Maro. If her evidence is to be believed implicitly the appeal must fail, otherwise there is no good evidence to warrant a conviction. The three little girls, who were with Musammat Maro at the time when the offence is alleged to have been committed, state that nothing of the kind occurred, and that they and Musammat Maro merely met the appellant who made them put down the wood which they had collected from his field. The learned Sessions Judge thinks that these witnesses give evidence as dictated by their parents who have been won over by the appellant's family. This, of course, is possible but there is no proof of their having been won over and I do not think a Court is justified in disregarding the fact that three witnesses for the prosecution utterly deny the facts alleged by the prosecution. As I have already stated there can be little doubt that Musammat Maro was raped by somebody, for I am not prepared to hold that her father or anybody else fabricated her bodily symptoms in order to bring a false charge against the appellant. When such an offence has been committed it seems improbable that the real offender should be let go in order to implicate somebody else, and beyond the fact that an uncle of Musammat Maro was evicted from some land belonging to the appellant's father though he clearly alleged that he was an occupancy tenant, there is nothing to prove enmity towards the appellant on the part of Musammat Maro's family. At the same time I think it would be quite unsafe in cases of this kind to convict an individual merely on the accusation of the woman who has been raped. It is not inconceivable that the real offender may in some cases be screened, either because he has bribed the person aggrieved not to accuse him or because the offender is a member of the same family as the person aggrieved. Several witnesses have appeared for the defence but their evidence has been rejected by the learned Sessions Judge on account of discrepancies. Without relying on the evidence of the defence witnesses, I still think that the prosecution evidence in this case is not sufficiently strong to warrant a conviction.

I, therefore, accept the appeal and, reversing the conviction and sentence, I acquit the appellant and order him to be released and the fine, if paid, to be refunded.

The mere raising of the plinth or making alterations in the size, position and number of the doors or windows of a house are not material alterations in the original plan, and consequently do not constitute an infringement of the sanction within the meaning of section 185 of the U. P. Municipalities Act.

Reference made by the Second Additional Sessions Judge.

Mr. Adit Prasad, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.—The raising of the plinth and the alterations made by the accused in the size, position or number of the doors or windows cannot be treated as material alterations in the original plan so as to affect the Municipal Board. They cannot be treated as an infringement of the sanction within the meaning of section 185 of the Municipalities Act (U. P. II of 1916). The buildings have been made on the area covered by the sanction. The Overseer states that a portion of that land is nasul but a dispute of that nature does not fall within the purview of section 185, if the area built on does not exceed that entered in the sanctioned plan.

The recommendation is, therefore, accepted and the conviction of the accused under section 185 of the Municipalities Act is set aside. The fine, if realised, will be refunded.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants Fatta and Khan Bahadur have been convicted of the murder of Muhammad Khan and sentenced to death. They have appealed through Counsel and the case is also before us for orders as to confirmation of the death sentences.

The deceased was murdered on the night of the 12/14th October last in his own field of moth. His body was discovered the next day and a report was made at the thana, which is six miles distant from the scene of the murder, by one Bahram Khan, younger brother of the deceased, at 8 P. M. on the 14th October. In his report Bahram Khan states that at the time when the body was discovered Karam Khan stated that on the preceding night he was in his jawar field and that at sikriwela Muhammad Khan shouted "Karam Khan and Kalandar, come up, there are thieves," and that he had gone to the spot whence the deceased shouted. The reporter added that Karam Khan made no further statement and that Kalandar, when questioned, made no statement at all. The usual Police investigation began and Karam Khan and Kalandar were, of course, examined, but no information was obtained from them till the 17th of October when they made a statement to the Police implicating the present appellants and one Khoedad. On the same day Khoedad made a confession and was then offered a pardon, and on the 21st October made a full statement before a First Class Magistrate. The result was that the present appellants were arrested and committed to the Court of Session. The approver, Khoedad, gives evidence to the effect that he went with the two appellants to steal moth and that when they got to the field of the deceased the deceased challenged them and then called out to Kalandar and Karam Khan. Fatta then threw a stone which hit the deceased over the eye and knocked him down. Khan Bahadar then picked up a sangal or pitchfork which was lying by the deceased and struck him with the result that the sangal broke.

Fatta then put his foot over the neck of the deceased and the approver held down his legs and so they killed him. The approver says that the murder was committed because Muhammad Khan had recognised the thieves. The approver's story goes on to say that Kalandar's dog then barked and they went back some 34 or 35 paces. When Kalandar and his dog came up they told him what had occurred. Karam Khan then also came up and was told by Kalandar what had happened. Kalandar and Karam Khan on being urged promised not to divulge the matter, and Khoedad and the appellants then went away, Fatta carrying off the khalka (or choga) which had fallen from the deceased. Kalandar and Karam Khan give evidence to the effect that they came up to the spot after the murder had been committed. Kalandar says he learnt what had happened from Khoedad and the appellants.

Karam Khan says that Kalandar told him what had happened in the presence of Khoedad and the appellants. The above is the only evidence against the appellants with the exception of certain evidence as to Fatta digging up the khalka belonging to the deceased, which was buried in a kass near his bakk. The evidence as to the khalka the learned Sessions Judge discards regarding this evidence as not being credible. The Sessions Judge thinks that it is not likely that the deceased should have been carrying the khalka on his head as the approver says he was doing, and that one of the murderers should have thought it worth his while to carry away the garment, and he notes further that no mention of khalka is made in the initial report.

We are of opinion that the evidence is far too doubtful to support a conviction. The approver may, of course, be telling the truth, and it is quite probable that he himself had a hand in the murder, but his statement as to who his accomplices were must be corroborated by reliable evidence before it can form the basis of a conviction. The corroboration offered in this case is the statement of two men who apparently knew something about the matter from the very beginning but refused to make any statement until the third day of the Police investigation. The delay may, of course, be due to their reluctance to implicate the appellants and Khoedad after they had promised not to give information, but it is obvious that statements obtained after such a long delay must be regarded with suspicion; and these witnesses may possibly be screening themselves at the expense of innocent men. On behalf of the prosecution it is urged that these witnesses bear no enmity to the appellants and are related to them, but even so the long delay in making their statements makes their evidence liable to grave suspicion. As to the recovery of the khalka we regard this part of the case also with considerable doubt.

In our opinion there is no reliable corroboration of the approver's statement and we agree with the three assessors in holding the case not proved. We accordingly accept the appeal and reversing the conviction and Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 514, proceedings under—Civil proceedings—Forfeiture of bond—Prima facie proof of forfeiture, necessity of—Notice to show cause issued on Police report—Evidence on oath taken afterwards—Proceedings, whether initiated—Prejudice, question of, whether material.

Proceedings under section 514 of the Criminal Procedure Code are of the nature of Civil proceedings, in which the provisions laid down in that section must be most carefully observed. [p. 831, col. 1.]

Under section 514 of the Criminal Procedure Code, before issuing an order calling upon a person who is subject to a bond to show cause why he should not forfeit it, the Magistrate is bound to have before him sufficient proof that a good reason exists for making the order and the section requires that the grounds of such proof must be recorded. [p. 831, col. 1.]

Therefore, where a Magistrate calls upon a person subject to a bond to show cause under section 514, Criminal Procedure Code, merely on a Police report, and takes evidence on oath after the order is issued, he acts without jurisdiction, and the proceedings must be set aside even though, as a matter of fact, the person is not prejudiced in any way by the procedure adopted. [p. 831, cols. 1 & 2.]

Application against an order of the Deputy Commissioner, Hazaribagh.

Messrs. Hassan Imam and A. P. Upadhyaya, for the Petitioners.

Mr. H. L. Nandkeolyar, Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioners in this case were bound down in proceedings under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code, to keep the peace for one year in January 1920. Later on in that year a complaint was laid before the Magistrate by the opposite party to the effect that the petitioners were so acting as to cause a breach of the peace. The Magistrate did not treat this as an ordinary complaint but sent the matter to the Police for enquiry. The Police seem to have made an enquiry and to have submitted a report. On the 3rd of December 1920 the Deputy Commissioner on reading the report of the Police stated that he was of opinion that the facts disclosed justified the issue of an order on the petitioners to show cause why they and their sureties should not, under section 514 of the Criminal Procedure Code, forfeit their bonds of Rs. 200 each. The Deputy Commissioner ordered that the case should be transferred to a Deputy Magistrate for disposal after issue of notice. A notice accordingly was issued to the petitioners asking them merely to show cause why their bonds should not be forfeited.

The petitioners duly answered and the Police were directed to produce witnesses and these witnesses when produced were examined and cross-examined in the presence of the petitioners. During the course of the proceedings the Deputy Magistrate who was hearing the case considered whether he should frame charges against the petitioners under certain sections of the Penal Code. After the examination of the witnesses produced by the Police the petitioners called no evidence and then the Deputy Magistrate drew up an order finding that the petitioners had committed breach of the peace and directing that their bonds should be forfeited. An appeal was made to the Deputy Commissioner who upheld the finding of the Deputy Magistrate.

The orders of the Deputy Commissioner and the Deputy Magistrate are assailed before me on the ground that they were passed without jurisdiction. Mr. Hasan Imam's contention is that the wording of section 514 shows that, before issuing an order calling upon a person who is subject to a bond to show cause why he should not forfeit it, the Magistrate is bound to have before him sufficient proof that a good reason exists for making the order and the section requires that the grounds of such proof must be recorded. In the present case the petitioners were merely called upon to show cause on the Police report which had been submitted to the Magistrate, and evidence was taken on oath after the order had issued. Section 514 lays down that it must be proved to the satisfaction of the Court that the bond has been forfeited and the Court shall record the grounds of such proof, and it is after such grounds have been recorded that the person bound by the bond may be called on to show cause why the amount should not be paid. The contention of Mr. Hasan Imam is supported by the case in Hariram Birbhan, In re (1). There it is clearly laid down that the Magistrate cannot have jurisdiction to issue an order to show cause under section 514 until it has been proved, and proof has been afforded by evidence recorded on oath, that there is justification for forfeiting the bond; there must be prima facie proof that the bond has been forfeited. It is quite clear, I think, that in the present case the Deputy Magistrate treated the case as a criminal case and this is shown by his doubt as to whether charges should be framed. Proceedings under section 514 are of the nature of Civil proceedings, and it has been more than once laid down that the provisions of section 514 must be most carefully observed. I do not think that, as a matter of fact, the petitioners were in any way prejudiced by the procedure adopted by the Deputy Commissioner, but there has been a failure to carry out the express provisions of the law, and the Deputy Magistrate acted without jurisdiction in failing to record proof before he issued notices to show cause; and on this ground I must hold that the petitioners are entitled to have the proceedings set aside and the amounts, that they paid as forfeited, refunded to them.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195—Sanction—Munsif exercising Small Cause Court powers, whether subordinate to District Judge.

A Subordinate Judge or a Munsif exercising the powers of a Small Cause Court is subordinate to a District Judge for the purposes of section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Lalji Tewari v. Emperor, 52 Ind. Cas. 193; 4 P. L. J. 609; (1919) Pat. 329; 20 Cr. L. J. 577 (F. B.), followed.

Petition, under section 195 (1) (6) of the Criminal Procedure Code, of revision of an order of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 17th March 1922.

Mr. G. S. Salariya, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—It appears that in a certain Small Cause suit between Chanan Singh and Badru, the latter produced a certain receipt for Rs. 20 in his defence. To prove the receipt he gave evidence himself and put one Bhag Singh into the witness-box to support it.

Apparently this document was held to be a forgery by the learned Munsif, who tried the case as a Small Cause.

Chanan Singh applied to that officer's successor for sanction to prosecute Badru and Bhag Singh under sections 465, 471 and 193, Indian Penal Code.

This application was refused on the ground that the said successor had no power to entertain the same.

Chanan Singh then moved the learned District Judge who accorded sanction.

Bhag Singh has now come up to this Court in revision and for him Mr. Salariya has attacked the order of the learned District Judge on two main grounds:

Firstly, it was contended that the District Judge had no jurisdiction to accord sanction inasmuch as the Small Cause Court was not subordinate to the District Court. Reliance was placed on Sukhdeo Singh v. District Magistrate of Muzaffarpur (1). That authority, no doubt, supports this contention, but it was specifically overruled by a Full Bench of the same Court (Patna) in Lalji Tewari v. Emperor (2) where it was held that a Subordinate Judge or Munsif exercising the powers of a Small Cause Court is subordinate, for the purposes of section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, to the District Judge. That case is on all fours with the present and I hold, therefore, that the District Judge has not acted without jurisdiction.

I declined to go into the merits of the matter as I considered it inadvisable to express any opinion that might in any way influence the Trying Court.

Mr. Salariya's next contention was that the District Judge was wrong in sanctioning the prosecution of the petitioner for offences under sections 465 and 471, Indian Penal Code. Here, I consider, he is on firmer ground. Sub-clause 1 (c) of section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, relates to offences covered by those sections committed by a party to the proceeding or suit, Bhag Singh was not a party but a witness and, therefore, sub-clause 1 (c) did not apply to him.

I, therefore, accept this petition in so far as to eliminate from the sanction to prosecute the petitioner so much as relates to offences under sections 465 and 471, Indian Penal Code. In other respects, the order of the Court below will stand.

Where the whole of the family property has been conveyed to strangers whether by joint action between the members of the family or by separate actions against which no dispute is raised, a suit may lie by one stranger against another stranger for the partition of a particular item of property in dispute. Mr. Nilkanth Atmaram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff sued for a partition of the plaint strip of land and separation of his two-thirds share, claiming title under a sale by defendants Nos. 3 and 4 of their two-thirds interest to the plaintiff in the suit property. Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 were members of a joint family consisting of themselves together with defendants Nos. 2 and 5, who were jointly interested to the extent of one-third. After the sale by defendants Nos. 3 and 4 to the plaintiff, the second defendant as manager of the family sold the plaint strip to the first defendant.

In the Trial Court the first defendant endeavoured to prove that there had been a sale to him of the plaint strip by defendant No. 2 prior to the date of the sale to the plaintiff of two-thirds of the property by defendants Nos. 3 and 4. This issue was found against him.

Then the first defendant claimed that defendants Nos. 3 and 4 were estopped from selling the plaint strip or an interest therein to the plaintiff, and that issue was found in the Trial Court in the affirmative, and the suit was dismissed, on the ground that the plaintiff's suit for partition of specific property could not lie without suing for a general partition.

In appeal the learned Appellate Judge considered that the suit could lie. The first defendant claimed to have purchased the interest of the whole undivided family:

"The plaintiff so far agreed with him to say that he had purchased all that remained of the joint family interest after the plaintiff's own purchase had taken effect. It was, therefore, common ground that the joint family had been altogether ousted. The contest was between two strangers. There was no reason why such strangers could not, without instituting a general suit for partition of the entire family property, maintain an action for the partition of the fraction which was in dispute between them."

Now, there may be cases in which one co-parcener purports to convey his interest in a particular item of family property to a stranger, while the other co-parcener (taking the simplest case of two co-parceners) sells his interest in the same property to another stranger. In such a case a suit might lie by one stranger against the other for partition for that item of the family property which had been wholly disposed of by the persons who were entitled to it. But such an action between strangers, in my opinion, should only be allowed in the very plainest of cases, when it has been proved that the whole of the family interest in the property has been disposed of either by joint action between the members of the family or by separate actions against which no dispute has been raised.

In this case the first defendant claims to be entitled to the entire strip of land in dispute under his sale from the second defendant who appears to have sold as manager; and assuming that this plaint strip had entirely gone out of the family, still the question might arise whether the first defendant was entitled to the whole or only to the share of his vendor. That question has never been raised in the suit. Accordingly, there is no evidence to show that the alienation by the second defendant of the whole strip was competent. The learned Appellate Judge, however, although he considered that the suit would lie, dismissed it on the ground that the third and fourth defendants were estopped by their conduct in disputing the sale effected by the second defendant. I do not think the ground on which that estoppel was found to be effective will stand the light of analysis.

But, apart from that, it seems to me that the plaintiff's suit was not competent. It is true that all the members of the joint family are parties to the suit. But the question whether the suit could be converted into a general suit for partition has never been raised, and it is much better that the plaintiff, if he wishes to proceed further, should file a general partition action, rather than confuse the issues by changing the nature of the present suit. The dealings by members of a joint family with their undivided shares either in the whole of the family property, or in particular items, necessarily lead to a considerable amount of confusion. It cannot be said that any co-parcener has a particular share in any item of the family property. He has only an undivided share in the whole of it, and although it may be taken as settled law now that a co-parcener can sell his own interest in the joint family property, the relief given to the purchaser by the Courts can only be given by way of a suit for a general partition. See Pandu Vithoji v. Goma Ramji (1). Again in Hanmanthas Ramdayal v. Valabhdas Shankardas (2), defendants Nos. 1 to 4 became purchasers at a Court-sale in execution of the decree against the fifth defendant of two of the properties belonging to the joint family. The plaintiff, a minor, thereupon brought a suit against his father (defendant No. 5) and the decree-holders as well as the auction-purchasers for a declaration that the plaintiff's half share in the two properties did not pass to the auction-purchasers, and for possession of his half share on equitable partition. It was held that the son's interest did not pass to the purchasers at the Court-sale, and it was also held that the auction-purchasers should be allowed to file a suit against the plaintiff for a general partition of the entire family properties.

The result must be that the plaintiff's suit as purchaser from defendants Nos. 3 and 4 for partition of this particular item of family property cannot lie, and we think that the order dismissing the plaintiff's suit should be confirmed, expressing our opinion that there is nothing to prevent the plaintiff from endeavouring to get advantage of his sale from defendants Nos. 3 and 4 by filing a suit for a general partition.

CORAJEE, J.—I agree in holding that the plaintiff in this case is not entitled to demand by partition his vendors' alleged two thirds share in this particular item of joint family property. It is clear on the facts that the plaintiffs-vendors are only two out of four co-parceners owning considerable undivided property. As such co-parceners they are not entitled to say that they have a right to a specific share in any particular portion of the joint family estate. And a purchaser of their unascertained share cannot insist upon the possession of any definite piece of property. The remedy of the purchaser lies in a suit to have that share and interest ascertained by instituting a suit for general partition in which the whole of the joint family property should be included, and all necessary parties joined: Pandu Vithoji v. Goma Ramji (1). In a suit of that nature the Court, in making the partition, would endeavour to give effect to the alienation, and "so to marshal the family property amongst the co-parceners as to allot that portion of the family estate, or so much of it as may be just" to the purchaser: Udaram Sitaram v. Kanu Panduji (3).

MAHARAJA OF BURDWAN—

RESPONDENT.

Bengal Alluvion and Diluvion Act (IX of 1847), s. 6—Land revenue, assessment of—Ohurs and islands formed in rivers after Permanent Settlement—Bengal Land Revenue Assessment (Resumed Lands) Regulation (II of 1819), ss. 3, 31.

All churs and islands in rivers flowing through, or opposite to, lands belonging to the zemindaris in Bengal which have been formed since the Decennial Settlements (made permanent by Regulation I of 1793) are liable to assessment under the Bengal Alluvion and Diluvion Act [p. 840, col. 1.]

The intention and effect of Act IX of 1847 was merely to alter the machinery by which lands gained from the sea or rivers by alluvion or dereliction were to be assessed, and not to subject to assessment any lands which would not have been liable thereto under the law in force at the time when the Act was passed; and, accordingly, a question raised as to the assessability of churs must be determined by reference to the pre-existing law and particularly to Regulation II of 1819. [p. 837, col. 2.]

Secretary of State for India v. Fuhamidannissa Begum, 17 I. A. 40; 170. 590; 5 Sar. P. O. J. 391; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 933, followed.

The effect of Regulation II of 1819 is to declare that all churs newly formed since the Decennial Settlement, though upon a river-bed which is recognised as the property of the owner of an estate, are to be treated as land gained since the Settlement and consequently unsettled at the time. This express provision cannot be excluded merely by showing that the river-bed from which the churs have been thrown up was, at the date of Settlement, the property of the zemindar and that the Settlement was imposed upon the zemindari as a whole. The ownership of the bed may determine the proprietary rights in the churs; but property is one thing and assessability is another. The Regulation declares in terms that new churs are to be included in the category of unsettled lands, and contains no exception for churs formed upon a river-bed belonging to a settled estate. [p. 838, col. 2; p. 839, col. 1.]

The express provisions in section 31 of the same Regulation II of 1819 that waste land shall not be the subject of an additional assessment when brought into cultivation, when contrasted with the provisions of section 3 of the same Regulation as to newly formed churs and islands, affords further support to the view that the Legislature intended to put such churs upon a different footing from the waste lands and to make them liable to assessment. [p. 839, col. 2.]

A river-bed cannot be treated as waste land so as to come within the protection of section 31 of Regulation II of 1819, [p. 839, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

VISCOUNT CAVE.—These are consolidated appeals from decrees made by the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal in four suits. Of these suits three were brought by the Maharaja of Burdwan, with whose ancestor the Zemindari of Burdwan was permanently settled in the year 1793; and the fourth by the Zemindar of Maliara, with whose predecessor that Zemindari was similarly settled in the same year. The causes of action in all the four suits were similar in character. The lands comprised in the Zemindari of Burdwan are in part traversed and in part bounded by two rivers, the Damodar and the Darakeshwar; and the Maliara lands are similarly bounded by the first-mentioned river. Since the date of the Settlements a large number of Ohurs (or sandbanks) and islands have been thrown up in these rivers; and the Revenue Authorities, purporting to act under Act IX of 1847, recently caused a Deara Survey to be made of these Ohurs and islands (hereafter for the sake of brevity referred to as Ohurs) and assessed them with revenue, and on the refusal of the Zemindars to accept a Settlement, settled them with third parties. The Zemindars disputed the right of the Government to make such an assessment and claimed to be the owners of the Ohurs where they lay opposite to their settled lands and to be entitled to hold them as part of their settled property free from any additional assessment; and it was to establish this claim that these suits were brought. The decision of the Subordinate Judge of Burdwan in suits brought by the Maharaja was partly for and partly against his claim, while the decree of the District Judge of Bankura in the Maliana suit was wholly against the Zemindar. On appeal the High Court decided all the suits in favour of the plaintiffs, and thereupon these appeals were brought by the defendant, the Secretary of State for India in Council.

The evidence in the suits is voluminous, but the material facts may be shortly stated; and for this purpose it will be sufficient to refer to the facts in the first two suits only, viz., those brought by the Maharaja of Burdwan with reference to the Churs in the river Damodar; for it is common ground that the decision in these two suits must determine the result of the other two suits also.

The Damodar is a river of some width but little depth flowing into the Hooghly near Gurchumbhook. For a distance of 53 miles, viz., from Theraut to Basna, it forms the southern boundary of lands belonging to the Zemindari of Burdwan; and for the next 91 miles, viz., from Basna to Gurchumbhook, it runs through the lands of that Zemindari, which accordingly adjoins the river on both banks, except that a few of the riparian Mouzabs were some time since sold for arrears of revenue and no longer belong to the Zemindari. From Gurchumbhook up to Ampta,—that is to say, for a distance of about 14 miles—the river is navigable at all seasons of the year; but beyond the last-mentioned point it is navigable at certain seasons only; and for present purposes may be treated as non-navigable. The Maharajas of Burdwan appear to have fishing rights in the river and to own certain private ferries upon it. They also at one time levied tolls on boats passing up and down the river; but these tolls were abolished by the Government in the year 1772, that is to say, before the date of the Decennial Settlement—and have not since been levied.

For some time before 1791 yearly Settlements were effected with the successive Maharajas, and it appears that on the occasion of one of these yearly Settlements, viz., that for the year 1772, a deduction was made for nadi sikasti, or diluvion by river. The kabuliyat relating to the Settlement of 1788 is produced; and by this document Maharaja Tej Ohandra, who is therein described as "Zemindar of Pergunnah Burdwan, etc., in the Province of Bengal," accepted the sum of Rs. 40,15,109.2. as the revenue for the settlement of "the said Chuckla," and agreed to cultivate the land and to raise no objection to paying the revenue on the score of inundation, of the lands being washed away by the river, etc. In 1780, when the Decennial Settlements were introduced, difficulty was experienced in effecting an agreement with the Maharaja, with the result that some Mouzabs were sold by Government to raise arrears of revenue; but ultimately in 1791 a settlement for nine years was agreed upon. No sanad or kabuliyat relating to this important Settlement has been produced, but its terms are evidenced by a statement headed "Dowl Bundbust or Particular Statement of the Jumma of Pergunnah Burdwan payable yearly by the Zemindar Maharaja Tej Ohandra Bahadur for nine years from the beginning of the Bengal year 1198 to the end of 1206, or from the 10th April, 1791, to 11th April 1800." This statement contains the items making up the sum of Rs. 40,15,109.2, specified in the kabuliyat for the year 1788, and after certain deductions for sayer abolished, lands sold for arrears of revenue, and other matters, brings out the total revenue payable by the Zemindar during the nine years at Rs. 32,23,892 per annum. No reference is made to the river-bed; and it was found by the Subordinate Judge that, while the income from the fishing and ferrying rights was included in the assessment, no part of the bed was included in any of the settled Pergunnahs and Mouzabs. Indeed, it is plain that in arriving at the revenue for the purposes of this Settlement the bed of the river was not taken into account. It is this Settlement which was made permanent by Regulation I of 1793.

Upon these and other like materials the Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the whole bed of the river where it ran through the Zemindari lands, and the bed ad medium filum aquæ where it bounded those lands on one side only, was the property of the Zemindar, and accordingly that the Ohurs formed on these parts of the river-bed belonged to the Zemindari; but as to the effect of the Permanent Settlement he drew a distinction. He held that, the Zemindari having been settled as "the said Chuska"—that is to say, as a compact estate—in the year 1788, and (as he assumed) also in the year 1791, the Settlement included and covered the river-bed where it was bounded on both sides by the Zemindari lands and that the Ohurs formed on this part of the bed could not be the subject of an additional assessment under the Act of 1847; but as to that part of the river which was bounded on one bank only by the Zemindari lands, he held that the bed of the river ad medium flum, being included in the adjoining lands by presumption of law only, was not covered by the Settlement, and that the Ohurs since formed on this part of the bed were liable to assessment as unsettled land. On appeal the High Court, while upholding the findings of the Subordinate Judge as to the proprietary rights of the Zemindar in the river-bed and Ohurs, rejected the distinction drawn by him as to the effect of the Permanent Settlement, and held that the Zemindar was entitled to hold all the Ohurs in dispute as part of his permanently settled lands and free from further assessment. The appeal is, therefore, brought as to all these Ohurs.

In dealing with this appeal their Lordships accept the concurrent findings of the Courts as to the ownership of the bed of the river and of the Ohurs formed upon it since the date of the Settlement, and the assumption of the Subordinate Judge that the Decennial Settlement of 1791 (which was made permanent in 1793) was similar to the settlement evidence by the kabuliyat of 1788 in assessing the Zemindari as a whole. They also put aside for the moment the subordinate arguments founded on the facts that some of the riparian Mouzabs had been alienated before the Settlement, and that the lower part of the river was navigable; and they proceed to consider the important question of law, whether on the facts as found the Revenue Authorities were entitled to assess the newly formed Ohurs to revenue as being "land added to the estate" within the meaning of section 6 of Act IX of 1847. It has already been decided by the Board in Secretary of State for India v. Fakimiddannissa Begum (1), that the intention and effect of the Act of 1847 was merely to alter the machinery by which lands gained from the sea or rivers by alluvion or dereliction were to be assessed, and not to subject to assessment any lands which would not have been liable thereto under the law in force at the time when the Act was passed; and accordingly the question raised as to the assessability of the Ohurs in dispute must be determined by reference to the pre-existing law and particularly to Regulation II of 1819.

Regulation I of 1793, by which the Decennial Settlements were made permanent, declared (by Articles III) to the Zemindars and other proprietors of land with whom a Settlement had been concluded that "at the expiration of the term of Settlement no alteration will be made in the assessment which they have respectively engaged to pay but that they and their heirs and lawful successors will be allowed to hold their estates at such assessment for ever." The main purpose of this declaration appears from Article VI, which contains the following paragraph:—

"The Governor-General in Council trusts that the proprietors of land, sensible of the benefits conferred upon them by the public assessment being fixed for ever, will exert themselves in the cultivation of their lands, under the certainty that they will enjoy exclusively the fruits of their own good management and industry and that no demand will ever be made upon them, or their heirs or successors, by the present or any future Government, for an augmentation of the public assessment in consequence of the improvement of their respective estates."

Regulation XIX of 1793, which deals mainly with alienated lands, contains the following recital showing the origin of the Settlements for revenue:—

"By the ancient law of the country the ruling power is entitled to a certain proportion of the produce of every bigah of land (demandable in money or kind, according to local custom), unless it transfers its right thereto for a term or in perpetuity, or limits the public demand upon the whole of the lands belonging to an individual, leaving him to appropriate to his own use the difference between the value of such proportion of the produce and the sum payable to the public, whilst he continues to discharge the latter."

Regulation II of 1819, which is expressed to be passed for (among other things) defining the right of Government to the revenue of lands not included within the limits of estates for which a Settlement has been made, contains (in section 3) the following provisions:—

"First.—It is hereby declared and enacted that all lands which, at the period of the Decennial Settlement, were not included within the limits of any Pargunnah, Mouzah or other division of estates for which a settlement was concluded with the owners, not being lands for which a distinct Settlement may have been made since the period above referred to, nor lands held free of assessment under a valid and legal title of the nature specified in Regulations XIX and XXXVII, 1793, and in the corresponding Regulations subsequently enacted, are and shall be considered liable to assessment in the same manner as other unsettled mahals and the revenue assessed on all such lands, whether exceeding one hundred bigahs or, otherwise, shall belong to Government."

"Second.—The foregoing principles shall be deemed applicable not only to tracts of land such as are described to have been brought into cultivation in the Sunderbans, but to all Churs and islands formed since the period of the Decennial Settlement, and generally to all lands gained by alluvion or dereliction since that period, whether from an introcession of the sea, an alteration in the course of rivers or the gradual accession of soil on their banks."

Section 31 of the same Regulation saves the rights of the proprietors of permanently settled estates to the full benefit of "all waste lands included within the ascertained boundaries of such estates respectively at the period of the Decennial Settlement, and which have since been or may hereafter be reduced to cultivation" and concludes with the following general declaration:—

"Second.—It is further hereby declared and enacted that all claims by the Revenue Authorities on behalf of Government to additional revenue from lands which were at the period of the Decennial Settlement included within the limits of estates for which a Permanent Settlement has been concluded, whether on the plea of error or fraud, or on any pretext whatever, saving, of course, the case of lands expressly excluded from the operation of the Settlement, such as Lakheraj and Thannadarry lands, shall be and be considered wholly illegal and invalid."

On an analysis of the terms of these Regulations, so far as they are material to the question now under consideration, it appears that, while lands included in a Permanent Settlement were carefully excluded from further assessment, this protection was extended only to lands actually in existence at the time of the settlement and specifically included in the estate as settled. The produce of "every bigah" of these lands was to be assessed to revenue once for all (Regulation XIX of 1791); and even waste land producing little or no revenue to the proprietor, if "included within the limits of any Pargunnah, Mouzah or other division of estates for which a Settlement was concluded," was to be free from further assessment on being brought into cultivation (Regulation II of 1819, section 31). But lands not included in the settled Pargunnahs and Mouzahs were to be considered liable to assessment as unsettled property; and "these principles," i. e., that lands not included within the limits of the settled "Pargunnahs" and "Mouzah" were to be the subject of additional assessment—were to be deemed applicable to all Churs and islands formed since the Decennial Settlement, and generally to all lands gained by alluvion or dereliction since that period (Regulation II of 1819). It appears to their Lordships that the effect of the Regulation last referred to is to declare that Churs formed after the Decennial Settlement are to be treated as unsettled; and that this express provision cannot be excluded merely by showing that the river-bed from which the Churs have been thrown up was at the date of Settlement the property of the Zemindars, and that the Settlement was imposed upon the Zemindari as a whole. The ownership of the bed may determine the proprietary rights in the Ohurs; but property is one thing and assessability is another. The Regulation declares in terms that new Ohurs are to be included in the category of unsettled lands, and contains no exception for Ohurs formed upon a river-bed belonging to a settled estate. Such Ohurs must, therefore, be treated as unsettled.

This conclusion is strongly supported by the terms of Regulation XI of 1825, which deals with the rules to be observed in determining claims to lands gained by alluvion or dereliction. The fourth rule laid down in that Regulation, while providing that "in small and shallow rivers, the beds of which, with the Julkur right of fishery, may have been heretofore recognised as the property of individuals, any sand-bank or Ohur that may be thrown up shall, as hitherto, belong to the proprietors of the bed of the river," adds the words "subject to the provisions stated in the first clause of the present section." These last mentioned words refer to the proviso to the first clause, which prevents the owner of an increment of land gained from a river or the sea from being exempt from assessment to revenue under Regulation II of 1819; and they show conclusively that the intention of the Regulation was to provide that all Ohurs newly formed since the Decennial Settlement, though upon a river bed which is "recognised as the property" of the owner of the settled estate, are to be treated as land gained since the Settlement, and liable to be assessed accordingly.

There is nothing inequitable in such a construction. Section 5 of Act IX of 1847 provides that, when on inspection of the Deara Survey Map it appears that land has been washed away from or lost to any estate paying revenue to Government, a proportionate deduction shall be made from the juma, and if a deduction is to be made for land washed away, there is no reason why an addition should not be made in respect of land gained by alluvion or dereliction. In the latter case, while it may be that the area nominally belonging to the estate is unaltered, the cultivable area is increased and with it the potential revenue of the estate.

It was suggested in argument that a river-bed might be treated as "waste land" coming within the protection of section 31 of Regulation II of 1819; but their Lordships are not of that opinion. Indeed, the express provision in section 31 that waste land shall not be the subject of an additional assessment when brought into cultivation, when contrasted with the provisions of section 3 of the same Regulation as to newly formed Ohurs and islands affords further support to the view that the legislative authority intended to put such Ohurs upon a different footing from the waste lands and to make them liable to assessment.

The learned Judges of the High Court appear to have thought that such a construction of the Regulations as is here adopted would be opposed to the decision of this Board in the above cited case of Secretary of State for India v. Bahamidannisa Begum (1); but on examination of that case it will appear clearly that the lands there held to be exempt from assessment were not Ohurs formed since the Settlement upon land which at the time of Settlement had been river bed, but were lands specifically comprised in the Settlement and which, having for a time been covered with water, had afterwards emerged again by reason of alluvion or dereliction. The estate there in question, containing at the date of the Decennial Settlement 10,042 bighas of land, had become wholly submerged by the action of the Ganges and the Brahmaputra; but an area amounting to 2,000 bighas had recently re-appeared above water, and it was this re-formed land—which had been specifically included in the Decennial Settlement and in respect of which the assessed revenue had been paid even during the period of its submergence—which it was sought to assess to additional revenue. The Board, affirming the decision of the High Court in Bengal, decided against this claim, holding that "lands within the limits of settled estates which had become covered with water, and afterwards re-formed, were not lands 'gained from the river or sea by alluvion or dereliction' within the meaning of the legislation of 1847, which is confined to lands so gained 'since the period of Settlement.' It is obvious that such a conclusion has no application to a case like the present, where the land in question is new land formed since the Settlement was made. Lord Herschell, by whom the judgment of the Board was delivered, insisted more than once on the circumstance that the land in question was land which had been assessed to revenue at the date of the Settlement and had since been inundated and recovered, and that revenue had throughout been paid upon it; and the terms of the judgment indicate that, if the land in question had been formed for the first time since the date of the Settlement, the decision would have been the other way.

Lopes v. Muddun Mohun Thakoor (2) was referred to; but that case, which dealt with the proprietary right in land re-formed after submergence upon the original site and not with assessment to revenue, has no direct bearing on the present case. Reliance was also placed on certain rating cases: Land Tax Commissioners v. Central London Railway Company (3), Attorney-General for British Columbia v. Attorney-General for Canada (4), but those decisions turned on English or Canadian Law, and cannot affect the construction of the express provisions of the Bengal Regulations.

In the result, their Lordships are satisfied that the Churs and islands, which since the Decennial Settlement of the Zemindari of Burdwan has been formed in the river Damodar opposite to lands belonging to that Zemindari, were liable to assessment under the Act of 1847, and accordingly that the appeals in the first two suits should succeed. Having regard to this conclusion, it is unnecessary to consider the question of the ownership of any Churs which may have been formed opposite to lands alienated from the Zemindari or in the navigable part of the river.

As stated above, the Churs formed in the river Darakeshwar, which were in question in the third suit, and those formed in the Damodar river against lands of the Zemindar of Maliara, which were the subject of the fourth suit, are for present purposes in the same position as the Churs already discussed. The appeals in these suits also should, therefore, be allowed, and the decision of the District Judge of Bankura in the fourth suit should be restored.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that these appeals should be allowed and the suits dismissed, and that the respondents should pay the costs in all Courts and the costs of these appeals.

GANGA RAM v. MAYA DAS.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs applied for execution of their decrees in Suit No. 240 of 1909 by sale of part of the mortgaged property. It was admitted that the defendant at the time the decree was passed was not an agriculturist, but on the allegation that he had since become an agriculturist, he claimed to be entitled to the benefit of section 15 B of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. Both the lower Courts have held that, assuming that the defendant had become an agriculturist since the decree was passed, he was not entitled to the benefit of section 15 B.

In Balchand Chaturchand v. Chuni Lal Jagjandas (1) the question arose whether a defendant who was not an agriculturist at the time when a money decree was passed against him, but who had become one later, could at the time of execution ask the Court under section 20 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act to grant instalments. Mr. Justice Heaton said:—

"In this case the First Class Subordinate Judge of Nasik has applied section 20 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act to the case of a judgment-debtor who was not an agriculturist when the decree was obtained but who by discharging trade and limiting himself more exclusively to profits in land had become an agriculturist at the time of the execution. We do not think that he was empowered to do this..... It seems to us to be quite clear that section 20 cannot apply to the case of a person who was not an agriculturist when the decree was obtained whatever his status may be thereafter when execution comes to be taken out against him."

It has been argued that section 20 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act expressly refers to a decree passed against an agriculturist, whether before or after the Act came into force, while section 15 B only refers to decrees for redemption, foreclosure or sale, in suits of the descriptions mentioned in section 3, clause (y) or clause (z), and, consequently, the fact that a defendant or any of the defendants, who was not an agriculturist at the time the decree was passed, but became one thereafter, does not prevent his being a party to a suit of that description. But we think that, considering the nature of the Act, the description of "suit" in section 3 is not confined to the relief claimed in the suit, but also includes the status of the parties. Otherwise, the result would be that in all suits for redemption, foreclosure or sale, if subsequently the defendant brought himself within the definition of an agriculturist, he would be entitled to the benefit of section 15 B, and we do not think that was the intention of the Legislature, or that is what the law enacts. We think, therefore, that the decision of the Court below was correct and the appeal ought to be dismissed with costs.

A suit based on an agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant that the latter would pay the former half of what he realised from a tenancy granted to him by the Government is cognizable by a Court of Small Causes as all that is transferred under the agreement is a moveable property and not a right in the tenancy and, under section 102, Civil Procedure Code, no second appeal lies from a decision in such a suit where the value of the subject-matter is less than 500 rupees. upon an alleged agreement between him and the defendant that the latter would pay him half of what he realised from the tenancy granted to him by Government. In order to make the case clear it, was argued on behalf of the plaintiff before the lower Appellate Court that all that was transferred to him under the agreement was a moveable property and not a right in the tenancy. Looking at the relief in the light of this explanation the suit, on the face of it, appears to be of the nature of suits cognizable by a Court of Small Causes. Mr. Rama Nand for the plaintiff appellant has argued that the suit comes within clause 31 of the 2nd Schedule of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act and is thus excepted from the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes. The suit is not one for an account to recover surplus collections received by the mortgagee, nor is it a suit for the profits of immoveable property belonging to the plaintiff which have been wrongly received by the defendant. It was simply and purely a suit based on an alleged agreement, and, therefore, within jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes. Under section 102 of the Code of Civil Procedure, therefore, no appeal lies, and this appeal must be dismissed with costs, and I order accordingly.

A notice of demand issued by a Mamlatdar that a certain sum of money was due for payment of land revenue, and that, if it was not paid, steps would be taken, according to law, to enforce payment, is not an order within the meaning of sections 203, 204 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code, and, consequently, a suit instituted after the issue of such a notice, by the assessee for a declaration that he is entitled to hold the land rent-free would not be governed by section 11 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act, [p. 843, col. 2.]

First appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Ahmedabad, in Suit No. 34 of 1915.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for Respondent No. 1.

Mr. N. K. Mehta, for Respondent No. 2.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs filed this suit praying for a declaration that Survey No. 655 in the limits of the Talukdari village of Kanj was of their absolute ownership, and that the Talukdar defendants had no right of any kind whatever over it, and that the first defendant, the Secretary of State, had no right of any kind whatever to sanction the relinquishment of the said Survey Number by the said Talukdars, and had no right to assess any kind of claim or tax on it, and for further and other relief.

A preliminary issue was raised whether the suit was barred under section 11 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act. The learned Judge held that the suit was barred on the ground that an order had been passed within the meaning of sections 203 and 204 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code, and that as the plaintiffs had not appealed against that order their suit could not lie.

Now it appears that in the previous litigation between the Talukdars and the plaintiffs, the plaintiffs were able to establish their right to hold this particular land rent-free. Thereafter the Talukdars relinquished this particular Survey Number in favour of Government, although it does not appear that the plaintiffs were heard on the question whether the relinquishment was or was not subject to their rights.

The next step taken by the Revenue Authorities was a notice of demand issued by the Mamlatdar that a certain amount was due for the payment of the land revenue, and that if it was not paid within ten days from the receipt of the notice, steps would be taken according to law to forcibly recover the whole amount for the current year's land revenue which had not been paid.

One would presume that the notice of demand of the Mamlatdar was based on an order by the Collector directing that this particular Survey Number was liable to pay assessment, and that evidently was the view taken by the first defendant when the written statement was filed, because in the first paragraph thereof it is said:

"The jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the suit is barred by section 11 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act, 1876, since the plaint does not state that the plaintiffs have preferred any appeals against the orders of the Collector imposing and levying assessment on the land in suit as provided by sections 203 and 204 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code."

Now it is admitted that no such order of the Collector can be produced. Consequently, there could be no order from which an appeal lay. It seems that the first defendant urged that in the absence of the order of the Collector assessing the land, the notice of demand by the Mamlatdar was an order within the meaning of sections 203 and 204. Now the plaintiffs could have appealed to a higher authority objecting to the notice of demand issued by the Mamlatdar, but it does not follow that because they could have endeavoured by a resort to higher authority to get that notice of demand revoked, therefore, it was an order within the meaning of sections 203 and 204 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code. The learned Judge on this question says:

"Then it was contended that the notice of demand issued by the Mamlatdar was not an 'order.' Considering the number of years for which the dispute about these lands has been continuing one would suppose that before the Mamlatdar issued this notice there must have been a formal order by some Revenue Officer directing this to be done. But if there was such an order it has not been brought to the notice of the Court, and the learned Pleader for the defendants, in arguing the issue, treats the demand notice as if it was the order and nothing else. In my opinion, it is an order within the meaning of sections 203 and 204 of the Land Revenue Code. I see no reason to hold that the word "order" used in those sections was meant to be understood in a narrow or technical sense, as a formal order passed after judicial inquiry or anything of that kind. A notice of demand is in effect an order to pay."

Now it may be said that a notice of demand which, if not complied with, can be made effective by execution proceedings, may be considered as akin to an order, but that could only be because of the results following from it. But it is not strictly logical to find that because the same results follow from two particular kinds of documents, therefore, the documents are of the same kind also. One has to look to the wording of the document; and it appears to us that it would be going too far to say that this notice of demand, which admittedly is the natural consequence of an order imposing assessment upon land, can be treated as an order or decision within the meaning of sections 203 and 204 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code. The whole question regarding this demand of land revenue is somewhat involved in mystery, as the plaintiffs were allowed to continue to hold the land rent-free, and yet apparently no opportunity was given to them, after the demand to pay land assessment was issued, to state their case for their being allowed to continue to hold rent-free, whether the land was relinquished or not. It seems to us this is a case to which section 11 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act does not apply, and that the suit would lie. The decree dismissing the suit must be set aside, and the suit must be remanded to the lower Court to be heard on its merits. The plaintiffs to get their costs of the appeal. Costs in the lower Court to be costs in the cause.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Sialkot, dated the 28th April 1921, affirming that of the Munsif, First Class, Daska, District Sialkot, dated the 3rd February 1921.

Mr. Badr-ud Din, Kureshi, and Babu Joti Sarup, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs were given a decree for pre-emption of the land in suit subject to the payment of Rs. 20 by the 5th March 1921. They appealed contending that the real price was only Rs. 92, and the District Judge on the 4th March remanded the case under O. XLI, r. 23, Civil Procedure Code, for a finding as to the market value of the land but when the case came before him again on the 28th April he dismissed the appeal on the ground that as the plaintiffs had not paid the money as required by the decree their suit stood dismissed. They have filed a second appeal in this Court, and it is clear that the appeal must be accepted.

It was held by a Full Bench in Thakur Das v. Tulsi Das (1) that non-compliance with a pre-emption decree was not fatal to the further prosecution by the pre-emptor of his appeal, as section 214 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 was to be read subject to the provisions of the law of appeal, and that ruling was followed in Malik Akbar Ali v. Hassan Ali (2).

I accordingly accept this appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and remand the case to that Court under O. XLI, r. 23, Civil Procedure Code, Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879).

s. 10 A, scope of.

The provisions of section 10A of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act are not limited in their scope to suits of the description mentioned in section 3, clauses (w), (y), z: those provisions are applicable to every suit to which an agriculturist is a party, and in which there is some transaction in issue entered into by such agriculturist, or the person, if any, through whom he claims, which is of such a nature that the rights and liabilities of the parties thereunder are triable wholly or in part under Chapter III of the Act. Mr. H. B. Gumaste, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff filed this suit for partition of certain lands and houses and moveables at Shirhatti in Athni Taluka. Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 were his bhaubands. The other defendants were alleged to be aliens of some of the lands. Defendant No. 4 did not appear at the trial. The suit was decreed. Thereafter, defendant No. 4 got the decree set aside to the extent of the Land Survey Number 156, which is said to have been transferred to him by the sale-deed Exhibit 115 in 1913. The plaintiff alleged that the transfer was really a mortgage, and that, therefore, the land was still owned by his family and was partible.

In the Trial Court the issue was whether the sale relied on by the defendant No. 4 was really a mortgage. It does not seem to have been suggested there that that issue could not be tried, or that section 10A of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act was not applicable to the case. But in first appeal that point was taken. The learned Judge said :

"The only question is, whether the words 'whenever it is urged at any stage of any suit or proceeding' in section 10A are to be so construed as to confine the meaning of the words 'any suit or proceeding' specifically to a suit of the description mentioned in section 3, clauses (w), (y), and (z). Section 12 and section 13 are in terms restricted to those suits, but section 10A, enacted in the same Chapter, provides for 'any suit or proceeding.' All that is necessary is that the transaction in issue should be of such a nature as to make it amenable to the operation of sections 12 and 13. I see no reason for cutting down the scope of the words 'any suit or proceeding' in section 10A, and limiting it to the four corners of the suits provided for in section 12. Section 10A was, it would appear, deliberately given a wider scope. The words 'any suit' have, therefore, to be read in their ordinary sense."

It seems to me that when the provisions of section 12 were specifically limited to any suit of the description mentioned in section 3, clauses (w), (y) or (z), if it had been intended to limit the provisions of section 10A to suits of that description, similar words would have been used instead of the words "in any suit or proceeding." But for the section to be applicable it is only necessary that an agriculturist must be a party to the suit and that some transaction shall be in issue entered into by such agriculturist or the person, if any, through whom he claims, which shall be of such a nature that the rights and liabilities of the parties thereunder are triable wholly or in part under Chapter III of the Act. The illustration (a) makes this clear:—If a landlord sues for possession of land leased by him to an agriculturist, such suit is not one of the suits referred to in section 2, clauses (w), (y), and (z). In a suit on a lease, if the defendant alleges that he mortgaged the land with possession to the lessor, who is entitled to its possession only as such mortgagee and not as owner, and asks that he may be allowed to redeem the mortgage without being ejected, then, there is a transaction in issue such as is referred to in section 10A, and the Court may admit evidence on this allegation, and if satisfied that it is correct, may decline to eject the defendant as tenant, and allow the suit to be converted into one for redemption of the mortgaged property. Therefore, the fact that there is some such transaction in issue in a suit to which an agriculturist is a party renders section 10A applicable whatever the nature of the suit may be. Now it seems to me to be clear that this was a suit for partition which was resisted by the fourth defendant on the ground that a part of the property had been sold to him, so the Court was entitled to take evidence with regard to the real nature of the transaction, and decide whether or not, the transaction was a sale as contended for by the fourth defendant, or a mortgage as alleged by the plaintiff, and having found that it was not a sale but a mortgage, then the Court was entitled to treat the case as against the fourth defendant as a suit for redemption. The Court apparently did not take that course but left the mortgagee-appellant to his remedy by another suit. As the parties are agreeable now that we should pass orders as if the plaintiff was asking for a redemption of the mortgage from the fourth defendant, while dismissing the appeal by the fourth defendant against the decree for partition, we direct that the suit should be remanded to the Trial Court for taking an account under section 15B of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act of the mortgage Exhibit 115 of the year 1913. We dismiss the appeal with costs and remand the suit to the Trial Court to pass a redemption decree. Costs in remand to be costs in the cause.

COXAJEE, J.—I agree. In this second appeal it is urged on behalf of the appellant that the lower Courts erred in law in inquiring into the nature and character of the transaction in question. The contention is that the operation of section 10A of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act should be confined to that limited class of suits which is described in section 3 of the Act whereas the present suit being a suit for partition of certain properties does not fall within that class. In my opinion that contention is not well-founded. The material words of the section are: "at any stage of any suit or proceeding to which an agriculturist is a party." These words must be given their ordinary and natural meaning, and the Legislature must be intended to mean what it plainly expresses. The illustrations attached to that section show that it was intended to give full effect to the plain words of the enactment. Neither of the suits referred to in illustrations (a) and (c) falls within the restricted class of suits described in section 3. The illustrations given in the Statute "are of relevance and value in the construction of the text." In Mahomed Syedol Ariffin v. Yeoh Ooi Gark (1) the Privy Council observes: "It would require a very special case to warrant their rejection on the ground of their assumed repugnancy to the sections themselves. It would be the very last resort of construction to make any such assumption. The great usefulness of the illustrations, which have, although not part of the sections, been expressly furnished by the Legislature as helpful in the working and application of the Statute, should not be thus impaired." Moreover, a comparison of the language used in sections 10A, 11 and 12, which all occur in the Third Chapter of the Act, yields the same result. For, whereas the words used in section 10A are "any suit or proceeding to which an agriculturist is a party," those used in sections 11 and 12 are "suit of the description mentioned in section 3." That this variation of language is not attributable to a desire of improving the style or of avoiding repeated use of the same words, becomes obvious on a mere reading of sections 11 and 12 themselves. In my opinion, therefore, section 10A has a wider operation than what is contended for on behalf of the appellants; and this construction best harmonizes with the object which the Legislature had in view in passing the enactment.

Instalment decree—Failure to pay one instalment—Subsequent instalments paid—Payment, appropriation of—Court, duty of.

Where a decree directs payment of a certain sum of money by instalments, it is the duty of the Court, when instalments are paid, to appropriate them to the earliest instalment unpaid. The debtor cannot allow such earlier instalment to remain unpaid, unless at the time he makes the payment, the instalment was already barred by limitation. [p. 848, col. 1.]

First appeal from a decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Dharwar, in Dharkhast No. 399 of 1920.

Mr. N. V. Gokhle, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff obtained a decree on an award on the 8th October 1915, whereby it was directed that the defendants should pay to the plaintiff Rs. 14,000 by eleven instalments that the first ten instalments were to be paid by annual instalments of Rs. 1,300 each, and the last instalment was to be one of Rs. 1,000; that the defendants should pay the instalment every year on 1st August to the plaintiff; that the first instalment was to be paid on 1st August 1916; that if the defendants failed to pay any two instalments out of the said instalments, the said two instalments should be paid within six months from the date of default to pay the second instalment; and that in case of failure to pay the said two instalments within six months accordingly, the plaintiff should recover the whole amount of the said two instalments and the future instalments that remained unpaid on that day and costs, by sale of the property mentioned in the deed of mortgage without possession.

The date of the mortgage on which the decree was passed was 8th September 1904. It is quite clear that any personal remedy against the mortgagor would be barred by limitation. The first instalment was paid on the 1st August 1916, but the second one not having been paid, the plaintiff applied in July 1918 for execution of the decree by selling a portion of the mortgaged property to realize the amount of the second instalment. The defendant contended that the property could not be sold unless two instalments were in arrears, and the matter came up to the High Court on appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge allowing execution to proceed: Hanmant Timaji Desai v. Raghavendra Gururao Desai (1). It was held that the application for execution was premature. But from the judgment of Mr. Justice Shah it might be inferred that the Court was of opinion that a suit might have been filed to recover Rs. 1,300, the instalment due, and in that suit a decree might be obtained for sale of the mortgaged property or sufficient to satisfy the payment of the instalment in arrear. With due respect, we doubt very much if that was a correct reading of O. XXXIV, r. 14, Civil Procedure Code.

But at present we are concerned with a later Darkhast taken out by the plaintiff by which he sought to recover the instalment which fell due on the 1st August 1917 by attaching other property of the defendant, namely, the decree which he had obtained against one Shrinivas Murhar in the Court of Haveri. The Judge said "the most important question which I have to decide is, therefore, whether plaintiff can proceed now against the persons of the defendants, or their property other than that mortgaged to him in Exhibit 4," and he found that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount claimed either from the persons of the defendants or from any of the property of their excepting the mortgaged property in Exhibit 4.

It was eventually found that the decree which was attached had been fully satisfied. Therefore, in the ordinary course, the Darkhast would fall to the ground. But the point decided against the defendants was that in the case of any one instalment remaining unpaid after the due date, the plaintiff could execute against the persons of the defendants or against any property belonging to them other than the mortgaged property. This is an important question, and it appears to us that it was wrongly decided by the Court below.

BHAGAT RAM U. SAHIB DEVI.

It seems clear that where the decree only gives the mortgagee a remedy against the mortgaged property, the personal remedy on the money claim against the mortgagor being barred, the only way in which the mortgagee can recover his money is by sale of the mortgaged property. The decree directs that execution should only issue against the mortgaged property in the event of two instalments being in arrears for six months, and it may be that if one instalment remains in arrear, and the plaintiff may be running the risk of losing that instalment, he would be entitled to file a suit for the payment of that instalment, which could be recovered by sale of the mortgaged property; and it seems if the decree is construed strictly that would be the only way in which he could recover the last instalment, the others having been duly paid, since it could not be said that two instalments were in arrears, as was the sole condition under the decree on which the sale could be directed.

However, it is not necessary to decide that point at present. But it seems that although four instalments had been paid under the decree, the last three instalments had been credited to the instalments for 1918, 1919 and 1920, leaving the instalment for 1917 still unpaid. The result might be that recovery of that instalment, if the remaining instalments were paid according to due dates, would become barred entirely, and we do not think that that was the intention of the Court when the decree was drawn up. It would be the duty of the Court, when instalments are paid, to appropriate them to the earliest instalment unpaid. The debtor cannot allow such earlier instalment to remain unpaid, unless at the time he makes the payment the instalment was already barred by limitation. It seems to us, therefore, that this decree should be considered as if instalments up to 1919 had been paid, and the instalment for 1920 remained due. Any instalment paid hereafter will be appropriated according to date, so that as soon as two consecutive instalments are in arrears, then the plaintiff will be entitled to execute by sale of the mortgaged property. The appeal will be allowed and the Darkhast will be amended according to this judgment so as to show that the instalment for 1920 is in arrear, and not the instalment for 1917. The fresh Darkhast now, filed should also be amended according to this judgment. The appellant to get costs of the appeal.

Where a Hindu widow is entitled to receive maintenance out of the estate of her deceased husband, the person who has succeeded to the estate cannot, if he seeks to defraud the widow, by any device in the way of parting with the estate or changing its form, get rid of the liability which has come to him along with the advantage derived from his survivorship, and a transferee taking from him with reason to suppose that the transaction is one originating not in an honest desire to pay off debts, or satisfy claims for which the estate is justly liable, and which it cannot otherwise well meet but in a design to shuffle off a moral and legal liability would, as sharing in the proposed fraud, be prevented from gaining by it, but if, though he knows of the widow's existence and her claim, he buys upon a rational and honest opinion that the sale is one that can be effected without any furtherance of wrong, he has, as against the widow, acquired a title free from the claim which still subsists in full force as against the recipient of the purchase-money [p. 850, col. 1.]

BHAGAT RAM v. SAHIB DEVI.

Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., for the Appellants.

Lala Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Plaintiff-Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for recovery of maintenance and declaration of a charge on two shops. The property in question along with some other properties belonged to one Lok Nath. He died leaving Musammāt Sahib Devi, the plaintiff a widow, and Jiwan Kishore, a son. The latter is the defendant No. 1 in the case. Jiwan Kishore was a boy of twelve years when his father died. He came into the possession of these two shops and the other property on his father's death. He alienated almost all the properties. The two shops were purchased by the defendants. A house which is already mortgaged, is the only property which remains in the possession of Musammāt Sahib Devi, the widow. The family admittedly followed the Hindu Law, and the property is found to have been the self-acquired property of Lok Nath. The deceased was the vendee's pandah and the vendee knew the family well. The plaintiff, Musammāt Sahib Devi, instituted the suit to claim maintenance as a charge on the two shops in question. The plea set up was that there existed no charge on the property under the Hindu Law and that the vendee was the bona fide purchaser for value. Both the Courts below have decreed the suit and the defendants have come up in second appeal to this Court.

The question to be determined is whether the maintenance can be made a charge on the property in the hands of the vendee, who claims to be the bona fide purchaser.

Pandit Sheo Narain has contended on behalf of the appellants that the maintenance of a Hindu widow is not a charge upon the estate of the deceased husband until it is fixed and charged upon the estate by a decree or by agreement, and the widow's right is liable to be defeated by a transfer of the husband's property to a bona fide purchaser for value even with knowledge of the widow's claim for maintenance, unless the transfer has been made with the intention of defeating the widow's claim. In support of this argument he has relied upon a large number of cases out of which the following may be mentioned:—

Ram Kunwar v. Ram Dai (1), Bharatpur State v. Gopal Dei (2), Manilal v. Bai Tara (3), Parvati Devanna Jagadal v. Shrinivas Ramchandra Patil (4) and Daulat Ram v. Champz (5).

On these authorities the crucial question to be determined is whether the vendee in this case was a bona fide purchaser. This was decided by the Trial Court in the negative. It found that the vendee was well-acquainted with the circumstances of the family; that the property inherited by Jiwan Kishore was only limited; that Jiwan Kishore incurred debts for immoral purposes; and that while purchasing the shops the vendee was warned that the widow had set up a claim for maintenance. The vendee admitted that he was so warned by Lala Munna Lal, Secretary, District Board, of the plaintiff's rights, but that he purchased the shops as they were situated adjacent to his house. From the above circumstances the Court of first instance concluded that the vendee was well-acquainted with the character of Jiwan Kishore also. Having taken the above circumstances into consideration the Court held that the vendee was not a bona fide purchaser. This finding of the Trial Court was challenged in appeal and the argument put forward was, firstly, that the vendee was a bona fide purchaser and, secondly, that Jiwan Kishore, defendant No. 1, had other property out of which he should support his mother. The lower Appellate Court agreed with the finding of the First Court and repelled the plea that the vendee was a bona fide purchaser.

It was strongly contended by Pandit Sheo Narain that there was only a general charge for maintenance on the property, and that there being no specific charge on the shops in question and the vendee being a bona fide purchaser was not affected by the notice of the fact that the widow had a claim for maintenance. The leading case on the point is admittedly the case of Lakshman Ramchandra Joshi v. Satyabhama Bai (6). The summary of the question decided in that case is given in

NARAYAN LAXMAN CHANDAVADKAR v. GOPALRAO TRIMBAK CHANDAVADKAR.

Gour's Hindu Law at page 447, section 87. Two of the rules, namely, (4) and (5) are thus stated there:—

"(4) That the right may, however, be lost by a transfer made for legal necessity or for a purpose binding upon the family in which case the question of notice is immaterial. Even a transferee who takes with a notice of the claim would hold it free from it."

"(5) That where the property is limited, the transferee is bound to enquire whether there is any claim for maintenance or residence, and his failure to do so would be tantamount to notice within the meaning of section 3 of the Transfer of Property Act and of the Trusts Act."

In the Bombay case referred to above Mr. Justice West, after dismissing the case-law and the text, arrived at the following conclusion:—

"If he (vendor) sought to defraud her, he could not indeed by any device in the way of parting with the estate, or changing its form, get rid of the liability which had come to him along with the advantage derived from his survivorship; and Lakshman (vendee)—taking from him with reason to suppose that the transaction was one originating not in an honest desire to pay off debts, or satisfy claims for which the estate was justly liable, and which it could not otherwise well meet, but in a design to shuffle off a moral and legal liability—would, as sharing in the proposed fraud, be prevented from gaining by it; but if, though he knew of the widow's existence and her claim, he bought upon a rational and honest opinion that the sale was one that could be effected without any furtherance of wrong, he has, as against the plaintiff, acquired a title free from the claim which still subsists in full force as against the recipient of the purchase-money."

The Judges in that case remanded the case for a re-trial, as they thought that having regard to the observations made in their judgment the following questions required determination before the final decision of the case, namely, (1) was the sale justifiable under the circumstances? (2) Was it unfairly prejudicial to the widow's rights or remedies, and (3) Was the vendee's purchase made under such circumstances that the property passed to him exonerated from the liability to support the widow.

In the present case the findings recorded by the lower Appellate Court make it clear that the sale was not justifiable and that it had unfairly prejudiced the plaintiff's rights and that the vendee was not a bona fide purchaser. It is not necessary for us to consider in any detail the authorities relied upon by the respective parties, as the law is fully crystallised in the judgment of Mr. Justice West.

We accordingly uphold the decrees of the Courts below and dismiss the appeal with costs.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Baranasibasi Mookerji (with him Babu Krishna Chandra Banerji), for the Petitioner.—I attack the judgment of the learned Small Cause Court Judge as not being in accordance with law. The judgment does not satisfy the requirements laid down in O. XX, r. 4, clause (1). There must be indication in the judgment that the learned Judge has understood and considered all the points. Refers to Malik Rahmat v. Shiva Prasad (1). Will a simple 'yes' or 'no' amount to a decision? A decision is a judicial determination of a case.

[CUMING, J.—There is difference between a decision and reasons for a decision.]

Apart from that, I submit that in this case there has been a gross failure of justice. Is there any indication that the Judge looked into the account-books of the petitioner? Simple ipse dixit will not do. Moreover, I was not given an opportunity to examine the expert? The scope of section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act is much wider than section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. 'Defective procedure' also comes under section 25 of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act. On plaintiff's own case it was not one for settled accounts, but for settlement of accounts, so the Small Causes Court has no jurisdiction to try this suit. See Article 31 of the Second Schedule to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. It is a suit for an account and not on account.

Babu Fatipsoban Chatterji, for the Opposite Party, did not appear.

JUDGMENT.

RULE No. 476 OF 1921.

This Rule is directed against a decree of the Court of Small Causes at Sealdah. It is urged that the judgment passed by the learned Small Cause Court Judge is not in accordance with law.

The learned Judge has specified the points for decision and has entered his findings seriatim under each of the issues mentioned by him. We think he has complied with the provisions of O. XX, r. 4, clause 1.

The next point urged is with regard to the defendant not having been given a sufficient opportunity of calling a handwriting expert. There was an application for review before the learned Judge and the reason he has given in his judgment on that application affords a complete answer to this objection.

It is also argued that the present suit being one for account is not cognizable by the Small Cause Court. It appears from the judgment of the learned Judge that the plaintiff's case was that the defendant acknowledged the plaintiff's dues to be Rs. 522-1-6 for which the suit was brought. An issue was framed by the learned Judge that "did the defendant acknowledge the plaintiff's dues to be Rs. 522-1-6," and his decision on that issue is that the defendant acknowledged the plaintiff's dues to be Rs. 522-1-6. Such being the case, the Small Cause Court was quite competent to try this suit.

We are of opinion that the Court below has not committed any error of law within the meaning of section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act so as to invite our intervention with the decree.

Mr. Campbell (with him Messrs. Crawford, Bayley & Co.), for the Appellant.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—This is an appeal from the decree of the Assistant Judge of Ahmedabad confirming the decree passed against the original first defendant by the First Class Subordinate Judge.

The plaintiff sued the East Indian Railway Company and the Bombay Baroda and Central India Railway Company to recover Rs. 877-11-7, the value of a bale of goods known as Malidas of German make, which was consigned in October 1915 by the plaintiff's agent from Howrah to Ahmedabad, and lost in transit. The first defendant Company, relying on the fact that the plaintiff in his letter of the 23rd December 1915 described the goods in the bale as 170 pieces Shawls, contended that they came within the excepted articles referred to in section 75 of Act IX of 1890 and as the consignor had failed to describe the nature of the goods and pay the proper rate for them, the Company was not liable.

The evidence shows that the goods were described as Malidas in the plaintiff's account-books, and that each piece was worth Rs. 5-5-0. The Subordinate Judge, relying on the decision in Sarat Chandra Bose v. Secretary of State for India (1), held that the term 'Shawls' in the Second Schedule to the Indian Railways Act did not apply to these cheap goods which were not even manufactured when the Act of 1854 was passed, and so section 75 did not apply. The term "Shawls" in the Schedule was meant to apply to valuable Shawls from Kashmir and other places. Accordingly the suit was decreed against the first defendant Company and dismissed as against the second defendant Company but without costs. In appeal the Assistant Judge said:

"The accounts of plaintiff and his agent show that the goods consigned were Malidas and not Shawls. The goods do not fall under section 75, Schedule II. There is ample other evidence to support the same conclusion. The construction of the law is not favourable to defendant according to decided cases considering the price and the quality of goods."

We have had before us a specimen of the goods contained in the missing bale. It is obviously a Shawl within the ordinary meaning of the word as used in the English language.

It was argued that both Courts had found as a question of fact that the goods were not Shawls and that being so no second appeal lay.

Exactly the same question arose in Sarat Chandra Bose v. Secretary of State for India (1) which was a second appeal and the Court considered that the real question at issue was whether the word "Shawls" in the Second Schedule of the Indian Railways Act was meant to apply to all Shawls, or only Shawls of a particular material and value, and not whether 'Alwans' were or were not Shawls. The term 'Shawls' would appear at first sight to be used generally as applicable to all Shawls, but it is a question of law whether in its particular context it was not used in a restricted sense.

Now the object of section 75 was to protect the Railway Companies from claims made in respect of loss or damage to articles of a special value, unless the nature of such articles had been previously declared and a special rate paid for the carriage thereof. The words "special value" are misleading as many of the articles detailed in the Second Schedule have no special value and protection was really necessary on account of their special nature, so that the Railway Companies might be put on notice to take precautions to ensure their safe transit. Some of the articles enumerated can be of great value within a small compass, others though large can be easily damaged. There is no general principle applicable to all except that they require special care by the Railway Company when performing the contract of carriage. An half anna postage stamp, a double bass, a diamond, a watch must all be declared provided the value of the package is over 100 rupees, so that the intrinsic value is no test. The plaintiff, therefore, must rest his case on the contention that the word 'Shawls' in the Second Schedule must mean Shawls of a particular kind. It was suggested that when the word was used in the first Indian Railways Act of 1854, only Indian Shawls could have been referred to, and that the only Indian Shawls known in those days were valuable Kashmir or Persian Shawls. That is no doubt correct as Shawls are not mentioned among the articles of special value in the corresponding section of the Carriers Act of 1830.

It was unfortunate when the Indian Railways Act of 1890 was passed that it was not recognised, that all kinds of imported Shawls, whether valuable or of a cheaper quality, might be given to the Railway Companies for carriage, so that the retainer of the general term "Shawls" in the Second Schedule might lead to a demand by the Railway Companies that such Shawls should be declared. Though at one time I was of opinion that a great deal could be said to justify that demand, and that the obvious way to remove the difficulties which arise in cases like the present one was to amend the Second Schedule so as to make it clear that only valuable Indian Shawls were intended to be included therein, I am not prepared to differ from the view taken by my brother Shah which is in accordance with the decision in Sarat Chandra Bose's case (1), and opposed to the view of Stuart, J. in Shudarshan v. East Indian Railway Company (2). It cannot be denied that this case of cheap imported Shawls is much like any other case of woollen goods, and it would not naturally occur to the consignor that it would have to be declared, in order that, if lost, its value might be recovered. It would be certainly desirable that the term "Shawls" in the Second Schedule should now be amended so as to make it clear that only Shawls of special value are intended to require to be declared. I should think it would then be difficult for the Railway Companies to make out any good grounds for including Malidas in the Schedule.

I think both appeals should be dismissed with costs.

SHAH, J.—The only question in this second appeal is whether the piece goods contained in the missing parcel were

(2) 52 Ind. Cas. 644; 42 A. 76; 17 A. L. J. 1031.

EAST INDIAN RY. CO. v. DATABHAI VANMALIDAS,

'Shawls' within the meaning of Schedule II of the Indian Railways Act IX of 1890.

The importance of the question is that if the parcel contained 'Shawls' the Railway Company would not be liable for the loss, as the declaration required by section 75 of the Indian Railways Act was not made by the consignor. On the other hand if the goods were not Shawls, the Company would be liable for the loss of the goods delivered for carriage under section 72 of the Indian Railways Act.

The lower Courts have held that the articles contained in the parcel, of which a sample has been produced in the case, were not 'Shawls.'

It has been urged on behalf of the appellant Company that the word 'Shawls' is used in a general and wide sense, and that it includes oblong pieces of any material which can be used as 'Shawls' though cheap and not satisfying the requirement of the word 'Shawl' in a restricted sense as used and understood in India. The dictionary meaning of the word as understood in the English language is relied upon as indicating the sense in which the word is used in the Schedule. The appellant relies upon the observations in Shudarshan v. East Indian Railway Company (2) and contends that the view taken in Sarat Chandra Bose v. Secretary of State for India (1), of the meaning of the word 'Shawls' is erroneous.

On behalf of the respondent it is urged that it is really a question of fact and that the finding of the lower Appellate Court based on the evidence in the case that the sample before the Court is not a 'Shawl' within the meaning of the Schedule ought to be accepted in second appeal. It is further urged that in view of the scope and object of section 75, the restricted meaning of the word 'Shawl' should be accepted. The respondent relies upon the decision in Sarat Chandra Bose's case (1).

After a careful consideration of the arguments on both sides, I have come to the conclusion that the question set forth at the outset should be answered in the negative.

It is in a sense a question of fact whether the particular sample before the Court is a 'Shawl' or not. But in the present case the answer depends upon the meaning of the word 'Shawl.' If the word is interpreted in a restricted sense the article in question would not be a 'Shawl.' If it be interpreted in the wider and more comprehensive sense, it would be a 'Shawl.' Under the circumstances it seems to me that it cannot be treated as a pure question of fact, and that it is necessary for us to consider in second appeal as to what is the proper meaning of the word 'Shawl' as used in Schedule II.

The sample in question is an oblong piece worth Rs. 5-5-0, probably made of rough wool or of mixed material of wool and cotton. It appears to be an imitation of a real Shawl with the marked difference in the price as well as the material of which it is made. The word 'Shawl' is the same as the Persian word 'Shal' and it is commonly used in the same sense in almost all the Indian languages. It is used by the Indian Legislature in an Act applicable to British India. The language of the Act is English. The meaning of the word in Johnson's Persian Dictionary is given as follows:—

"A Shawl or mantle, made of very fine wool of a species of goat common in Tibet. A coarse mantle of wool and goats' hair, worn by dervishes."

The meaning of the word in English is thus stated in Webster's Dictionary:—

"A square or oblong cloth of wool, cotton, silk or other textile or netted fabric used especially by women as a loose covering for the neck and shoulders: Indian Shawl is described as a kind of rich Shawl made in India from the wool of the Cashmere goat. It is woven in pieces, which are sewed together."

The word is more fully dealt with in Murray's Dictionary and I shall quote only two meanings of the word as given there which are material for the present purpose:—

(1) "An article of dress worn by Orientals (commonly as a scarf, turban, or girdle), consisting of an oblong piece of a material manufactured in Kashmir from the hair of the Tibetan 'Shawl-goat.'"

(2) "As the name of an article of clothing worn in Europe and the West, chiefly by women as a covering for the shoulders or, sometimes for the head, originally applied to the imported 'Cashmere Shawl' but in later use extended to denote an oblong or square piece of any textile or netted fabric, whether of wool, silk, cotton or mixture of these."

It would appear that in Persian as well as in the Indian languages the word has a limited and specific meaning which would exclude the sample such as we have in the present case from its scope. The Indian Legislature, however, has used the word in an Act in the English language. Though it is not improbable that it may have been used by the Legislature as an Indian word in the sense given to it in the Indian language, we have to see what its meaning is in the English language. The first meaning as given in Murray's Dictionary in substance is the same as that in the Indian languages. The second meaning as given above is much wider and would include in its scope any oblong piece of cloth made of silk, wool, cotton or mixture thereof. When the word has two meanings, one of a restrictive nature and the other of a comprehensive character, and when we have to decide which of the two meanings would be appropriate, it seems to me that it is necessary to turn not only to the context in relation to which the word is used but also to the scope and object of section 75 and to the reason of the rule contained therein. I think it is open to the Court to consider these elements in deciding which of the two meanings is to be accepted as representing the true meaning of the word used in the Schedule. The section is enacted to lay down certain conditions as to articles of special value which must be fulfilled before any liability can be attached to a Railway Administration for the loss thereof. The general responsibility of the Railway Administration in respect of the goods delivered for carriage is defined by section 72: and section 75 contains an exceptional rule applicable to certain articles of special value mentioned in the Second Schedule. It is clear to my mind that 'Shawls' in the comprehensive sense given thereto in the English language would not necessarily be an article of special value. A Shawl in restricted sense is clearly an article of special value. It makes no difference to my mind as to how or where the article is manufactured. But what does matter to my mind is the stuff of which it is made. The price of the article would not directly matter: but it would be relevant as indicating the real nature of the material used. The reason of the rule contained in section 75 can apply to 'Shawls' in the restricted sense and not to Shawls in the comprehensive sense of the term. I, therefore, draw the inference, and I think it is an inference open to the Court to draw in view of the origin and use of the word as also its apparent ambiguity in relation to the context, that the word 'Shawls' is used there in the restricted sense as indicated in Murray's Dictionary.

It is clear that the article in question does not satisfy that description, and that the conclusion reached by the lower Courts that the missing parcel did not contain 'Shawls' is right.

It is not necessary to express any opinion as to whether 'Alwans' and 'Malidas' can be 'Shawls' in this restricted sense. In order to be able to decide this question, I should like to know more about the meanings attached to these words by the dealers in different markets than it is possible to know on the present record. Taking the dictionary meanings of these terms in Urdu 'Alwans' and 'Malidas' may be Shawls in the proper sense of the word. I do not think, and it is not contended, that the use of the word 'Malidas' by the plaintiff in his accounts and of the word 'Shawls' in the correspondence can affect the conclusion that the article in question is not a 'Shawl.'

I have considered the observations of Stuart, J., in Shudarshan v. East Indian Railway Company (2). The actual decision in that case has no bearing upon the point arising in this case. It may not matter whether a particular Shawl is a machine-made or hand-made article. The learned Judge in that case had to decide whether the word 'lace' as used in the Schedule included machine-made lace also. The observations of the learned Judge on the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Sarat Chandra Bose v. Secretary of State for India (1), as to the meaning of the word 'Shawls' were not, strictly speaking, necessary for the decision in that case and while I agree that the SUNDAR DAS V. PURAN SINGH.

Court has to consider the meaning of the word used by the Legislature and not to look to the discussions and views of the legislative authorities. I do not think that the Court is absolved from the duty of determining which of the two meanings, which the word may bear, is to be accepted. The origin of the word 'lace' is different. In my opinion different considerations arise in determining the true meaning of 'Shawls' as used in the Schedule. There may or may not be any ambiguity about the meaning of the word 'lace': but it does not follow that there is no ambiguity about the meaning of the word 'Shawls.' Where the question is whether the word 'Shawl'—a word of Indian origin and of extensive use in India as an Indian word—has one meaning or the other, the considerations to which I have referred naturally arise. On the whole I am satisfied that the conclusion reached in Sarat Chandra Bose's case (1) as to the meaning of the word 'Shawls' is right.

I would, therefore, confirm the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

In the view I take of Second Appeal No. 321 I think that the Second Appeal No. 363 should also be dismissed with costs. It relates only to the order of costs in the Trial Court: and I see no good reason to disturb that order.

Lala Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Petitioners.

Lala Hukam Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sued the defendants on a hundi for Rs. 300. The hundi was found to be insufficiently stamped, and the plaintiffs asked to be allowed to amend their plaint so that they might sue on the original consideration. Leave was refused by the Trial Court, but was granted by this Court in revision, and the plaintiffs accordingly amended their plaint and sued on a former hundi, which was for Rs. 600 and bears an endorsement to the effect that Rs. 300 had been paid in cash and a new hundi executed for Rs. 300.

The Judge of the Small Cause Court has dismissed the suit, holding, on the authority of Bhagat Ram Ganpat Rai v. Chhajju Ram (1), that the plaintiffs cannot fall back on the prior hundi. They have applied to this Court for revision.

In the case relied on by the learned Judge, where an insufficiently stamped hundi had been executed in lieu of the balance due on a mortgage-deed, which was cancelled by an endorsement to the effect that the whole of the mortgage money had been received in full, it was held that the plaintiff could not recover the sum due to him on the basis of the mortgage-deed.

In Jagan Prasad v. Indermal (2), however, which is a case exactly in point, it was held, that where an insufficiently stamped hundi was given in renewal of a prior hundi the plaintiff could fall back on the prior hundi.

The general principle to be followed is enunciated in Sheikh Akbar v. Sheikh Khan (3). The test in a case of this kind is whether the original cause of action exists independently of the hundi subsequently executed; if it does the creditor can ordinarily sue on it, otherwise not. In the present case the hundi for Rs. 600 gave the plaintiff a cause of action which is quite independent of the subsequent hundi, and I do not see why the suit on the former hundi should not be maintainable.

Counsel for the respondent contends that section 62 of the Contract Act, which provides that if the parties to a contract agree to substitute a new contract for it, or to rescind or alter it, the original contract need not be performed, debars the plaintiff from maintaining the claim on the prior hundi. I cannot agree with this contention. In Kuttayan Ohetty v. Palaniappa Ohetty (4), it was held that the giving of a hundi in payment of the price of goods sold operates as a payment, only if the hundi is honoured, and that if the hundi is dishonoured the right to sue on the original cause of action is revived. So in the present case the giving of the second hundi would have operated as a discharge of the first one only if the new contract could have been legally enforced. As the plaintiff cannot sue on the second hundi owing to its not being properly stamped he can fall back on the first one, and section 62 of the Contract Act is not a bar to his doing so.

I accept this application, set aside the decree of the lower Court, and remand the case to that Court under O. XLI, r. 23, Civil Procedure Code, for fresh disposal according to law. The Court-fee on the application will be refunded. Other costs will be costs in the case.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued to recover from the second defendant the price of the materials of the house mentioned in the plaint, and also to recover possession of the house site and Hital, etc., appertaining thereto, the said properties having been purchased by defendant No. 2 at a Court sale held at the instance of defendant No. 1 in Darkhast No. 295 of 1914. The suit was decreed in the Trial Court, but was dismissed in appeal. The facts, as set out by the learned District Judge, show that one Ramayya, the husband of the plaintiff, owned eight properties. He mortgaged seven of them to one Venkata Bhatta and four years later he mortgaged all the eight properties to one Tammanna Bhatta. In 1910, the plaintiff filed a suit to redeem this latter mortgage, and in her plaint she recited the fact of the former mortgage, but by mistake in describing the property mortgaged to Venkata Bhatta, she included the eighth property, which was only subject to the second mortgage. In the redemption suit a decree was passed that the plaintiff should pay to Rudrappa, the transferee from Venkata Bhatta, who had been made a party, the amount due under the first mortgage and costs by annual instalments, with liberty to bring the mortgaged property to sale in default. In the decree was included the eighth property, which, as a matter of fact, was not mortgaged originally to Venkata Bhatta. As the plaintiff did not pay her instalments, the first defendant (her husband Rudrappa having died) took out execution and brought all the property to sale. At the Court-sale the second defendant was the purchaser.

This is not a suit to set aside that sale, but a suit to recover from the purchaser what he had purchased at the Court-sale, and it is difficult to see how such a suit could lie until the Court sale is set aside, unless it could be considered as a nullity. Now it was entirely the fault of the plaintiff that she allowed the decree to be passed, because she must have been aware that the eighth property was entered in the decree for redemption which she obtained with regard to the first mortgage, and she has allowed the Court to sell the eighth property in execution of that decree. So that on the question of mistake, it is perfectly clear that the plaintiff was alone responsible for the eighth property having been sold. It is difficult then to see how she could say that the sale was a nullity. If necessary it would have to be held that the plaintiff was not even entitled to take such a plea.

What is the proper view in such a case when objections are raised to a Court sale, was clearly laid down in Malharjun v. Narhari (1). In that case the Court issued a notice to the wrong party, and not to the party against whom execution was applied for. It was then argued that the Court had no jurisdiction to sell the property, but the Privy Council at page 347 held that—

"[Although the Court made a mistake], a Court has jurisdiction to decide wrong as well as right. If it decides wrong, the wronged party can only take the course prescribed by law for setting matters right and if that course is not taken the decision, however wrong, cannot be disturbed. The real complaint here is that the Execution Court construed the Code erroneously. Acting in its duty to make the estate of Nagappa available for payment of his debt, it served with notice a person who did not legally represent the estate, and on objection decided that he did represent it. But to treat such an error as destroying the jurisdiction of the Court is calculated to introduce great confusion into the administration of the law. Their Lordships agree with the view of the learned Chief Justice that a purchaser cannot possibly judge of such matters, even if he knows the fact; and that if he is to be held bound to inquire into the accuracy of the Court's conduct of its own business no purchaser at a Court-sale would be safe. Strangers to a suit are justified in believing that the Court has done that which by the directions of the Code it ought to do."

Then at page 352 their Lordships say :

"The Limitation Act protects bona fide purchasers at judicial sales by providing a short limit of time within which suits may be brought to set them aside. If the protection is to be confined to suits which seek no other relief than a declaration that the sale ought to be set aside, and is to vanish directly some other relief consequential on the annulment of the sale is sought, the protection is exceedingly small."

Obviously, then, the plaintiff being perfectly well aware of the facts, being aware that the Court had sold the property which was not contained in Venkata Bhatta's mortgage, had thirty days from the date of the sale to apply to have the sale set aside.

There is no question of fraud in this case, and, therefore, Art. 95 of the Indian Limitation Act cannot possibly apply. It has been argued that the case comes under Art. 96 on the ground that the plaintiff is seeking for relief on the ground of mistake. But although that Article might apply to the plaintiff's suit as originally framed it cannot apply to this suit as it ought to have been framed seeing that the Court-sale has to be set aside, and cannot be considered as a nullity. Therefore, the case is governed by Art. 12 of the First

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, O. J.—In this case both the plaintiff and some of the defendants have preferred appeals from the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Muzaffarpur dated the 24th January 1919. The question for decision is whether the defendants Nos 2 to 6 have acquired a raiya interest in the lands in suit or whether the plaintiff is entitled to possession of them as her bakashi lands.

The plaintiff is the widow of the late Raja Mohan Bikram Sah, proprietor of the Ramnaggar Raj, who died without male issue in 1912. On her husband's death the plaintiff succeeded to his estate, included in which are the two villages of Manchangwa and Ghoraghat. From the year 1889 these villages together with others with which we are not concerned were leased under three successive registered ticca patta granted by the late Raja. The ticcadar under the first lease was one Dowlat Singh who held for a period of five years which expired in September 1894. The second lease which was for a period of 10 years from September 1894 to September 1904 was granted to Babu Pratapdhuj Singh also known as Jung Bahadur Singh, the defendant No. 1 in the suit. The third was for a term of 11 years in continuation of the previous one in favour of the defendant No. 1 and expired on the 23rd September 1915. The leases provided that the lessee should not, without the permission of the Raja Sahib, dismiss the Patwari of the villages already holding appointment who, it appears, was employed and paid by the Raja, and if the lessee should employ his own Matsuddi in writing collection papers, etc., he was to furnish a copy of them to the lessor, obtaining a receipt for the same from the registered Patwari, and to file six monthly jamabandi papers in the office of the Raja. Without permission of the Raja Sahib the lessee was not to settle lands at a low rate of rent with his dependents or any raiya. Otherwise there were no special features in the lease calling for attention.

It is not contended that the ticcadar could himself acquire any raiya interest in any of the demised property during the term of the lease. It is also not disputed that apart from the restriction as to not settling the lands at a low rate the ticcadar could settle tenants upon any part of the land other than the landlord's serait.

CHATTER KUMARI DEBI 0, PRATAPDHUJ SINGH.

When the last lease expired in 1915 the plaintiff took over possession from the ticcadar Pratapdhuj Singh and claimed that the lands in dispute, amounting to about 110 bighas altogether in the two Mauzas, which were then occupied by the defendants Nos. 2 to 6, were really the bakasht of the ticcadar, and, as such returned into her direct possession as malik on the termination of the lease.

It is the plaintiff's case that the lands were never in fact settled with the defendants Nos. 2 to 6, or, if they were, that the settlement was merely colourable and made by the ticcadar for his own benefit in the farsi names of the defendants Nos. 2 to 6, so that he might retain a raiya interest in the disputed lands at a low rate of rent after his lease terminated.

The defendant No. 1 disclaims all interest in the disputed lands and denies that the other defendants were his farsidars. It is the defendants' case that about 32 bighas odd in Manhangwa and 15 bighas odd in Ghoraghat were the ancestral kaimi holding of the defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 who form a joint family and that these lands were recorded in the names of their respective fathers in the Record of Rights prepared at the Cadastral Survey and Settlement operations in 1893, having been in their family before the defendant No. 1 acquired any interest in the land. These three defendants further acquired by settlement from Pratapdhuj Singh, the ticcadar, a further plot of 3 bighas and some odd cottahs in Manhangwa in 1905. In July of the same year Munder Singh, now deceased, the father of the defendants Nos. 3 and 4, endeavoured to obtain some Parti lands in the Mauzas from the ticcadar for the purpose of grazing his bullocks but without success. He thereupon applied to the Raja, with whom he was on friendly terms, to intercede with the ticcadar. The Raja thereupon issued a Parwana dated the 25th July 1905 addressed to Pratapdhuj Singh requesting him to arrange that Munder Singh should get about 20 to 25 bighas of Parti land for grazing his plough bullocks and storing straw, adding that: "If, at any time, the said Babu bring the said Parti land under his cultivation contrary to these terms, then you can realise from the said Babu a fair and proper rent for the said Parti land." On receipt of this document Pratapdhuj Singh told the Patwari Amar Lal, who, as already stated, was a Raj servant, to settle some lands with Munder Singh on the terms mentioned in the Parwana which accordingly was done. In fact the land settled with Munder Singh in this manner was altogether between 38 and 39 bighas in the two villages. No rent was to be paid for it, but if it should be brought under cultivation then a fair rent was to be assessed. The defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 thus came to have altogether a holding of about 93 bighas in the two Mauzas and this land has been recorded in their names in the Record of Rights prepared at the Revisional Settlement and finally published in 1916. The remainder of the disputed land, amounting to about 17 bighas, was settled with the defendants Nos. 5 and 6 by the ticcadar in small plots at different times between the years 1899 and 1913. For all this land, except that which was settled in accordance with the terms of the Parwana, rent was payable by the tenants to the ticcadar and the sum is in each case recorded in the Record of Rights.

During the Revisional Settlement operations which began before the last ticca lease terminated, the plaintiff objected to the lands being recorded in the names of the defendants as *raiya*s and claimed them as *ticcadar*s bakasht, contending that the defendants were merely the farsidars of the ticcadar. The objection was heard in February 1914 by the Khanapuri Officer who, after taking evidence on behalf of both parties, dismissed the objection. His order was subsequently confirmed by the attestation officer. An objection by the plaintiff under section 103A of the Bengal Tenancy Act was subsequently filed and was heard before the Assistant Settlement Officer in May 1915. That officer, after hearing the evidence, dismissed the petition and the names of the defendants were entered as *raiya*s in the Record of Rights finally published in January 1916.

At the trial the plaintiff did not seriously dispute the fact that the lands had been settled with the defendants Nos. 2 to 6 and no serious attempt appears to have been made to rebut the presumption arising from the earlier Record of Rights published in 1898, after the Cadastral Survey, which recorded the 50 bighas as the kaimi kashit of the ancestors of the defendants Nos. 2 to 4. She contended, however, that the settlement was a farzi transaction for the benefit of the ticcadar and that the lands, and especially those more recently settled, were cultivated by the servants of the ticcadar and not by the other defendants. She also questioned the authenticity of the Parwana issued by the Raja in 1905 and disputed the bona fides of the settlement alleged to have been made in consequence thereof. She also contended that as no rent had been settled for what may be called the Parwana lands the relationship of landlord and tenant had not been created between the parties with respect to these lands. As the lands recorded in the Cadastral Survey as the kashit of the defendants' ancestors were not settled with them by the defendant No. 1, it was suggested that Dowlat Singh, the ticcadar under the first lease, granted by the Raja for the years 1889 to 1894, was merely the servant and benamidar of Pratapdhuj Singh and that the settlement was made by Dowlat Singh in the interests of Pratapdhuj.

The learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit as to all the lands except the 30 bighas of Parti land settled with the defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 in pursuance of the Parwana of 1905 for which he gave a decree in favour of the plaintiff.

From this decision the defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 have appealed and contend that the learned Subordinate Judge has gone wrong both in law and fact in holding that no proper settlement of these lands was made with them. The plaintiff has also appealed and contends that the defendants Nos. 2 to 6 were the farzidars of the defendant No. 1 and further that the settlement by the latter was contrary to the terms of the ticea patia executed in his favour and is not binding on the plaintiff.

It will be convenient to deal first with the plaintiff's appeal which is numbered 89 of 1919.

Apart from the Parwana lands which were settled in 1905, and for which the plaintiff has got a decree in her favour, it will be convenient to remember that the lands, the subject of the plaintiff's appeal, consist of (1) 50 bighas or thereabouts claimed as the ancestral kashit of the defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4, which may be referred to as the ancestral lands, and, (2) 3 bighas and some odd cottahs settled with the defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 by the defendant No. 1 in 1905 and about 18 bighas settled with the defendants Nos. 6 and 7 at different times between 1889 and 1913.

In support of her contention that the lands were in fact cultivated by, or on behalf of, the ticcadar the plaintiff called seven witnesses whose evidence in chief was of the briefest description and was to the effect that the defendants Nos. 2 to 4 and their fathers before them were on friendly terms with the ticcadar and that the land was in possession of the ticcadar and not of the other defendants. Some of them further stated that the defendants Nos. 5 and 6 were servants of the defendant No. 1. None of these witnesses resided in the villages in question and most of them were servants of the plaintiff. It is manifest from their cross-examination that they were deposing to facts of which they had no real knowledge. Most of them had never been near the disputed land and had to admit that they knew nothing about the affairs either of the defendant No. 1 or the other defendants. One of them Raghbir Missir had been on the disputed land once only. At that time he said the land was vacant and he had never seen the defendant No. 1 there. Another of them, Radha Mohan Lal, says he had been in these villages on three occasions for a short time, that he first came to know of the dispute in 1916, that he cannot say who was working as kashikar on the disputed land, and he did not know on whose behalf the lands were being worked. Another of them, Dip Narain Lal, says he made no enquiries as to who was in possession of the disputed lands but that another man named Elahi Khan had made enquiries and from that it transpired that the defendant No. 1 was in possession. This witness had never been on the disputed land himself nor had he seen the defendant No. 1 there and it is obvious that he had no first-hand knowledge of the matters in dispute. The evidence of the other witnesses was even of less value. This evidence was rejected by the learned Subordinate Judge and, in my opinion, he could not possibly have done otherwise. There was a volume of evidence both documentary and oral to show that the defendants Nos. 2 to 6 and not the defendant No. 1 were the real occupiers. The Record of Rights is also in their favour and it is sufficient to say that the plaintiff has entirely failed to make out a case that the defendants Nos. 2 to 6 were the faraidars of the defendant No. 1. Further there is no evidence to show that the rent assessed for the ancestral lands and the subsequently settled lands was at a low rate. There is likewise no evidence from which it can be inferred that Dowlat Singh, even if he settled the ancestral lands with the defendants' father, held the lease merely as a benamidar for Pratapdhuj Singh. Nor is there anything to show that the ancestral lands were in fact settled by Dowlat. In so far as the plaintiff's appeal is concerned it must, in my opinion, be dismissed with costs to the defendants who have appeared.

The appeal by the defendants Nos. 2 to 4 is numbered 116 of 1919. The question for determination in this appeal is whether there was in fact a settlement of the Parwana lands with the defendants Nos. 2 to 4 and, if so, whether it is binding upon the plaintiff. I have already held that there is nothing in the evidence to show that these defendants were faraidars of Pratapdhuj Singh, and this is in accordance with the learned Subordinate Judges' finding.

He found, however, that the defendants had not made out their title to the Parwana lands partly on the ground that the circumstances under which they were settled were suspicious and partly on the ground that as no rent was immediately payable the relationship of landlord and tenant was not created. He was of opinion that there could be no tenancy unless there was a contract to pay rent. I shall consider these questions separately.

The reasons which led the learned Subordinate Judge to regard the Parwana with suspicion were two. The first was that the Raja would not condescend to write to the ticcadar to settle lands with tenants. The second was that the Raja in 1911 lost his seals and some one must have used them for an improper purpose. From this he concludes that the Parwana of 1905 which bears the impression of the Raja's seals of that date was a forgery. This is the merest surmise and there is no other evidence upon which the theory of forgery rests. Regrettable though it be it is by no means uncommon to find a charge of forgery introduced into the pleadings in this country when the proof is either altogether absent or totally inadequate to support it. The facts proved in the present case are shortly as follows. The Parwana, the material part of which has already been referred to, bears at the top the seal of the Raja which was in use in 1905 and a smaller seal at the end. There can be no doubt as to the genuineness of the seals. The large seal is exactly the same as that appearing in the ticca pattas granted to the defendant No. 1 and on other documents produced which are admittedly genuine and it is proved that the smaller seal was, usually impressed at the end of the Raja's letters. Mr. Jagannath Prasad Pandey, a Professor of Sanskrit in Patna College and a gold medallist of his year, who owns considerable property near Ghoraghat, and whose father and grandfather held the office of Dewan of the Ramnagar Raj, was called as a witness. He had seen papers with the seals of the late Raja and swears to the genuineness of that on the Parwana. He further states that it was the Raja's practice to seal his letters and write the word "Patrashi" in his own hand at the beginning. Both these features appear in the Parwana. It purports to be written by Dineshwar Sahay, as scribe, and bears his signature. He was Peshkar to the late Raja until 1911 when he resigned on account of failing eye-sight. He was called as a witness by the defendants and proved the circumstances under which the Parwana came to be written. He confirms the story as to Munder Singh approaching the Raja, with whom he was on friendly terms, and asking about the land and says that the Raja directed him to write out the Parwana. When it was written the Raja affixed both seals in his presence and wrote the word "Patrashi" at the beginning, as was his custom. This witness further deposes that the Parwana issued by the Raja used to be copied into a register and numbered and that the register was kept in the Raja's record-room. It is nowhere denied that such a register was kept and the practice is one in general use. This witness's evidence, if untrue, could easily have been refuted by the plaintiff by producing the register of that date and showing that no such document was copied therein. The register was not produced. The only suggestion against this witness is that he did not resign but was dismissed. This, however, was denied by him in cross-examination and there is no evidence to support the suggestion. I accept his evidence as that of a witness of truth. Moreover, it is difficult to see why a document executed and sealed in 1905 should be presumed to be spurious because the Raja lost his seals in 1911. Further, on an examination of the story about the seals, the evidence of which is contained in a petition of the Raja addressed to the District Judge of Muzaffarpur, it does not appear that the seals were actually stolen, but merely that the box containing them had been tampered with and a number of currency notes and some gold and jewellery were found missing. The box was discovered to have been opened in September 1910 and in May 1911 the petition, to which I have referred, was sent by the Raja to the District Judge of Muzaffarpur mentioning the loss of the notes, gold and jewellery and stating that as the box, which also contained his seals, had been tampered with, he thought it proper to discontinue using the former seal and to have a new one prepared. He, therefore, asked that information of the above facts should be circulated amongst subordinate officers including Sub-Registrars and, for purposes of identification, he affixed the new seal to his petition. It is obvious from this that the seal itself was not stolen but merely that its further use was discontinued as the box containing it had been broken open and the valuables taken. The object of those who broke open the box was apparently to steal the valuables and the seal being of no intrinsic value was left behind. Had the seal been stolen the Raja would not have said in his petition that he thought it proper to discontinue the use of the former seal and to substitute a new one in its place. The suggestion now made, however, is that whoever broke open the box used the seals to stamp a number of blank papers at the beginning and the end for future use, to be filled in as opportunity offered, and that the Parwana now produced is the first fruits of a fraud begun in 1910. More unlikely things may, no doubt, occasionally happen but it is our plain duty to decide the issues upon the evidence before us and not to reject the evidence on a mere possibility that the truth may not have been disclosed. In face of the clear evidence of Dineshwar Sahay, to say nothing of that of the defendant No. 1 himself, who says that the Parwana was delivered to him and he acted upon it, I am quite unable to give any weight to the bare suggestion, unsupported by any direct evidence, that the Parwana was a spurious document.

The story that the Raja "stooped down to write to the ticcadar to settle lands with the defendant at no rent," to use the language of the learned Subordinate Judge was, in his opinion, a story which could not be believed by a Court of Justice and one which does not appeal to common sense on the face of it. The learned Subordinate Judge's experience of Rajas may have been unfortunate but from what little has been disclosed in the evidence of the Raja's mode of living—he was certainly of a convivial habit I can see no inherent improbability in his writing a letter to his lessee in order to oblige a friend with whose family both he and the Rani were, according to the defendants' evidence which stands uncontradicted, on visiting terms. It must be remembered that both the ticcadar and the defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 are Zemindars and men of substance and some position in the neighbourhood. Moreover, the Parwana is, in my opinion, amply proved by the evidence to have been issued and acted on and with due respect to the learned Subordinate Judge I am not able to accept his reasons, based as they are on mere suspicion, for rejecting it.

The second point on which the learned Subordinate Judge found against the defendants on this part of the case was that as they paid no rent for the Parwana lands they were not tenants of the landlord. From the Parwana it would appear that the lands were originally Parti and were to be settled with the tenant for grazing cattle and storing straw, and that no rent was to be payable as long as the land was used for that purpose but that, if it should be brought under cultivation, a fair rent was to be assessed. The defendant No. 1 in his evidence says he directed the Patwari Amar Lall to settle about 25 bighas of Parti land with Munder Singh and that when the latter sometime later began to cultivate the lands he demanded rent at the rate of Rs. 4 per bigha. The tenant offered a lower rate, viz., that which he paid for the others lands occupied by him. About that time the Settlement operations began and no agreement as to rent was come to before the defendant No. 1's ticca lease expired in 1915. In 1916 the Record of Rights was finally published recording the names of the defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 as *raiya*s after the objection by the plaintiff, already referred to, her husband having in the meantime died. After the Record of Rights it was open to the landlord to have a fair and equitable rent settled for the lands which by that time appear to have been brought under cultivation but this apparently was not done. Instead, the plaintiff instituted the present suit in September 1916. Munder Singh, with whom the settlement was made, died some years ago and cannot be called as a witness. Amar Lall, Patwari, the plaintiff's servant, through whom the settlement was made, was not called to dispute the settlement. On this evidence there can be no room for doubt that the settlement was made as alleged by the defendants. Moreover, the Record of Rights is in their favour and raises a presumption which, in my opinion, so far from being rebutted, is supported by the evidence. The immediate payment of rent is not an essential factor in the creation of a tenancy. It is by no means unusual for waste lands to be granted to a tenant by his landlord with a stipulation that no rent shall be payable until they are brought under cultivation. There is nothing in the Bengal Tenancy Act which prevents such an arrangement. The definition of tenant in section 3 (3) of the Act is "a person who holds land under another person and is, or but for a special contract would be, liable to pay rent for that land to that person." There is no reason why the landlord should not forego the payment of rent in the case of waste lands until they are made fit for cultivation by the labour of the tenant. Such an arrangement is for their mutual benefit. The tenant gets the use of the land for a limited purpose free of rent and gives his labour to render the land more productive to his landlord. The landlord gets the benefit of the tenant's labour which improves the nature of the land and increases its letting value.

References to four cases were given in the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge in support of his view that there can be no tenancy unless there is a contract to pay rent. Two of the cases appear to be wrong references and as their names were not given I have been unable to trace them. Of the other two that of Lyons v. Betts (1), merely lays down that willingness to pay rent does not make a trespasser a tenant. The other Dev Nandan Pershad v. Meghu Mahton (2), is an authority for the proposition that a mere request by the plaintiff to the defendant to give up possession of land and to pay the produce or the value thereof during occupation cannot be regarded as a demand for rent and is not sufficient to create the relationship of landlord and tenant which is a matter of contract. Neither of these cases supports the broad proposition that there can be no tenancy where no rent is payable.

It was finally contended that the settlement of this land was against the terms of the ticca patti which does not permit the ticcadar to grant lands at a low rate without the consent of the landlord. There appear to me to be two answers to this argument; first, the settlement was made on the landlord's instructions and, secondly, the land was not settled at a low rate. The ticcadar, during the term of his lease, could no doubt forego the right to receive any rent at all, provided he made no contract which would bind the landlord afterwards. In the present case he has not impinged on the landlord's right to demand a fair and equitable rent when the lands are brought, as they now are, under cultivation. For the above reasons

TRIBHOVANDAS VARJIVANDAS v. BALMUKUNDAS KISHOREDAS.

I am of opinion that the appeal of the defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 should be allowed with costs against the plaintiff. The decree of the Subordinate Judge will be set aside in so far as it finds in favour of the plaintiff's right to possession of 38 bighas 17 cottahs 5 dhurs of the land in suit together with proportionate costs, and in lieu thereof a decree will be entered in favour of those defendants dismissing the plaintiff's suit with costs.

BALMUKUNDAS KISHOREDAS

—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Vendor and purchaser—Agreement to re-convey property—Specific performance—Tender.

A suit based on an agreement to re-convey on re-payment of consideration the property, which the defendant had purchased from the plaintiff, is really a suit for specific performance. To such a case the strict law of tender is not applicable, and, therefore, an unconditional tender of consideration is not necessary to support the claim.

First appeal from the decision of the First Class, Subordinate Judge, Ahmedabad, in Suit No. 373 of 1919.

Mr. B. J. Desai. (with him Mr. G. N. Thakor), for the Appellants.

Messrs. G. S. Rao and Ratanlal Ranchhodas, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued to recover by partition the eastern moiety of the plaint village site and agricultural land of the village of Lahna from the defendants on payment to them of the sum of Rs. 9,500, and to have a deed of conveyance relating to the said eastern moiety from the defendants. There is no dispute with regard to certain facts. On the 29th March 1916 Mahant Devpuri Sukhdevpuri, who was the owner of the village, sold 1,110 bighas of the agricultural land on the western side of the village with a moiety of the village site to the defendants for Rs. 20,000 by a sale-deed, Exhibit 44. On the same date Devpuri conveyed to the defendants the remaining portion of the village on the eastern side with the remaining moiety of the village site for Rs. 10,000 by a deed, Exhibit 45. But by this sale-deed it was agreed that the vendor Devpuri was at liberty to purchase that portion back within three years on payment of Rs. 10,000.

On the 7th June 1918 the plaintiff purchased from Devpuri his right to have the property comprised in the sale-deed, Exhibit 45, re-conveyed to him.

On the 24th July 1918, the plaintiff gave notice to the defendants that he had purchased the rights of Devpuri and asked the defendants to hand over to him all the land including the village site, excepting the 1,100 bighas to the west of the said village, on receipt of Rs. 10,000.

Correspondence ensued from which it appears that disputes arose between the parties with regard to what passed by the sale-deed, Exhibit 44, to the defendants, and what remained to be re-conveyed to the plaintiff on payment of Rs. 10,000, and, eventually, before the three years had expired, the plaintiff filed this suit. The only defence to the suit that could possibly avail the defendants was the contention that the plaintiff was not entitled to sue unless he had paid Rs. 10,000, and that an unconditional tender of the money was necessary to support the claim. As the Judge decreed the plaintiff's claim he directed him to pay Rs. 9,800 into Court, Rs. 200 being deducted for the value of trees cut down by the defendant. The plaintiff says that, previous to the institution of the suit, he called upon the defendants to re-convey to him the property comprised in the deed, Exhibit 45. The defendants replied to the plaintiff's notices with notices of a general character, and hence the plaintiff filed this suit. It would have been better if the plaintiff had brought the money into Court. But in a suit of this nature, which is really a suit for specific performance, we do not think that the strict law as to tenders is applicable and considering the negotiations which went on for several months, and the fact that the suit was filed before the three years had expired, and also the fact that the defendants had been in possession of a portion of the village when they undertook to re-convey to the plaintiff, we see no reason why justice should not be done by directing the defendants to re-convey on payment of the consideration money. The decree does not limit any time within which the consideration should be paid. But the plaintiff must tender Rs. 9,800 within a month after the proceedings are returned to the lower Court. This direction should be entered in the decree. Otherwise the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, cl. 15 (1) (a).—Private inquiry held in presence of parties—Private inquiry—Award based on hearsay and conjecture—Award.

An award based on an inquiry made by arbitrators from the neighbours of the parties in the presence of the latter, cannot be said to be based on a private inquiry and must be upheld though it is clearly based on hearsay and conjecture.

Petition, under section 44 of Act VI of 1918, for revision of a decree of the Junior Subordinate Judge, Hissar, dated the 22nd January 1921.

RAMA NATH MISRA v. RAMRANJAN MISRA.

Mr. N. C. Pandit, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Sagar Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The only question in this revision is whether the arbitrators based their award on a private inquiry. Petitioner contends that this is patent on the face of the award, but I do not read the award in this way. I interpret it to mean that the parties produced no evidence, whereupon the arbitrators made inquiry from the neighbours of the parties. There is nothing to indicate that that inquiry was not made in the presence of parties and the award, though no doubt based on hearsay and conjecture, must be upheld.

I dismiss the petition with costs.

OPPOSITE PARTY.

Arbitration—Private award—Absence of one of several arbitrators, if makes award invalid—Waiver—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, para. 20.

Arbitrators must be present during the whole of the proceedings and deliberations but it is open to the parties to waive the absence of one of the several arbitrators. Therefore an award signed by an arbitrator, who was present one day only for a short time and did not hear the evidence or take part in the deliberations of the remaining arbitrators, is not invalid, if the irregularity is waived.

Rule against an order of the Court of the Sub-Judge, Asansol.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Bankim Chandra Mukerjee, for the Petitioner.—The present application arises out of an application under paragraph 20 of Schedule II of the Code of Civil Procedure for filing award made without the intervention of Court. One of the arbitrators after hearing a portion of the evidence disappeared on subsequent days. There were five arbitrators. He was present for one day for sometime only. He signed the award. The First Court refused to file the award on that ground. On appeal it was held that evidence should be taken as to whether I waived objection as to the irregular procedure. The evidence is against me and it has been found that I waived objection as to the irregular procedure. I submit all the arbitrators must be present in all the meetings and also at the final meeting when the deliberations are made. Even if there had been my waiver that would not cure the irregularity. Refers to Amir Begam v. Badr-ud-din (1), Co operative Hindustan Bank Limited v. Bhola Nath Borooah (2), Abu Hamid Zahir Ala v. Golam Sarwar (3). No such point was raised in the lower Court and it had no jurisdiction to raise the point and remand the case for evidence. I could not waive my objection in law.

Dr. D. N. Mitter, (with him Babu Manindranath Banerjee), for the Opposite Party was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.—On the 9th February 1920 an application was made under Schedule II, paragraph 20, of the Code of Civil Procedure to the Munsif at Asansol to file a private award dated 22nd Aswin 1325. The Munsif held that there was no arbitration in the case by all the arbitrators jointly and he refused the application. It appears that there were five arbitrators and that they were to act jointly under the submission. One Rakhal Upadhyaya, the Munsif says, was present one day for a short time, but did not hear the evidence or take part in the deliberations of the arbitrators and the Munsif states that there was no evidence to show that Rakhal Upadhyaya signed the award after actually going through the papers and considering them. Against the Munsif's decision an appeal was preferred to the Subordinate Judge and the Subordinate Judge framed this issue "whether the defendant waived his right to have his case tried by the continuous presence of Rakhal Upadhyaya during the judicial portion of the arbitration case." The Munsif held on this issue that the defendant did not object on the ground of the absence of Rakhal Upadhyaya from the judicial portion of the arbitration proceedings and that from that his waiver of the objection might be inferred. The matter came back to the Subordinate Judge with the Munsif's finding and he decreed the appeal and ordered the award to be filed. This Rule was obtained at the instance of the present applicant but we cannot say that the decision of the Subordinate Judge was wrong having regard to the Munsif's finding, and we do not think that this is a matter in which we ought to interfere. No doubt, the arbitrators must be present during the whole of the deliberation but it is open to the parties to waive the absence of one of them. This is, it appears, what the defendant has done in the present case. But, then, it is said that whatever the defendant has done with regard to Rakhal's absence from the evidence he did not waive his absence from the final deliberation and that, consequently, his waiver does not extend to this. But we think, on the whole, that we must find with the learned Subordinate Judge that the defendant has waived the whole of the irregularity caused by Rakhal Upadhyaya's absence from any part of the proceeding having regard to the form in which the issue was framed and the finding of the Munsif thereon.

This being so, the Rule must be discharged with costs. Hearing-fee two gold mohurs.

MRS. LENA MACDONALD OF DELHI—PLAINTIFF AND

MRS. FLORENCE DAVIS—DEFENDANT—
RESPONDENTS.

Appeal—Party not aggrieved, whether can appeal.

Plaintiff's father deposited a certain sum with a Bank in the joint names of himself and one D. payable to 'either or survivor'. He subsequently made a Will devising his property of every description to the plaintiff and died before the period of the deposit had expired. Plaintiff obtained Probate of the Will and sued the Bank and D. for a declaration that the deposit belonged exclusively to the deceased and that the plaintiff was entitled to receive it on maturity as the executor of the deceased. D. did not appear, but the Bank resisted the suit. The suit was eventually decreed. The Bank appealed impleading D. also as a respondent to the appeal.

Held, that the Bank had no locus standi to prefer the appeal, inasmuch as its position was merely that of a stake-holder and it was not in any way prejudiced by the decree passed in favour of the plaintiff.

: Seshayyar v. Pappuvaradaiyyangar, 6 M. 185; 17 Ind. Jur. 188; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 407, followed.

First appeal from a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Delhi, dated the 27th February 1920.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Appellant.

Lala Rai Narain, R. S., and Kanwar Dalip Singh, for Mrs. Macdonald, Mr. Gordon Nood, for Mrs. Davis, Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Mr. Isaac Jackson, residing in Delhi, made a deposit of Rs. 52,000 with the Allahabad Bank, Limited, Delhi, on the 26th March 1917, in the joint names of himself and Mrs. Florence Davis, "payable to either or survivor." The period of deposit was from 1st January 1917 to 31st December 1919.

On the 11th February 1918 Mr. Jackson made a Will devising the whole of his property of every description to his daughter Mrs. Macdonald. He died on 5th November 1918 and Probate of the Will was granted to Mrs. Macdonald on 21st February 1919.

On the 24th February 1919. Mrs. Macdonald sued Mrs. Davis and the Bank for a declaration that the amount of the deposit, Rs. 52,000, belonged exclusively to Mr. Jackson and that Mrs. Macdonald, his executrix, was entitled to receive it on maturity.

Mrs. Davis did not appear and the suit was heard against her ex parte. The Bank resisted the claim on the grounds that the deposit was not and could not be disposed of by the Will, that the money was gifted to Mrs. Davis, and that she alone was entitled to it either as donee or as co-depositor.

The lower Court granted the plaintiff the declaration sought, the decree being ex parte against Mrs. Davis. The Bank has appealed joining Mrs. Davis as the second respondent and she has appeared and is represented.

Counsel for Mrs. Macdonald has taken the preliminary objection, which we find must be sustained, that the Bank is not entitled to appeal since it is not a party adversely affected by the decree, but is merely in the position of a stake-holder between the rival claimants Mrs. Macdonald and Mrs. Davis. Seshayyar v. Pappuvaradaiyyangar (1), is cited in support of the objection and is in point. The finding there was that one P. had no locus standi to appeal in the following circumstances. S. sued to redeem land mortgaged to N. joining P., the brother of N. as a defendant because he was in possession of the land in suit. P. disclaimed all personal interest, said that he was in possession on behalf of N. and asserted the mortgage to be a forgery. N. did not appear, P. was not authorized to defend the suit on behalf of N. nor did he claim to do so. The plaintiff's suit was decreed and P. appealed in his own name and on his own account.

In the present case the Bank's memorandum of appeal is worded entirely as though the Bank held power of attorney from Mrs. Davis, which is not the case. Not a word is said about any prejudice to the Bank arising out of the decree, Mrs. Davis has not appealed, and there is now a final decree that Mrs. Macdonald is entitled to the money in suit against her. Counsel for the Bank has attempted to argue that the Bank is entitled to resist Mrs. Macdonald after the elimination of Mrs. Davis because the Will could not affect the deposit and because the Bank is entitled to retain the money until some one with a better claim appears. Not only is this contention not mentioned in the memorandum of appeal, but it can have no force in the face of the admitted fact that Mrs. Macdonald is Mr. Jackson's daughter, and would have a good claim to the money even if her father had died intestate.

(1) 6 M. 185; 17 Ind. Jur. 188; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 407.

DARGAHI MIAN V. MANGO KUER.
